This letter of yours makes what was already a mystery still more mysterious. I have asked to be furnished with the written charges that induced you to dismiss me for "misconduct." These requests have been met with refusals. It is true I was accorded what is called "a hearing." But how could I defend myself at this "hearing," or, for that matter, anywhere else, when I was, and still am, studiously kept in utter ignorance of the accusations upon which I have been convicted? The most degraded criminal is given, before conviction, an opportunity to defend himself—is furnished with a succinct and intelligible statement of all the charges against him, and he is permitted to stand face to face with his accusers. Was that privilege accorded me? No. You are familiar with the history of the people of our race; you know how they battled with oppression and tyranny for the right of impartial trial, for the maintenance of which oceans of blood have been spilled. There is nothing more abhorrent to the men of Anglo-Saxon lineage than "star-chamber" trials—trials where the accused is condemned unheard upon inuendo, and where suspicion is considered ample and full justification for those who sit in judgment upon the accused.

You are a man well advanced in years (and in the mercy of God I hope your days will be extended to the uttermost limit), but in all the years through which you have passed you have never witnessed a more wicked deed than my dismissal. I say this calmly, but in saying so I do not intend to reflect upon you; you have been deceived and imposed upon. Time will show that I am right in this; and when the cruelty and the injustice are made manifest, as they surely will be, no one will regret the wrong more than yourself.

You have behind you a long and highly honorable career as a successful merchant, and there is nothing in that career that warrants the belief that you would knowingly be a party to a wrong, even though the victim of that wrong be only a woman and that woman but an humble clerk in the employ of the Pension Bureau. Yet a wrong has been done; hence I insist that you have been imposed upon. Some one who has access to you, some malignant spider in human form, has woven a web of prejudice in your too-willing ear.

Therefore, if you will permit me, I believe we are both victims, you and I; you because your confidence has been trifled with by some master of duplicity to accomplish a wrong, and I because I have been sent into the world without an opportunity to defend myself, with the stamp of infamy upon my brow. An act of injustice, based wholly upon a lie, has two victims, the one against whom the falsehood is aimed, and the other, the coiner and utterer of the lie, and in the end the last is always more injured than the first; the conscience is seared with infamy. I shall bide my time, but I shall in every way that is honorable and legitimate, in every way that it is possible to awaken the moral conscience of man, endeavor to get at the bottom of this affair. I shall never cease until I have stripped from it the cloak of mystery and duplicity that at present hides its hideous carcass.

You say that the vacancy occasioned by my dismissal has been filled. By this you would seem to indicate that this is a sufficient reason why you can not reinstate me. If my dismissal was warranted in the first instance, my reinstatement under any circumstance would not be justified, vacancy or no vacancy. If I have been wronged (as I know I have and others only too well know), I should be vindicated without more ado; and the only way this can be done is to restore me to my former place in your Department.

In all this painful transaction I have been absolutely frank and in every way have sought to meet the issue with courage and truth. Is it too much to ask that those who occupy exalted places in the public service be equally candid and courageous?

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
M. E. ROBERTS.

Hon. CORNELIUS N. BLISS,
Secretary of the Interior.

Then, Mr. President, here is a letter written from Atlantic City:

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., August 4, 1897.

SIR: My heart leaped with joy a few days since when I read the order of President McKinley that hereafter no dismissals are to be made from the classified service except upon charges duly filed with the head of a Department, the accused employee to be notified of the character of the charges in writing, and he or she, as the case may be, be given a full opportunity to make defense.

How unfortunate that this order was not in force when, in May last, I was summarily dismissed from the Pension Bureau for "misconduct." Up to this moment I am in utter ignorance of the charges upon which my dismissal was made, although I learned indirectly that an anonymous letter was in some way instrumental in bringing about my discharge. This order of the President gives me hope that justice will yet be done and that I will be eventually restored to the place from which I was thus most unjustly removed. For the sake of those in the Departments I am greatly rejoiced, for the President has, by this step, prevented a repetition of a similar wrong. As was said by a great New York paper, in speaking of this humane order of President McKinley, "This is a great day for morality, decency, progress, and justice in the history of the United States."

The newspapers credit you with having been largely instrumental in inducing the President to promulgate this order. Let me congratulate you.

My health, though very much impaired, the result of nervous prostration, incident to my cruel and unjust removal, is improving. I am here upon the advice of my Washington physician.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
M. E. ROBERTS.

Hon. C. N. BLISS,
Secretary of the Interior, Washington, D. C.

Here is another letter——

Mr. HOAR. I understood the Senator from Nebraska was to take about five minutes when I waived my objection, and he has occupied about thirty minutes.

Mr. ALLEN. I shall be through in a moment or two, if the Senator will have patience.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to be patient.

Mr. ALLEN. I think the case is worth listening to.

WASHINGTON, November 8, 1897.

SIR: I have remained silent for some time past in the hope that you would take favorable action in my case without any further urging on my part. I have always considered that you were a man of too much honor to permit a wrong to continue when you had the power to do justice. I have not lost faith in you, though it is true my patience is becoming weary of the long wait, and hope deferred maketh the heart sick. Ever since that fateful day in May last, when I was summarily dismissed from the Pension Bureau for "misconduct," I have been an invalid. My nervous system received a shock from which I have never recovered. When I contemplate my present suffering and when I sum up all the agony and pain through which I have passed, I am surprised that I have lived through it all. It would have been better far—it would have been an act of mercy—had my tormenters and persecutors killed me outright than to have brought about my dismissal in the manner in in which it was done.

Under the circumstances, death would have been a merciful act. Ruined in health and robbed of my reputation, I stand before you to-day, the widow of a Union soldier, appealing to your sense of honor that you take an early step toward my vindication. And my vindication will also be the vindication of your Department.

Yours, truly,

M. E. ROBERTS.

Hon. C. N. BLISS.

I have one more letter here, Mr. President, which concludes this singular chapter in public life. It is as follows:

8.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, November 9, 1897.

MADAM: I am in receipt of your letter of the 8th instant, requesting action on your application for reinstatement in the Pension Office. In reply thereto, I have to state that the matter is one coming under the direct control of the Commissioner of Pensions, and I have therefore referred your letter to him, asking him to give it his careful consideration.

Very respectfully,

C. N. BLISS, Secretary.

Mrs. M. E. ROBERTS,
209 New Jersey avenue, Washington, D. C.

The foregoing letter of the Secretary of the Interior of November 9 was so surprising, in view of the previous letters from that quarter, that I was forced to believe that a mistake had been made by some clerk. Hence it was that I returned the letter to the Secretary with the following indorsement:

"Respectfully returned to Mr. Bliss.

"From the fact that my letter has been referred to the Commissioner of Pensions, I am afraid that a mistake has been made by some one in your office, probably by one of your clerks, who has confounded me with some one else.

"I am the Mrs. Roberts who, in May last, without a hearing, and upon charges of which I am still ignorant, was summarily dismissed from the Pension Bureau for 'misconduct.' I appealed to you, because of your reputation as an honorable man and Christian gentleman, to undo the cruel and hasty work of your subordinate, the Commissioner of Pensions. The manner in which he acted in the first instance does not give much assurance that I will receive even scant courtesy from his hands. Therefore, and with your knowledge of these facts, I must insist that my letter was sent to your subordinate without your knowledge. I can not believe that, with the information before you, you could have directed this to be done. However, if Mr. Evans makes any reply at all, I trust that I will be furnished with a copy of his letter to you. Judging, however, from his past conduct, I do not believe he will make such a reply as can or will be shown to the world. Mr. Bliss, in this matter your are being trifled with by some one.

"I speak with some show of feeling, and I have a right to do so, because I have been treated throughout in this miserable affair in the most infamous and outrageous manner, unworthy of men who should from their positions be above the suspicion of quibbling and double dealing.

"Stricken in health and robbed of my reputation, I would rather be the poor stricken creature that I am than to have been a party in any way to the cruel wrong that has been done me. I still have my self-respect.

"M. E. ROBERTS.

"NOVEMBER 10, 1897."

Now, Mr. President, just a word. I said a moment ago that I have never seen this lady. I do not know who she is; I do not care who she is. If she is a citizen of the United States, a human being—I care not what her station in life may be, high or low, rich or poor—that government would be infamous that would not accord her justice when within its power; and that public officer who would take advantage of his position to secrete from her or from any other person a charge involving personal character, not honestly and conscientiously showing them the charge and affording them an opportunity to meet it, would be equally infamous.

I do not think the President of the United States has ever seen this petition; I am satisfied he has not. It has passed into the hands of some clerk and has been whistled down the wind around to the Secretary of the Interior, and through some clerk in his office to some clerk in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions.

Here stands this woman, Mr. President, branded by one of the great Departments of this Government, a secret charge filed against her, which she has petitioned and prayed may be shown her, asking only the opportunity to vindicate her character—nothing more. Have we reached that period when Congress will say she shall not have a copy of the charges preferred against her?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, this is not a new thing to me. I read it all in print a good many weeks ago, and hence the novelty of it passed from my mind. Here is a woman who was dismissed, presumably for cause, nine months ago, from the Pension Bureau. First she appealed to the Secretary of the Interior, and entered into voluminous correspondence with that high official.

Then she made an appeal by letter to the President of the United States, and before she receives an answer she rushes into print to circulate her grievances in the District of Columbia, and possibly beyond the confines of this District. The presumption is that the President of the United States referred the communication to the Secretary of the Interior, and that officer in turn to the Commissioner of Pensions, and that it is now lodged in the hands of the proper official to give it consideration.

Why, Mr. President, during the last Administration there were thousands of men and women dismissed from office with or without cause; and if this woman has a right to come to Congress and demand that we shall give our time to consider her case, and to call for the correspondence in her case, every man and woman dismissed under the late Administration has an equal right to do so, and we would be giving the most of our time to investigating the controversies between Cabinet officers and their subordinates. I respectfully submit to the Senator from Nebraska that if the Senate engages in that kind of work, the Senate will have very little time to give to the Senator's other resolutions which he so frequently offers and to which we give consideration.

Men and women from my own State, Mr. President, have been dismissed from time to time, presumably for some good reason. No charges were filed against them; they were simply turned out of office, and that ended it. As I believe, the Cabinet officers had a right to turn them out of office if they thought their services could be dispensed with to the benefit of the public service, and I take it that it was upon that ground such dismissals were made.

I always like to do any courtesy to the Senator from Nebraska that I properly can do, but I submit that for the Senate to pass this resolution would be setting a precedent that we can not afford to set and that would be a veritable Pandora's box to the Senate. If we undertake to settle controversies between Cabinet officers and clerks in their several Departments it can readily be seen that we will do little else.

I intimated a moment ago that I would ask that the resolution go over, which I now do; and I will suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that on to-morrow, when the resolution comes up under the rules, I shall move to refer it to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, so that that committee may make some inquiry in regard to this matter.

Mr. SEWELL. I was about to suggest that reference and that we dispose of the subject now.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will not take snap judgment on me. I want to submit some remarks.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall make that motion to-morrow, I say. I will only add that this woman, in my opinion, is her own worst enemy. She is manifestly a ready letter writer, and the language she uses in her last letter to the Secretary of the Interior is not to her credit. She is advertising to the world charges which she has no proof have ever been made against her. She says that she has heard from some source that charges were made against her moral character. That is what almost every woman suggests to me who is dismissed from the public service. She does not claim that she learned this officially, but only that somebody had suggested to her that her moral character was called in question. This woman, I think, has had notoriety enough, and it is proper that a committee in the privacy of the committee room shall consider this resolution and report to the Senate, but I do not think we should do it in the unusual way of calling upon the Secretary of the Interior to defend himself before the Senate in the matter of having discharged a clerk from his Department.

Let the resolution go over, Mr. President.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from New Hampshire is a most skillful advocate——

Mr. HOAR. I understood the Senator from New Hampshire to insist that the resolution should go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the further consideration of the resolution, and it goes over.

Mr. ALLEN. Do I understand the Senator from Massachusetts desires to cut me off from making any remarks on this subject?

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] made the point of order.

Mr. ALLEN. Very well; if that is to be the law, I shall retaliate at the proper time.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, though I had matter of my own that I wanted to have come up in the morning hour to-day, I waived the rule, which has been invoked by three or four Senators, on the assurance of the Senator from Nebraska that he would take but five minutes, and he has taken a half hour. He was informed when he began that the Senator from New Hampshire was going to make the point of order when the Senator from Nebraska got through, and now at the end of a half hour the Senator from New Hampshire has made the point of order.

Mr. ALLEN. I did not suppose the Senator from New Hampshire would undertake to smother an investigation of this kind. I did not take him to be that kind of a man.

Mr. HOAR. I do not think such threats are in good taste. I think everybody has treated the Senator from Nebraska with courtesy. I have no desire to cut him off; but I think this question ought to be debated when it is to be voted upon. The Senator from New Hampshire insists that it shall go over. I have not made the point. I merely called attention of the Chair to the fact that it had been made; and if the resolution is to go over, it seems to me that debate upon it should take place when it is to be voted on, and not days before. That is all. I beg the Senator to be assured that I have no desire to interfere with him or his desires; but certainly the 88 other Senators here have some rights.

Mr. ALLEN. The resolution goes over, as I understand, then, under the objection, and comes up to-morrow morning as unfinished business?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution goes over until to-morrow.

CAPT. ISAAC D. TOLL AND HENRY WILSON.

Mr. BURROWS. Some time ago I submitted a motion to reconsider the votes by which the Senate passed the bill (S. 959) to increase the pension of Capt. Isaac D. Toll and the bill (S. 1453) granting an increase of pension to Henry Wilson. I desire to ask unanimous consent of the Senate that I may withdraw the motion as to both bills.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the withdrawal of the motion to reconsider the votes by which the bills referred to were passed? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MUSCOGEE COAL AND RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Yesterday I submitted a motion that the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 2858) authorizing the Muscogee Coal and Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory and Oklahoma Territory, and for other purposes, and entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed. I now withdraw the motion.

Mr. GALLINGER. The bill has been returned from the House of Representatives.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. My understanding was that the bill had not been returned by the House of Representatives; but as the bill has been returned, I now ask leave to withdraw the motion to reconsider, so that the bill may be sent back to the other House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made, in the absence of objection.

SUPPRESSION OF HOG CHOLERA.

Mr. GEAR. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed to the agricultural appropriation bill, which I ask to have read at length and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The proposed amendment was read, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, as follows:

That the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be appropriated to aid in the suppression of hog cholera, the same to be expended under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

ANNEXATION OF HAWAII.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no further concurrent or other resolutions, the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from yesterday, which was submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. VEST. Is the morning business closed?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Morning business is still in order. There are two resolutions on the table coming over from yesterday, one submitted by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] and one by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the concurrent resolution reported by me on the 18th instant from the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BACON. I trust the Senator will allow us to finish the morning business.

Mr. VEST. If there is any morning business, I yield; but at the conclusion of the morning business I give notice that I shall make the motion.

Mr. HOAR. I understand there is no further objection to the resolution which I submitted yesterday, and I ask that it now be laid before the Senate.

Mr. BACON. I offer an amendment which I intend to propose to the bill (S. 2263) to provide for and to regulate the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands as a Territory of the United States; which I ask may be read in full and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow the morning business to be completed?

Mr. BACON. This is morning business. I beg pardon if I am wrong. I understand it to be such.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it further enacted, That this act shall not be operative and of binding effect upon either the United States of America or the Republic of Hawaii until the same shall have been consented to and approved by the majority of the voters voting at an election to be held in the Hawaiian Islands, at which election all male natives of said islands of the age of 21 years, and all naturalized male persons in said island of the age of 21 years, shall be duly qualified voters. The said election shall be held at a time and in the manner and under regulations to be prescribed by the President of the United States.

Mr. BACON. In order to prevent misunderstanding, I will state that the amendment is intended to be proposed to the bill introduced by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] providing for the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands as a Territory of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

POSTAL FREE-DELIVERY SYSTEM.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution offered yesterday by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], which will be read.

The resolution was read and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be instructed forthwith to inform the Senate what sum of money, to be immediately available, is necessary to preserve the efficiency and usefulness of the postal free-delivery system.

TRANSPORTATION METHODS OF RAILROAD COMPANIES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution offered yesterday by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], which will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce be directed to investigate while pursuing its inquiry under the resolution of the Senate of January 11, 1898, the question whether railroad-ticket brokers have obtained and sold free passes issued by any railroad company; and further, whether any railroad companies have habitually violated section 22 of the interstate-commerce act, prohibiting free transportation except in certain specified cases; and also whether or not unlawful discriminations have been practiced by any railroad companies by receiving payment for transportation otherwise than in money; especially whether a system exists under which contracts are made with the proprietors or editors of newspapers and periodicals under which special tickets or passes are issued and paid for by advertising or other newspaper paragraphs, and whether similar special contracts are made with lawyers under which tickets or free passes are issued to them as retainers, which are not to be followed by any actual legal service; and that said committee be directed to consider whether or not penalties should be enacted by Congress to punish violations of said section 22 committed by railroad officials who give free transportation unlawfully, as well as all persons who receive such illegal free transportation, and to report by bill or otherwise.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think when the resolution was presented yesterday the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce offered some objections to it. I do not remember precisely what was said. I see he is not present.

Mr. ALLISON. He asked that it be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator from Connecticut will permit me, I was just about to state that I have had a conference with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], chairman of the committee, and we have agreed upon the form in which the resolution shall pass.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Is this the form?

Mr. TILLMAN. I was about to propose the amendment when the Senator from Connecticut cut me off.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Certainly, if there has been an agreement on the subject, I do not wish to interfere.

Mr. TILLMAN. I move to strike out the word "directed" and insert "empowered." I have had assurances from the chairman of the committee that a majority of the committee will not undertake to suppress our arriving at the fullest and freest exposure of facts in connection with this matter if it is pressed by myself and those who agree with me as to the importance of it, and he agreed to offer no objection to the resolution if I would merely change it so as not to make it mandatory on the committee to investigate.

Mr. GEAR. I move to amend the resolution by inserting after the word "empowered" the words "in its discretion."

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to the fact that the word "empowered" of course leaves it within the discretion of the committee. His language is surplusage.

Mr. GEAR. With that explanation, I will withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 2 it is proposed to strike out the word "directed" and insert "empowered;" so as to read:

That the Committee on Interstate Commerce be empowered, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

PAYMENT OF GOVERNMENT BONDS.

Mr. LODGE. If morning business is concluded, I desire to make a motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is concluded.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. VEST. I hope the motion will be voted down. I gave notice that I would move this morning to take up the concurrent resolution reported from the Committee on Finance. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of concurrent resolution No. 22, declaring that all bonds of the United States, issued or authorized to be issued under certain acts of Congress, are payable, principal and interest, at the option of the Government in silver dollars, etc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests to the Senator from Missouri that the motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business has precedence under the rules.

Mr. VEST. Then I shall ask for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion made by the Senator from Massachusetts that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, on which the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. We could not hear the Senator from Missouri. Did he call attention to the notice he has heretofore given that he would call up the Matthews resolution this morning?

Mr. VEST. I did. I gave the notice twice, and this motion antagonizes that motion.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Thank you.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll; and Mr. ALDRICH answered to his name.

Mr. HOAR. As to what hour did the Senator from Missouri give the notice?

Mr. VEST. After the morning business.

Mr. HOAR. At 2 o'clock?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Debate is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the calling of the roll.

The Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. BURROWS (when his name was called). I have a standing pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY], but I understand we would possibly vote alike upon this question, and I have agreed, if agreeable to him, to pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] on any vote as to the concurrent resolution. He was called away for the day.

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], who is absent from the Chamber. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. KENNEY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. He not being present, I withhold my vote. Were he here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BERRY (when Mr. PASCO'S name was called). The Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] is paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON]. If the Senator from Florida were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT of New York (when his name was called). I have a general pair with my colleague, the senior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. ALLEN (when Mr. TURNER'S name was called). The junior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] stands paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. If the Senator from Washington were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. BATE (when Mr. TURLEY'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. TURLEY], who is not here, is paired with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. DEBOE].

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I desire to ask whether a pair has been announced with the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands a pair has been announced.

Mr. WARREN. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM (after having voted in the affirmative). When my name was called I voted. I thought at the time that the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] was present. I withdraw my vote, being paired with that Senator. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BUTLER. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON], who is not present. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. ELKINS (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MCLAURIN], and therefore withdraw my vote. I am told that if he were here he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

Mr. CAFFERY (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired on this subject with the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER]. He is not present, and I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. MANTLE. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. CARTER] is unavoidably absent to-day. He left a note stating that he desired to be paired in favor of the resolution and also in favor of its consideration.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. My colleague [Mr. HAWLEY], who is absent, requested me to obtain a pair for him. I understand he has been paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will say to the Senator from Connecticut that I have transferred my pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

Mr. MCENERY (after having voted in the negative). I understand that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], with whom I am paired, stated that he would vote "nay" if he were here. I will therefore allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 39; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Lodge,	Pritchard,
Allison,	Gallinger,	McBride,	Proctor,

So the Senate refused to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of concurrent resolution No. 23, reported from the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Missouri, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the concurrent resolution reported from the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURROWS (when his name was called). I am paired on this vote with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I make the same announcement that I did before, that I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON], but transfer my pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CAFFERY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] and its transfer to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

Mr. KENNEY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I desire to transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER], who, I am informed, if present, would vote "yea." I vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL (when Mr. PASCO'S name was called). The Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] is paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON]. The Senator from Florida would vote "yea," if present.

Mr. PLATT of New York (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY]. I assume that if he were here he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ELKINS. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MCLAURIN].

Mr. MCMILLAN (after having voted in the negative). I desire to inquire whether the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Senator from Kentucky has not voted.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Then I withdraw my vote, being paired with that Senator.

Mr. DEBOE (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TURLEY], and therefore withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 41, nays 25; as follows:

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let the concurrent resolution be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The concurrent resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Whereas by the act entitled "An act to strengthen the public credit," approved March 18, 1869, it was provided and declared that the faith of the United States was thereby solemnly pledged to the payment, in coin or its equivalent, of all the interest-bearing obligations of the United States, except in cases where the law authorizing the issue of such obligations had expressly provided that the same might be paid in lawful money or other currency than gold and silver; and

Whereas all the bonds of the United States authorized to be issued by the act entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," approved July 14, 1870, by the terms of said act were declared to be redeemable in coin of the then present standard value, bearing interest payable semiannually in such coin; and

Whereas all bonds of the United States authorized to be issued under the act enticled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," approved January 14, 1875, are required to be of the description of bonds of the United States described in the said act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt;" and

Whereas at the date of the passage of said act of Congress last aforesaid, to wit, the 14th day of July, 1870, the coin of the United States of standard value of that date included silver dollars of the weight of 412½ grains each, declared by the act approved January 18, 1837, entitled "An act supplementary to the act entitled 'An act establishing a mint and regulating the coins of the United States,'" to be a legal tender of payment, according to their nominal value, for any sums whatever: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That all the bonds of the United States issued, or authorized to be issued, under the said acts of Congress hereinbefore recited, are payable, principal and interest, at the option of the Government of the United States, in silver dollars of the coinage of the United States containing 412½ grains each of standard silver; and that to restore to its coinage such silver coins as a legal tender in payment of said bonds, principal and interest, is not in violation of the public faith nor in derogation of the rights of the public creditor.

Mr. VEST. It is not my purpose, Mr. President, to discuss these resolutions at any considerable length. The questions involved in them have been before the American people for many years, and certainly every public man is acquainted with them and has formed and crystallized his opinion upon them.

The pending resolutions are identical with what is known as the Stanley Matthews resolution adopted by both Houses of Congress in 1878. As a matter of course, the first objection that will be made by the opponents of the resolutions will be that, being already upon the statute books of the United States, it is simply an unnecessary reiteration to repeat them.

Twenty years, the fifth of a century, have elapsed since the adoption of these resolutions. A new generation has come into existence and entered upon the active duties of life. Thousands of young men have not had their attention called to the resolutions, and they are seldom referred to in the debates that have been rife upon the money question in the last few years.

We are told that conditions have changed, and that whereas in January, 1878, but an inconsiderable number of standard silver dollars had been coined at the mints, an enormous amount of those dollars has since been coined and are now in circulation, either as silver dollars or silver certificates. So much the more reason is there for reiterating the declaration contained in the resolutions, if they were originally correct and proper. They affirm that it is not repudiation and not dishonor to pay the bonds of the United States, specified in the resolutions, in standard silver dollars of 412½ grains each. If there were but one thousand of those dollars, and that principle was correct and sound and did not involve repudiation or dishonor, the same declaration is true to-day, no matter what amount of those dollars may be now in existence.

But, more than that, Mr. President (and it would be disingenuous in me to evade this statement), the Administration has thrust this issue upon us, and we are compelled now to remain silent, and by our silence give assent to the declarations of the Secretary of the Treasury, indorsed by the President of the United States, or else to reaffirm the resolutions and openly and manfully take issue with those declarations, as was taken in 1878 by our predecessors in this Chamber.

Sir, with great respect to those who differ with me, I can not conceive how it is either logically or reasonably asserted that the President of the United States is not entirely responsible for the declaration of the Secretary of the Treasury recently made before a committee of the House and in the public press. If there be any doubt in regard to the position of the President upon this question, I ask the Secretary to read the marked sentences from his message of July 24, 1897.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Nothing was settled more clearly at the late national election than the determination upon the part of the people to keep their currency stable in value and equal to that of the most advanced nations of the world.

The soundness of our currency is nowhere questioned. No loss can occur to its holders. It is the system which should be simplified and strengthened, keeping our money just as good as it is now, with less expense to the Government and the people.

Mr. VEST. The clear and distinct meaning of that declaration can not be misunderstood by anyone. It is a plain and emphatic declaration when stripped of the unnecessary verbiage in which it is couched. It says to the people of the United States, emphatically and distinctly, although on the first reading it may sound indirect, that the policy of this Administration to-day is directly opposite to the vote given upon the Stanley Matthews resolution by the President of the United States when a member of the House of Representatives at the time when the vote upon that resolution was taken in that body. The Stanley Matthews resolution, of which this is an exact copy, was passed through the Senate of the United States by a vote of more than 2 to 1, and then went to the House of Representatives and was there passed by an enormous majority, the present President of the United States, then a member of the House, voting in its favor.

What can be the plain and distinct meaning of this declaration by the President in his message to Congress, an extract from which has been read? There can be not the slightest misconception in regard to the meaning of this instrument.

Mr. President, it is not my purpose to discuss elaborately all the issues involved in this question as it is presented now before the Senate. There are many phases of it, and it would consume far more time than I would choose to take at this particular juncture. It is enough for me to say that the resolutions, passed by large majorities in both Houses of Congress when offered by Stanley Matthews, afterwards a justice of the Supreme Court, are rendered necessary of emphatic declaration again by the issue now pressed upon us by the Secretary of the Treasury, with the plain and emphatic indorsement of the President of the United States.

I do not care to go into the history of the entire silver and gold debate in detail. The discussion has become almost threadbare throughout the country, and there are but a few distinctive and emphatic phases of it which are worthy of attention at this time.

Mr. President, whatever may be our opinions in regard to this question, the importance of it can not be minimized or overlooked. We have arrived now at a crucial point in the discussion. We have come where many men of prescience knew years ago that this question must come. There are but two paths before us, the one the single gold standard, which is sought to be pressed upon us by this Administration, because, as a matter of course, in all fairness and justice, the President of the United States is responsible for the course of his Secretary of the Treasury, and I undertake to say indorses it. We must take that recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury and remain upon the single gold standard, or we must make the last and overwhelming contest in favor of true bimetallism and the use of both gold and silver as ultimate money of redemption.

There are phases of this question the discussion of which would consume far more time than I would ask the Senate to give to it. I shall notice but one or two salient points and leave to my colleagues upon both sides of the Chamber and both sides of this question its full and elaborate discussion.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. May I make an inquiry of the Senator from Missouri?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It is almost 2 o'clock now. I desire to ask the Senator whether he desires to press this question to a vote to-day? I judge that it is a subject which will elicit more or less debate. I do not suppose that Senators on either side are prepared to any great extent to go on with the debate to-day. I should like to inquire whether the Senator desires to press a vote to-day or not?

Mr. VEST. It was my purpose, Mr. President, if I could obtain the assent of a majority of the Senate, to proceed with the consideration of the question and to dispose of it. I assumed that that would be the course that would be pursued after the votes that have been taken this morning.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator mean that he expects to have a final vote upon the resolution to-day?

Mr. VEST. I expect to have a final vote whenever under the rules of the Senate it can be reached, when it is the will of the majority.

It is not my purpose, Mr. President, at this time to enter into an elaborate debate, and I am entirely willing now to yield the floor to anyone who desires to present the other side of the question. What I have said has simply been in a preliminary way, in order to bring the matter distinctly before the Senate and to have a final vote upon it. If any Senator desires to take the floor upon the opposite side of the question, I have not the slightest objection to yielding and letting him do so now. I have but very little to say in regard to this subject at the present time. I would prefer to hear from those who propose to attack the resolutions, and I will yield the floor to anyone upon the other side who desires to discuss them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 94) to provide for the Twelfth and subsequent censuses.

Mr. VEST. I move that this order of business be laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution or the subject-matter which was before us.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri ask unanimous consent?

Mr. VEST. I make the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion submitted by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The motion is not debatable and I do not propose to debate it; but I should like to state that there are Senators who desire to be heard upon the resolution and to give reasons why, in their opinion, it ought not to be passed. I hardly supposed that it would be the desire or the intention of the Senator who called the resolution up to press it to a vote to-day. I know that the Senator from Missouri is always ready to debate this question. Some of us upon this side can not do it so well without some little time for preparation. I suggest to the Senator that perhaps he might let the resolution go over until another day; but if he makes the motion, of course we will proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion submitted by the Senator from Missouri.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the concurrent resolution.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Missouri has finished his speech in favor of the resolution, I would suggest that he now let it go over until to-morrow, in order that the gentlemen who are on the other side of the question may have an opportunity to look the matter over. In the meantime we can discuss some other question, I take it.

I assume that the practical result of the passage of the resolution will not be of such a character that there is any immediate necessity for its passage. It is not expected by the resolution to change the law or to change the policy of the Government under the law. It is simply a declaration of a particular kind, revivifying a resolution that was buried twenty years ago. I am sure there can be no such immediate haste in regard to the matter that gentlemen upon this side shall not have an opportunity to prepare themselves for a discussion of the resolution.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I have not the slightest objection, so far as I am concerned, to the resolution going over, provided it can be taken up as unfinished business.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Missouri that by the vote just taken the resolution became the unfinished business, displacing the former unfinished business.

Mr. VEST. I understand that to be the effect of that vote. I have no disposition to press the debate, nor have I any disposition to continue my remarks at this time. I will yield to a motion for an executive session with the understanding, as a matter of course, that under the rules of the Senate the resolution will come up as the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three hours and fifty-two minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 21, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 20, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOMESTEAD AND RIGHT OF WAY LAWS IN ALASKA.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 5975. The bill was read in full yesterday, objection was made, and a request was made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON] that the bill lie over a day. I will ask the gentleman from Kansas if it will be necessary to read the bill in full?

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I think not.

Mr. LACEY. Then I ask that the bill be read by title, and then ask unanimous consent for its consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5975) extending the homestead laws and providing for right of way for railroads in the District of Alaska.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Before unanimous consent is given for the consideration of the bill, I would like to ask the gentleman how long it would take to consider it? If it takes any length of time, it may interfere very materially with the debate and with the time which has been allotted to various members.

Mr. LACEY. I should think it would not take more than fifteen or twenty minutes.

Mr. DINSMORE. But suppose it takes an hour on each side?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes; suppose it should take an hour on each side?

Mr. LACEY. Very well; I will agree, with the consent of the House, that it shall go over if it is not disposed of in thirty minutes, and come up for consideration to-morrow.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Say twenty minutes.

Mr. LACEY. Very well.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill the title of which has been read, with the understanding that if in twenty minutes no disposition has been made of it the bill shall go over until to-morrow morning. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BAILEY. I would say to the gentleman from Iowa it is understood, of course, that this does not abridge the privilege of amendments.

Mr. LACEY. No, sir; that is the understanding.

The SPEAKER. It is simply before the House for consideration; that is all.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, the committee are desirous to have the bill perfected. Some suggestion has been made as to additional amendments, particularly amendments affecting the amount of land to be used for stations. The committee put the size of the stations in the bill as suggested, not absolutely feeling that the amount of land described in the bill is the amount that ought to be inserted, and we will have no objection whatever to amendments on that subject, or upon any other where it is deemed that the bill may be improved.

Mr. CLARDY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask what amount of land is allowed in this bill for stations?

Mr. LACEY. A one-quarter section at each station. That would give a quarter of a mile in every direction from the depot.

Mr. CLARDY. Will the gentleman please state why a quarter of a section is allowed?

Mr. LACEY. It will require a small town in each locality, and the town will be built entirely, of course, by the construction of the railway. If it is going through land that will be settled, land suitable for agriculture, a small tract would be all that would be needed, because the necessities of the country would cause the growth of the town, and under the town-site laws towns would be built up. But under the laws in Alaska there is no law now that authorizes the acquisition of titles except under the town-site law. There is no reason why the railway should build the road and private individuals should have town sites created by the road itself. Of course, a limitation to a smaller area can be easily avoided by the railroad company locating the stations at certain points, and then the individuals could proceed under the town-site law and organize the towns. The land is practically worthless.

Mr. CLARDY. That would give the railroad corporation the control of this land and the right to sell it?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. CLARDY. Then I for one am opposed to that.

Mr. LACEY. I will say that under the existing law in States and Territories the limit is placed at 20 acres.

Mr. CLARDY. I would limit it to 1 acre. I would change the law governing these Territories.

Mr. LACEY. Well, the railroad corporation must have switches and turntables, even in Alaska, where the land is not worth a cent an acre.

Mr. CLARDY. I do not care if it is not worth a cent an acre now, it will be worth more some time, and if it is not, I am opposed to giving corporations land that belongs to the people of this country.

Mr. HUNTER. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. HUNTER. Would not that amount of land involve the railroad company and the individuals who build the towns in controversy about the location? Now, 160 acres is a half a mile square.

Mr. LACEY. Certainly it is.

Mr. HUNTER. That would practically deny occupation to any outsiders. They would have to build outside of those limits.

Mr. LACEY. It would be a very small town that was inside of a quarter of a mile from the depot.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to the bill.

Mr. LACEY. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON] wants to offer an amendment as to the size of town sites, limiting it to what amount?

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. To 20 acres.

Mr. LACEY. I yield for the purpose of allowing him to offer that amendment.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I move to amend by striking out, in line 15, page 2, "160 acres" and inserting "20 acres."

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, let that amendment be considered as pending with the committee amendments. Now, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JONES] desires to offer an amendment in regard to the question of water front, and I yield to him for the purpose of offering that amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is it an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is an amendment to the second section of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will not be in order unless it is an amendment to the amendment presented by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON].

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understood the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] to yield for the purpose of these amendments being offered.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I want to include in my amendment just offered the further motion to strike out, in line 18, page 2, the words "three hundred," after the word "include," and that will make it all right.

Mr. LACEY. Very well.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] if there is anything in the laws of Alaska to prevent a private individual filing his claim, if the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas prevails, and getting 140 acres?

Mr. LACEY. That could only be done through the town-site law. The town-site acts have been extended to the District of Alaska.

Mr. SWANSON. It seems to me that if a private individual should go there and file his claim and get 140 acres where they have the depots, it would be worse than it would if the railroad owned it, for the individual would not sell it, and it would thereby prevent the settlement upon that portion.

Mr. LACEY. Yes; but it would prevent the railroad from making anything out of it, and that seems to be the idea. I do not think that the building of the railroad could be embarrassed by that event, if private individuals attempted to put themselves in the way of contemplated construction.

Now, unless some gentleman wishes time, I will call for a vote on the amendment and on the passage of the bill. The bill was read yesterday and went over until this morning. It is in the RECORD.

Mr. BELL. I wish to offer some amendments. In the first place, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. LACEY. What is the nature of it?

Mr. BELL. That there shall be no donation of land beyond the right of way provided for.

Mr. LACEY. That is, that the railroad shall not have any depot grounds.

Mr. BELL. Not unless it buys them.

Mr. LACEY. There is no way that a railroad company can buy depot grounds.

Mr. BELL. They can buy them the same as any individual.

Mr. LACEY. But nobody else can do so. In this respect the company would be in the same situation as an individual. So, under the gentleman's amendment, we should have a railroad without any depots.

Mr. BELL. We have had some experience in this matter throughout the West, and 100 feet on either side of the railroad track is about all that is ever used in these new countries for a long while. In the second place, I want to object to the right of way being 100 feet on each side of the track. Instead of 100 feet, I wish to offer an amendment making it 50 feet. And on these amendments I want a little time.

Mr. LACEY. In reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL], I should like to say that in Alaska 200 feet is a very narrow right of way, where snow is so heavy and it becomes necessary to build fences to protect the track from snow. The right of way act of 1875, now applicable in the gentleman's own State, and which has been found inadequate in some of the mountain regions where there is a good deal of snow, gives a right of way of 200 feet; and there is no reason why an equal area should not be given in Alaska, where the necessity for it would be even greater than in the other States or Territories.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. Unless there are exceptional conditions, it seems to me that a right of way of 100 feet will be enough. If, as the gentleman says, a wider right of way is required in the mountainous country, that is one thing; but does not this railroad run over level ground for a great many hundred miles?

Mr. LACEY. The whole situation is exceptional, and it would seem that in this case we should give more right of way instead of less than that heretofore granted in the Territories. The right of way act of 1875, which has now been in force for twenty-three years, gives a right of way of 200 feet, 100 feet on each side. This bill, the original proposition of which was a right of way of 500 feet, but which has been cut down by the committee to 200 feet—precisely the same as the right of way allowed by the act of 1875—does not propose anything excessive, especially as it applies to a country where the land is not surveyed and not likely to be surveyed for years and the adjoining property not likely to be occupied. In fact, it may be that some amendment ought to be inserted giving a wider range in certain places. In many locations a snow fence may have to be built 300 feet or even 400 feet from the track.

Mr. HOPKINS. What is the length of the right of way proposed to be given?

Mr. LACEY. We do not propose to give any right of way in any particular case, but simply to extend the general right of way act, now in operation, to all railroads in Alaska. There is no grant to any particular individual or company. This is open to the whole world. Anybody who wants to build a railroad can build it if this bill passes, just as can now be done in Colorado.

Mr. HOPKINS. Is it not a fact that under this bill a road might be 1,000 miles long?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly, and 200 feet wide.

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, my point is that for 800 miles of the 1,000 a right of way of 100 feet might be just as good as 200 feet.

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. And it seems to me that in granting away these privileges these conditions ought to be looked into.

Mr. LACEY. If 100 feet should be sufficient, the company would not be compelled to take the other 100 feet; we do not propose to force that upon them.

Mr. HOPKINS. Where there is a section of country requiring a right of way of 200 feet, I would be willing to grant it; but not for 800 miles where 100 feet would answer the purposes of the company just as well as 200 feet.

Mr. LACEY. There are undoubtedly places where 50 feet would be sufficient; and there are places where even 25 feet would be wide enough.

Mr. HOPKINS. No; I do not agree that in any case the right of way ought to be less than 50 feet. One hundred feet is the usual width; 200 feet is exceptional.

Mr. LACEY. This bill provides for a right of way not exceeding 200 feet, to be granted by the Secretary of the Interior upon proper surveys; so that there need not be any trouble about it. Land is abundant in that region; and we ought to give a railroad company at least enough land to build the railroad on if they are willing to build it.

Mr. BELL. Now will the gentleman allow me a little time on my amendment?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington rose.

Mr. LACEY. How much time does my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEWIS], desire?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, there are several gentlemen on this side of the House who desire to occupy the time for a few minutes on this question. I think perhaps an hour's debate would be sufficient.

Mr. LACEY. But we have only twenty minutes altogether under the agreement; and about fifteen minutes of that time have already been consumed.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I think gentlemen ought to be given an opportunity to express themselves on a matter of so much importance as this. What time would the gentleman from Iowa suggest?

Mr. LACEY. I suggested, in the beginning, that I thought this could be disposed of within twenty or thirty minutes. Questions have been asked respecting the right of way and other matters in connection with it, and it seems to me that we ought to be able to get through with it now. If we can not dispose of it this morning, under the agreement that we have made with reference to the debate on the appropriation bill, of course it must go over, because we do not wish to encroach unduly upon the consideration of that bill.

Mr. KLEBERG. I would suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that he allow it to go over until to-morrow. There are some questions that ought to be considered in connection with it, and some of us desire to be heard.

Mr. LACEY. Very well, Mr. Speaker; if we can not dispose of the matter now, I will agree that it shall go over until to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The suggestion is that it go over; and without objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House, Mr. HEPBURN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill No. 6449, the time from now until 4 o'clock this afternoon being, by consent, devoted to general debate upon the bill.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Chairman, I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, surely the time for dilly-dallying and shilly-shallying on the Cuban question is past. There never was any sense in mincing words about it.

The hour for honest, courageous, unequivocal speech and action is at hand.

OUR DUTY.

This Republic ought to grant belligerent rights to the Cuban patriots. She should recognize the independence of Cuba.

If Spain does not bring the war to a speedy conclusion, the United States ought to expel her from the Western Hemisphere.

These things ought to be done in the cause of humanity. They ought to be done as the beginning of a sound and permanent business policy.

They ought to be done as evidence of our settled determination to be supreme in the affairs of our half of the world.

Man does not live for himself alone. Neither does a nation.

Certainly we owe something to those struggling bravely for freedom at our very doors. They lighted their torch of liberty at our fire. They are only following our example. In a very large measure we are responsible for their conduct.

We were the first rebels or revolutionists in this hemisphere; for let it never be forgotten that the only distinction between a rebel and a revolutionist is that the latter succeeds, while the former fails. It is not a difference of principle, but of results—that is all. [Applause.]

There can be no doubt as to what has been our traditional foreign policy. What our foreign policy is under the McKinley Administration, like the peace of God, passeth all understanding. [Laughter.] There ought to be no question as to our foreign policy in the future. Tersely and bluntly stated, it is this—and it ought to be enforced with iron hand—that we intend, at all hazards and at whatever cost, to thoroughly dominate the western world. [Applause.]

THE MONROE DOCTRINE.

The germ of the Monroe doctrine is found in Thomas Jefferson's letter to President Monroe, bearing date of October 24, 1823, in these words:

> The question presented by the letters you have sent me is the most momentous which has ever been offered to my contemplation since that of independence. That made us a nation; this sets our compass and points the course which we are to steer through the ocean of time opening on us. And never could we embark on it under circumstances more auspicious. Our first and fundamental maxim should be never to entangle ourselves in the broils of Europe. Our second, never to suffer Europe to intermeddle with cis-Atlantic affairs. America, North and South, has a set of interests distinct from those of Europe and peculiarly her own. She should therefore have a system of her own, separate and apart from that of Europe. While the last is laboring to become the domicile of despotism, our endeavor should surely be to make our hemisphere that of freedom.

Monroe elaborated the idea as follows:

> With the movements in this hemisphere we are of necessity more immediately connected, and by causes which must be obvious to all enlightened and impartial observers. The political system of the allied powers is essentially different in this respect from that of America. This difference proceeds from that which exists in their respective governments; and to the defense of our own, which has been achieved by the loss of so much blood and treasure and matured by the wisdom of our most enlightened citizens, and under which we have enjoyed unexampled felicity, this whole nation is devoted. We owe it, therefore, to candor and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those powers to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power we have not interfered and shall not interfere. But with the governments who have declared their independence and maintained it, and whose independence we have, on great consideration and on just principles, acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them or controlling in any other manner their destiny by any European power in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States.

That is the celebrated Monroe doctrine, as originated by Thomas Jefferson and formulated by James Monroe in his message of December, 1823. When he penned that fateful paragraph Monroe little dreamed that he was laying hold of earthly immortality, but such is the truth of history. We are very much disposed to underrate Monroe, but to our Spanish-American neighbors he is, next to Washington, the great American. We neglect him, but they delight to build monuments to his memory. [Applause.]

His utterance became part of our creed political. We have forced it into the code of international law. Other nations affect to sneer at it theoretically, but they never fail to give heed to it when we assert it in particular cases.

A note from William H. Seward to Louis Napoleon caused that ambitious jingo to withdraw his victorious legions from Mexico when he was in the plenitude of his imperial power and when his arms glittered from China to Peru. [Applause.]

That was the splendid, courageous, and magnanimous manner in which Republicans enforced the Monroe doctrine when their party was in its best estate, when Abraham Lincoln was at its head, and before sordid greed had come to completely dominate that great, historic organization.

How are the mighty fallen! Then the Republican party might have stood against the world. Now none so poor as to do it reverence.

EVILS OF M'HANNAISM.

In these days of McHannaism our foreign policy is so feeble, so cringing, so cowardly that even old and decrepit Spain insults our flag, maltreats our citizens, and searches our ships with perfect impunity; and President McKinley, instead of sending men-of-war to protect our honor, assert our supremacy, and teach the insolent and impotent "Dons" a lesson [applause] they would never forget, passes the hat around and invites the American people to contribute alms for the starving and dying Cubans. [Applause.]

THE MONROE DOCTRINE AS INTERPRETED BY A MISSOURI DEMOCRAT.

The Monroe doctrine has grown with our growth, strengthened with our strength, increased with our territory.

It ought to be enlarged, stretched, expanded, until it becomes an irresistible force in international politics.

In its infancy Mr. Monroe simply notified European nations that new schemes of colonization in this hemisphere would be regarded with an unfriendly eye by this Republic. That was a sufficient assertion of our position so long as we were a feeble folk; but now that we are the most puissant nation on the globe, we should restate our position and should at once signify to all European powers that they retain a foothold in the Western Hemisphere only by our sufferance, that they are mere tenants at will, and that when notified by us they must vacate the premises. [Applause.]

Congress should formulate the Monroe doctrine as we now understand it, and it should be in words about as follows: "The American Republic hereby takes all of North America, Central America, South America, and all the islands of the adjacent seas under the shadow of her protecting wing, guarantees to them any form of government they choose, and warns Europe, Asia, and Africa to keep their hands off the Western Hemisphere on the penalty of being thrashed within an inch of their lives." [Applause.]

That is the Monroe doctrine as interpreted by a Missouri Democrat. [Laughter.] We should extend a moral protectorate over them all. Not one of these Central or South American Republics can maintain its independence without our support. They caught the spirit of freedom from us. They copied their form of government from ours. Round about the young and feeble Republics already established in this hemisphere we should throw our friendship and influence, and we should encourage Cuba and all the rest of the West India Islands to unite themselves into a republic of their own. The habit of representative government is healthy and laudable. It should be fostered by us in every way possible. We should not only lend them our moral support, but should give them physical aid in cases of necessity.

It is high time that we served plain and emphatic notice on all kings, emperors, princes, and potentates that the navies of transatlantic powers shall not be used as collection bureaus for questionable debts, as was done a year or two ago at Corinto, and as was done a month or so ago at Haiti. [Applause.]

THE CUBAN CASE.

The Cuban situation is this: For three years the insurgents have fought with a courage and suffered with a fortitude which have challenged the admiration of all the world, save and except the McKinley Administration. [Applause.]

Three or four hundred thousand people—some of the papers say 600,000—men, women, and children, have died, as much martyrs in the cause of liberty as was Warren, Montgomery, or any other hero who died that we might be free, and yet the McKinley Administration lifts not its finger to stay the slaughter.

Three or four hundred thousand people—some of the papers say 600,000—men, women, and children, are known to be dying by the slow and cruel process of starvation, and the McKinley Administration can think of nothing more effective for their relief than to pose as the Big Beggarman.

The party of Sumner, Chase, and Seward, which proudly vaunted itself as the friend of man, has become the ally of pestilence, arson, famine, devastation, rape, and murder. [Applause.]

There is but one safe and honest rule of political conduct, and that is to religiously fulfill, when in power after the election, the promises made in order to win the election.

Now, remembering that neither the present Administration nor the majority in this House can be persuaded, provoked, or driven into helping our unfortunate Cuban neighbors, let us see what the St. Louis convention said on the subject. It is what Horace Greeley would have called "mighty rich reading." Here it is:

From the hour of achieving their own independence the people of the United States have regarded with sympathy the struggles of other American people to free themselves from European domination. We watch with deep and abiding interest the heroic battle of the Cuban patriots against cruelty and oppression, and our best hopes go out for the full success of their determined contest for liberty.

The Government of Spain having lost control of Cuba, and being unable to protect the property or lives of resident American citizens or to comply with its treaty obligations, we believe that the Government of the United States should actively use its influence and good offices to restore peace and give independence to the island.

That is what you said in June, 1896, and you intended to be understood as promising to give peace and independence to Cuba. Now, having the power, you do nothing to redeem that promise. You said it because you knew the people demanded it. What occult, what malign, what paralyzing influence prevents you now from keeping faith with the people? [Applause.]

It is twenty-one months since you made the St. Louis pronunciamento. Every day the condition in Cuba has grown worse. You won a stupendous victory; you have a brutal majority here, and yet you are afraid to open your chops or to say your souls are your own. Next fall, when you appeal to the people for their suffrages, they will say to you, "Depart, ye workers of iniquity" [laughter], and will cast you into that outer darkness, where there will be weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth. [Applause.]

DEMOCRATIC AND REPUBLICAN FOREIGN POLICIES CONTRASTED.

To every suggestion that we should reenter upon a vigorous foreign policy which will thoroughly protect American citizens and American interests on every part of the habitable globe we are met with the hysterical shriek that we are advocating war. It is not true, but suppose it were. There are some things worse than war, deplorable as war unquestionably is, and one of them is to play the cry-baby act until we are despised of all nations and kindreds and tongues.

Thomas Jefferson was not a bloodthirsty soldier or a vainglorious warrior. He was a man of peace, but he was also a self-respecting American, and when we were only a handful he dared to establish the embargo and to precipitate a war with the greatest power in the world, for the war of 1812, our second war for independence, was Jefferson's war—a Democratic war, fought by Democrats and won by Democrats, when the forefathers of the present Republican party were holding the Hartford secession convention. [Laughter and applause.]

William L. Marcy was not a soldier, but he was an American of the school of Jefferson, and when we were not half as strong as we are now, he was willing to go to war with the Austrian Empire, when at the zenith of her power, to protect the rights of the humblest of our naturalized citizens. [Applause.] War was prevented only by the Emperor yielding to our demands. But then it must be remembered that Marcy was a Democrat and consequently a patriot, proud of his country and ready to defend her rights to the uttermost.

A Democratic foreign policy made the sentence "I am an American" of more effect than the famous "Romanus sum"—made it a safe passport in every land and upon every sea.

Now, that we number 70,000,000 souls, a Republican Administration can not be taunted, kicked, or cuffed into resenting any insult or demanding reparation for any injury.

Such a contemptible and pusillanimous policy is enough to make

Grant, Sherman, Sheridan, Dupont, Farragut, and Porter restless in their coffins.

Along in the late sixties Admiral Farragut was cruising in the Mediterranean and intimated to the Sultan that he would like to anchor his fleet in the Bosphorus. The Sultan conveyed the reply that that was a privilege accorded only to princes of the royal blood. Whereupon, Farragut, the grand American, sent the grand Turk this message:

I have 800 American princes of the blood royal aboard ship. They are entitled to the best of everything to be had. We are clearing our decks for action, and will call upon you in force.

It is entirely superfluous to state that all restrictions were removed, all red tape cut, all the cobwebs of court etiquette swept away, and that Farragut went whither he pleased, anchored where he chose, and did as he wished. [Applause.]

We desire peace as much as do the Republicans, but it is the sort of peace which Benjamin Disraeli, Lord Beaconsfield, the marvelous Jew, declared he secured for England at the Berlin International Congress—"Peace with honor." The coining of that one phrase would have immortalized him if he had done nothing else. "Peace with honor," is what Democrats want. "Peace with dishonor" seems to satisfy the aspirations of Republicans.

Just so that the President distributes "pie" in sufficient quantities they care nothing for the dying women and starving babies in "the gem of the Antilles." [Applause.]

So long as voters can be hoodwinked with sonorous promises they are willing that American lives shall be sacrificed and American property shall be destroyed ad libitum by the Spaniards, who hate and deride us. This is Republican statesmanship, Republican patriotism, and Republican humanity in an off year in our political system. [Applause.]

A MISSOURI DEMOCRAT'S SPEECH ON ST. JACKSON'S DAY.

On the 8th day of January—St. Jackson's day—and suppose Andrew Jackson were President now, what would he do? I do not know all that he would do, but I would risk my life on the proposition that he would give the Spanish butchers forty-eight hours to get out of Cuba, bag and baggage, and if they did not go at once, without standing on the order of their going, he would drive them into the sea or hang them as ruthlessly as he hanged Ambrister and Arbuthnot amid the wilds of Florida.

This month, at the Omaha celebration of Jackson's astounding victory at New Orleans, my friend Mr. J. A. Graham, managing editor of the St. Louis Republic, made a speech in which he gave utterance to these manly, robust, and patriotic sentiments, which contain more genuine American spirit and worldly American wisdom than all the Republican speeches that I have heard since I have been in Congress:

It can not have escaped the notice of clear-sighted patriots—that the monarchs of Europe are meditating an assault upon the American system. The Italian dispute of a few years ago drew out their feeling. The Cuban troubles have almost exposed their plans.

They fear the growing power of a free republic. The capacity of a free people to turn material resources into wealth, to invent, to labor with high intelligence as well as with patient industry, has excited their envy and dislike. Ahead of them they see a time when all their armies and navies will be but paper walls against the steady advance of a sovereign people. Meanwhile their craze for territorial aggrandizement turns their covetousness toward Central and South America. At the first favorable opportunity they will defy the Monroe doctrine.

If China is seized and divided, there will be one more, and a very strong, incentive to destroy the Monroe doctrine and control the future isthmian canal.

For a century the doctrine of the Democratic party has been that peace is a surer guardian of the safety of our institutions than standing armies and monster navies. That doctrine is still the truth of Democracy, of Christianity, and of God. But peace with honor, decency, and self-respect presupposes that we must be let alone. It is not Democratic doctrine that we should ever meekly endure insults; and most surely not Democratic doctrine that we should go down unarmed to defeat rather than prepare for war as the reply of freedom to the insolent threat of armored tyranny.

More than that. I begin to think that the time has come when the honor and the success of the American nation require a display of force commensurate with the range of our interests. We have been employed in the development of our domestic affairs. With our unparalleled home markets, our unparalleled standard of living, we have supplied a demand for almost the whole of our own products. The opinion of foreign peoples we have cared for very little. It is unfortunately true that the name of America is flouted in every foreign country. Falsehood and ignorance have been doing their work while we laughed at the lies. Now, however, our markets are congested. Our marvelous industry, and our yet more marvelous machinery of production and transportation, have surpassed our ability to consume, great as it is.

Perhaps the natural laws of trade will bring eventually the markets we need for the healthy expansion of our exports and the constant employment of our artisans. But against intrenched prejudice progress is slow. It is to be deeply regretted, but it is a fact that in most of the world the only conception of national greatness is connected with the demonstration of physical power. Without dwelling on this fact and its logic, without being even assured that I am not wrong, I will say this much: The assertion of naval strength, the proved certainty of our defenses against possible attack, the performance of a glorious deed by American ships against a foe deemed by the world powerful and brave, would constantly send thundering over the surface of the earth the grandeur of America in a language which would be as plain to the Hankow celestials as to the saunterers on the boulevards of Paris.

True, there is immeasurable potentiality in the citizens who can at a word change the pruning hook into a sword and the sword into the pruning hook. There is now no danger that we shall ever be conquered by a foreign foe. But our coast defenses are feeble; our Navy is ridiculously small in comparison with the extent of our approachable shores. Monarchs of other nations know this and believe that a sudden attack would lay us under tribute, annul the Monroe doctrine, hamper our trade, and open Spanish America to their invasion. They have great navies and armies unemployed. What stimulates them most, perhaps, is that they associate an attack on the United States with a cessation of international dangers from their own quarrels, with a muzzling of domestic discontents, and with that disgraceful failure of democratic institutions which they so feverishly desire to hold as an example before their subjects.

Still further. The Democratic party of the United States has a monetary system to advance for the welfare of all toiling producers. In 1896 the party espoused the cause of bimetallism and nominated a splendid young Nebraskan as its champion. The monarchies of Europe, allied always with plutocracy and privilege, repudiate bimetallism and reject with offensive scorn every overture we make for the restoration of silver money.

If victorious war is the only way by which we can teach them to respect our opinions and recognize the right of their own and our people to lift from the brow of labor the crown of thorns and lighten the galling burden of the cross of gold, then, speaking for at least one Jacksonian Democrat, I am willing to say, let them have it; let them learn the lesson, until their own shoulders run blood under the lash of aroused freedom and their knees bend under the pressure of a race that is as irresistible in conflict as it is beyond rivalry in the peaceful arts of industry.

I do not speak for territorial conquest, for entangling alliances, or for any departure from the traditions of true Jeffersonian Democracy; but I speak in that Jacksonian spirit which hung British spies when they made themselves overt enemies to this nation and met the flower of the British army beside the Mississippi on the day we celebrate. If we are to be defied, I would have the Democratic party, and no other, the first to ring back defiance, like the smitten shield of an invincible hero. If foreign insolence has taken a vow to spit upon the American flag, I would have the Democratic press, the Democratic party, sound the trumpet that calls the people, build the navy that will humble the insulter, if it takes a thousand battle ships and a billion of money. I would have the Jacksonian press and the Jacksonian party send to the uttermost parts of the earth the refrain of the Jacksonian poet:

"First on the land and first on the ocean,
Flag of the rainbow and banner of stars."

These words of Mr. Graham were fitly spoken, and are like apples of gold in pictures of silver. They are American sentiments, Democratic sentiments—Missouri sentiments. They contain the prophecy of that vigorous American foreign policy which will be inaugurated, enforced, and perpetuated, if needs be at the cannon's mouth, when true and genuine Democrats once more control the destinies of the Republic, as they will surely do from and after high noon on March 4, in the year of our Lord and Master 1901.

AN URGENT INVITATION TO REPUBLICANS.

My Republican friends, I urgently invite you to lay aside the weight that is holding you down, assert your rights, and come out on the side of eternal justice and human liberty, thereby demonstrating that you are worthy of the high vocation wherein you are called. We Democrats and Populists stand here ready and anxious to remove from America her great reproach. We on this side will contribute 155 votes to the good cause. If only 24 righteous men can be found in this Republican Sodom—if only 24 Republicans will break their heavy yoke, defy their merciless taskmasters, and join us in this noble work, before the sun sets this day we will send the glad tidings ringing round the world that "Cuba is free! Free, thank God, by the act of the American Congress!" [Applause.]

Mr. DINSMORE. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] use part of his time now?

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he desires to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OTJEN], who will address the House on a question that relates to the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

Mr. OTJEN. Mr. Chairman, I will detain the House but a few moments to call attention a little more fully than has been done, while we are considering this bill in detail, to a matter that concerns the interest of a citizen of the State of Wisconsin—a citizen of my district.

Mr. Francis Hinton, who lived in the city of Milwaukee, who was a citizen of this country, died in October, 1895, in the city of Paris. Upon his person were found several thousand dollars in money and other personal property. It was taken in charge by the police of Paris, a detailed inventory made of the property, and the whole, including the money, turned over to the vice-consul of the United States at Paris. I am informed that he gave his official receipt therefor. He was acting consul at that time, the consul-general being absent on leave. Mr. Hinton has been dead for more than two years, yet his heirs have not succeeded in recovering one cent of this money or in receiving an accounting of it. Mr. John W. Hinton, one of the heirs of Francis Hinton, called the attention of the State Department to this matter, and from the correspondence which I have here it appears that we have not upon the statute books of this country any law that will punish a consul or assistant consul for taking the money of a deceased person and stealing it or embezzling it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is not the intention of Mr. Hinton, in calling the attention of Congress to this matter, to ask to have this money refunded. He does not expect the Government to refund this money, but he wants such action taken that the law shall be so amended that such a thing can not occur again. People ordinarily suppose that when their funds are turned over to the United States officials abroad it is as safe as though the money were turned into the United States Treasury. So it should be. The present state of affairs should not exist, and the law should be amended. This man gave a bond, but the sureties on that bond are foreigners, and I understand the bond is practically worthless. This law should be so amended that consuls and vice-consuls can not embezzle the money of deceased persons when placed in their hands for safe-keeping. A sufficient bond should be given, and the sureties thereon should be responsible American citizens.

We have the assurance of the eminent gentleman who is chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs that this matter will be taken up by that committee and such legislation recommended to Congress as will correct this obvious defect in our laws relating to our consular service.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to print as a part of my remarks a short pamphlet containing a statement made of this matter by the heirs of Francis Hinton.

Mr. STEELE. I should like to ask the gentleman, before he takes his seat, whether that vice-consul is still in office?

Mr. OTJEN. He is not in office now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that he be permitted to print a document in the RECORD as a part of his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The document referred to is as follows:

NORTHWESTERN TARIFF BUREAU OF JOHN W. HINTON,
Milwaukee, Wis., December 6, 1897.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

GENTLEMEN: The following letters, respectfully submitted to you, reveal a state of things at once shameful and disgraceful in a national sense.

They will prove to you that an American citizen is without protection when in a foreign country, and that if his decease occurs there the means found upon his person, and which with scrupulous honesty of the foreign officials are delivered to the American consul or vice-consul, those means can be embezzled without responsibility, nor can the consul or vice-consul who embezzles the money be prosecuted, as under United States laws the embezzler has committed no offense, and, according to the decision of the United States Secretary of State, "there is no penal liability that can be enforced against him.

To steal or embezzle money from a deceased pauper or convict within the United States is a felony, and can be punished as such, for here there is a penal liability that can be enforced against the thief or embezzler.

While to steal or embezzle the funds found on a deceased American citizen by the United States consul or vice-consul in a foreign country is no felony or crime, because there is under United States laws "no penal liability that can be enforced against him."

To call the attention of Congress to this truly shocking and disgraceful condition of things to a great nation like ours is the purpose of this pamphlet, respectfully submitted for your serious consideration.

NORTHWESTERN TARIFF BUREAU OF JOHN W. HINTON,
Milwaukee, Wis., September 15, 1897.

HONORED SIR: I believe that I need no introduction to you, hence my only apology for intruding are the facts set forth in the accompanying papers, respectfully submitted.

Briefly summarized, they are:

My son, Francis Hinton, who I believe was known to you as an ardent Republican and American protectionist, had on his person at the time of his death in Paris, France, October 22, 1895, a large amount of money, all of which was promptly paid over by the Paris police to Clyde Shropshire, the then vice-consul at Paris, during the absence on leave of the consul-general, and by him receipted for, in his official capacity as representative of the United States in Paris.

Not one cent of money has been accounted for to myself or wife, who are the sole heirs of Francis Hinton, so adjudged to be by the probate court of Milwaukee County, Wis., nor can we get any accounting of the money so received by said acting consul of the United States.

Is not this a case for governmental interference? Is not this Clyde Shropshire a defaulter to the American Government? Has he not, in his official capacity, embezzled this money? Ought he not to be prosecuted as an embezzler by the United States Government for his conduct? Have not the heirs of Francis Hinton a just claim against the Government for the money so received and retained by its accredited and authorized agent? Is it possible that the heirs of an American citizen who dies in a foreign country, and whose effects and funds pass legally into the American consul, have no remedy and can not recover the money so justly their due—are they not entitled to the protection of the United States Government?

These suggestions, with the certified facts, etc., set forth in the accompanying papers are most respectfully and earnestly submitted to you, Mr. President, for consideration.

A few words from you to the Attorney-General of the United States, it is respectfully suggested, may procure for the heirs of Francis Hinton that justice they may be unable otherwise to obtain, and for that purpose alone is this letter written.

I am informed that the matter has been investigated by the State Department at Washington, and that a full report will be found on file in that Department. Therefore, it is not necessary for me to send more than the inclosed memorandum.

Permit me to add that on receiving news of my son's death $2,000 was at once cabled, through the American Express Company, to Paris to defray expenses, and that several hundred dollars of that money is still held by the said Shropshire, for which we can get no accounting.

I am, I believe, credibly informed that said Shropshire is in Rome, Ga.

The above is respectfully submitted to you, Mr. President, for your kind consideration.

Faithfully as ever your friend, and with deep respect,
JOHN W. HINTON.

Hon. WILLIAM MCKINLEY,
President United States.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, September 17, 1897.

Very truly, yours,
JOHN ADDISON PORTER,
Secretary to the President.

DEAR SIR: Respecting the papers pertaining to the death of my son in Paris, which President McKinley so kindly referred to you, permit me to inform you that since the receipt of the secretary to the President's letter another letter has been received from Clyde Shropshire, a copy of which will be forwarded to you if you so desire. —

NORTHWESTERN TARIFF BUREAU OF JOHN W. HINTON,
Milwaukee, Wis., September 29, 1897.

SIR: I have received and carefully read your letter of September 25, responsive to mine of September 21 and 24, and beg leave to say that its brevity and curtness was startling.

The announcement by the United States Secretary of State that the heirs of an American citizen who died abroad, and from whose person the funds found there and which were paid over to the vice-consul representing the United States, and by him receipted for in his official capacity, and by him embezzled, that those heirs have no remedy from the United States Government, and that the embezzler of those funds can not be prosecuted as a criminal, that I say is startling.

I have, on more than one occasion, in my duties as a newspaper writer, asked the question:

"Has an American citizen less rights than a British subject?"

Hitherto, I am not aware of any reply being made, nor, so far as I remember, any direct answer being given to the question, certainly not in the affirmative, until the receipt of your letter of the 25th instant to myself.

Permit me to recapitulate the facts of the case, all of which in detail, I am credibly informed, have been on file in your office for a long time, receiving no attention whatever.

My son, who was American born, died in Paris, France, nearly two years since. On his person at the time of his death was a large amount of money—several thousand dollars.

The Parisian police were scrupulously honest in accounting for everything found on his person, and promptly handed everything, including the money, to the American vice-consul in Paris, and from him took a receipt, in his official capacity, for the same, the consul-general being absent on Government leave.

The money was embezzled by the vice-consul. Not one cent of it has ever been accounted for. And when the heirs at law seek redress from the Government, under whose authority the vice-consul acted in receiving that money, those heirs are told by the United States Secretary of State:

"The Department has reached the conclusion that under our laws there is no penal liability which can be enforced against him."

I believe that I am within the truth in asserting that the citizen or the subject of no other government, whether monarchical or despotic, but has better protection, has more rights, and those rights better guarded, than, under your ruling, has the helpless and neglected American citizen who unfortunately dies in a foreign country.

Our Government, according to your ruling, is entirely deficient of any coercive power to punish its agents for embezzling the funds of its citizens dying in foreign countries.

I no longer wonder that Washington foresaw the evil effects of this lack of "the means of coercion," as he expressed it to Chief Justice Jay, March 10, 1787:

"Among men of reflection few will be found, I believe, who are not beginning to think that our system is better in theory than in practice, and that, notwithstanding the boasted virtue of America, it is more than probable that we shall exhibit the last melancholy proof that mankind are incompetent to their own government without the means of coercion in the sovereign."

For nearly sixty years I have faithfully, and ever will, keep my oath of allegiance to this Government, yet I can not refrain from noticing how imbecile is that Government that permits its agents to rob me, and when redress is sought, and the restoration of the stolen money to its rightful owner is asked for, the Government confesses its inability to restore the stolen funds in its possession to its rightful owner.

Had a private citizen embezzled funds belonging to me, the prosecution of the criminal would be certain; but when an authorized and publicly accredited agent of the American Government, whom it has placed under bonds, embezzles funds from the dead, he is shielded from prosecution, the Government retains the stolen money in its possession by its agent, and when the owner of that embezzled money applies to the Secretary of State he is curtly told:

"In regard to your civil remedy against Shropshire (vice-consul) you should consult your attorney."

Very respectfully, yours,

JOHN W. HINTON.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C.

NORTHWESTERN TARIFF BUREAU OF JOHN W. HINTON,
Milwaukee, Wis., November 5, 1897.

Hon. WILLIAM MCKINLEY,
President of the United States, Washington, D. C.

HONORED SIR: With much reluctance I again intrude upon your time, but the importance and serious circumstances of the case, I respectfully submit, justify a second intrusion.

In response to your having so kindly and promptly called the attention of the Secretary of State to the matter referred to in my letter to you of September 15, 1897, I receive the following:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, September 25, 1897.

SIR: Referring to your letters of the 21st and 24th instant, respectively, in regard to the case of Clyde Shropshire, I have to inform you that after a careful examination of the matter with a view to his prosecution, this Department has reached the conclusion that under our laws there is no penal liability which can be enforced against him.

In regard to your civil remedy against Shropshire, you should consult your attorney.

Respectfully, yours,

WILLIAM R. DAY,
Assistant Secretary.

JOHN W. HINTON, Esq.,
Northwestern Tariff Bureau, Milwaukee, Wis.

Mr. President, you and I have been battling for many years for protection to American citizens, for the promotion of their welfare, and to secure to them their rights. My own efforts have been constant in that conflict, beginning in 1840—about three years before your birth.

But, I respectfully ask, of what avail are all our efforts if the heirs of an American citizen who dies in a foreign country have no redress when, from the person of the deceased citizen, the American vice-consul receives, in his official capacity and in such capacity receipts for, several thousand dollars, embezzles that money, and, when the Secretary of State is applied to for redress, that high official curtly informs those heirs of the deceased American citizen that the United States Government can do nothing—virtually asserting that to rob a deceased American citizen in a foreign country is no crime; "that under our laws there is no penal liability that can be enforced against him?"

Honored sir, if such be the law of the United States, I respectfully submit, would not a reference to this inefficiency be proper in your next message to Congress?

Would it not be advisable to suggest an act of Congress to be passed elevating the American citizen to the level of the British subject?

Are not the present conditions of the heirs of an American citizen who, unfortunately, dies abroad, humiliating in the extreme?

Pardon me the question, Mr. President: Have not those who detached their allegiance from England and attached it to the United States lost some of the rights they formerly possessed? For it would not be difficult to furnish evidence that, had such an occurrence as the one alluded to in this case occurred under British laws and to British heirs, ample redress would have been afforded to the defrauded heirs. In other words, Mr. President, a wrong done to a British subject similar to the one to which your attention has been called and which you so kindly and promptly referred to the Secretary of State, would have been redressed, nor would a British secretary of state have curtly referred the heirs to their attorney for redress.

The victory gained in the cause in which you and I, Mr. President, so long fought resulted in your election to the highest position in the world—a victory gained for protection placed you in the Presidential chair as a just reward to one of its most prominent and ablest defenders, while no one more sincerely rejoices in that result than myself.

In this matter I am actuated far more by a desire to do good toward my fellow-citizens by pointing out an existing evil, to, if possible, thereby call the attention of those who have the power to remedy it, than the mere recovery of the money of which I have been robbed by a United States official.

The conditions of the case as it now stands is a disgrace to a great Government like ours—an evidence of its imbecility, virtually conceding that an American citizen when in a foreign country is abandoned by the Government that ought to protect him, and should death there be his fate his heirs can be robbed with impunity, while the Government official who committed the robbery in his official capacity, while under bonds to his Government for the faithful performance of his duty, returns to the United States and roams the country a free man.

Renewing my apology for again intruding, I subscribe myself,

Faithfully and sincerely, and with great respect, your friend,

JOHN W. HINTON.

Another letter from the Secretary of State:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 17, 1897.

SIR: Your letter of the 5th instant to the President, in the case of Clyde Shropshire, late vice and deputy consul-general of the United States at Paris, France, has been referred by him to this Department.

In reply I beg to inform you that during the last Administration and again during the present one the United States statutes have been carefully examined in order to find some authority to prosecute and punish criminally the said Shropshire if proved guilty of the acts charged against him, and the conclusion reluctantly reached is that there is no law of this country by which punishment can be visited upon him.

Shropshire gave a bond as such vice-consul-general, a certified copy of which is inclosed herewith. It will appear to you upon inspecting the bond that the amount thereof is only $2,000 and the sureties both residents of Paris.

The enforcement of liability on the bond for liability to private parties does not properly belong to the Government, and for that reason you were referred in my last letter, of September 25 last, to your counsel. Yet the Government has been at all times, and still is, ready and willing to afford you all the assistance by way of information or otherwise which it properly can.

Respectfully, yours,

WILLIAM R. DAY,
Assistant Secretary.

JOHN W. HINTON, Esq.,
Northwestern Tariff Bureau, Milwaukee, Wis.

The following is an extract from the bond referred to:

"The condition of the above obligation is such that if the above bounden Clyde Shropshire, appointed vice and deputy consul-general of the United States at Paris, France, shall truly and faithfully discharge the duties of his said office according to law, and shall also truly and faithfully account for, pay over, and deliver up all moneys, goods, effects, books, records, papers, and other property which shall come into the hands of the said Clyde Shropshire or into the hands of any person for his use as vice and deputy consul-general under any law now or hereafter enacted, etc."

Why does not the Government sue the bondsmen, as the bond runs to the Government? Is it the policy of the Government to permit robbery of its citizens in foreign countries and make no effort to recover the stolen money? Of what benefit or wherein is any protection or safety for the citizens whose funds have been embezzled? The "money that came into the hands" of Clyde Shropshire remains there, and the Government tells the defrauded citizens, "in regard to your civil remedy against Shropshire you should consult your attorney." Thus the Government ignores the bond given to itself, recognizes no right of the citizen, makes no effort to punish its servant who has defrauded that citizen, or to recover the money that has been embezzled from him!

What a spectacle the United States Government presents to the civilized world, with its published cognovit of its inability to punish its officials for embezzling while they are under bonds not to embezzle the funds which come into their hands!

The whole system as exposed by results discloses a legal farce disgraceful to our Government. An exhibition of its impotency, exposing with cruel truth the utter helplessness of American citizens plundered by United States officials to recover the funds of which they have been robbed!

In my letter of November 5, 1897, to President McKinley, whose courtesy and kindness in so promptly referring the whole matter to the Secretary of State I again gratefully acknowledge, I stated:

"In this matter I am actuated far more by a desire to do good toward my fellow-citizens, by pointing out an existing evil, to, if possible, thereby call the attention of those who have the power to remedy it, than the mere recovery of the money of which I have been robbed by a United States official."

That the sentence quoted is strictly true and not written for effect, permit me to add that my means are abundant for my every want; that no danger of any future financial need prompts this appeal for the restoration of the embezzled funds, but that it is made particularly, if not specifically, from a sense of duty, and a desire to point out the need of remedial legislation by your honorable body, whereby the rights of American citizens and their heirs may be recognized and guarded in the future whose circumstances financially may not be as fortunate as my own.

With very great reluctance, and solely as a further proof of the rectitude of my intention and desire to promote the public good, and an absolute freedom from any mercenary motive in appealing to your honorable body, permit me to inform you that since the settlement of my son's estate my wife and myself have donated nearly $60,000 to one of the noblest and most worthy charities that exist.

I sincerely hope that by calling your attention to the facts disclosed by the letters, etc., presented, some means will be devised by which the protection of the United States Government will extend to its citizens beyond the confines of their native or adopted country, and their interests, and the interests of their heirs, in case of decease while abroad, may be guarded against the ravages of American ghouls from robbing their deceased fellow-citizens while under bonds to the United States Government, as consul or vice-consul, for a faithful performance of their duties as such officials, and with the further hope on my part that the rights of American citizens and of their heirs may be made as secure as are the rights of the subjects of monarchical or despotic governments.

Respectfully submitted.

JOHN W. HINTON.

Mr. DINSMORE. I yield one hour to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I shall appreciate it very much if the Chair will tell me when fifteen minutes of my time have expired. I do not expect to use over ten minutes, but I want to be warned, because I have promised to yield the balance of my time to gentlemen who know better than I do the condition of things actually existing now in the Island of Cuba, one of them being a gentleman who has recently returned from a visit to that island, the other a gentleman who has given an unusual degree of attention and study to Cuban affairs.

Mr. Chairman, I feel a little embarrassed in discussing this question at this time. I heard a gentleman a moment ago say that he would "rather have a thousand dollars in his own pocket than to be talked about as the Republican party has been talked about here this morning and yesterday."

I feel embarrassed in addressing myself to this question, and my embarrassment grows out of the fact that I doubt, after all that has happened, if it is right, if it is not absolutely cruel, to add the reenforcement of my strong right arm and "eagle brain and massive eye" and tongue tipped with eloquence to all of the other forces which have been hurling denunciations at the Republican party.

In fact, Mr. Chairman, I can conceive of but one excuse for what we are doing over on this side of the Chamber in connection with this matter of belaboring the Republican party about its foreign policy. That is the excuse that the Irishman gave when he was trailing the dead dog. Being asked why he was doing it, the dog being dead, he replied, "Yes; but, faith, I am trying to teach him that there is punishment after death." [Laughter.] I feel a little bit of hesitation about going on any further in this matter of belaboring the dead Republican carcass.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him right there?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. NORTHWAY. There are two ways of becoming illustrious. One is to be praised by good folks, and the other is to be slandered by bad folks. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes, but there are two ways of becoming the opposite of illustrious, whatever that may be. One is to be praised by the advocates of Hannaism, and the other is to be condemned by free Democratic American citizens.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, there are just exactly three genuine, real diplomats in this House of Representatives. One of them, a gentleman who has shown his diplomacy upon a thousand fields, is my colleague, Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi. He belongs to the sophomore class of diplomats. The second one is myself, but I am but a freshman, having been lately put upon the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and not yet well entered into the sacred arena. The third is undoubtedly the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of our Foreign Affairs Committee. I may be permitted to explain the respect and reverence I have for the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, by citing that which is always noted as a fact, viz, the manner in which the freshman always venerates the post graduate. The gentleman from Illinois is a post graduate in the college of diplomacy. A diplomat comes to the Republican party when it sorely needs a diplomat.

When the sign was put out "Boy wanted," it never expressed an actual, real desire any more than when the sign was put out by the Republican party, not in letters, not in words, but in intention, "Diplomat needed here." In accordance with the law of demand and supply the want was filled. There was a vacuum to be filled. Nature abhors a vacuum, especially a diplomatic vacuum. Thus you were furnished a diplomat in the person of the distinguished chairman of the committee. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, I feel like giving a brief bit of history; and I want to mention a few of the rather inconsistent positions taken by the chairman of our committee. The first was that there was no "public war" in the Island of Cuba, because all international law writers agree that wherever a state of public war exists it is a matter of right on our part and of justice to belligerents to recognize the fact, and that the recognition of the fact of the existence of public war is a recognition of belligerency. There is no mystery about it.

In the next breath he praised the McKinley Administration because it had stopped the "cruel warfare" that had been waged by one Weyler, and that this war was being now waged by Spain in a civilized manner. It must be, then, that this is not a public war, but just a private affair, between Cubans and Spain, touching no one else, and with which the balance of the world has nothing to do! That is not exactly the definition of "private war" in the intendment of the books on international law, but it must be in the intendment of the gentleman!

Now, the next position taken by the gentleman from Illinois is that we can not now recognize that a state of public war exists in Cuba—in other words, recognize her belligerency—because rights of belligerency would not do the Cubans any good. Shades of history, of all people who have ever rebelled against their mother countries, what an important piece of information this is! What a great pity that George Washington, Nathanael Greene, and Thomas Jefferson, during the Revolution, when seeking recognition of belligerency at the hands of the powers of Europe, did not know that recognition of belligerency was of no advantage to America!

What a great pity that the great Virginian, Robert E. Lee, and the great Mississippian, Jefferson Davis, when seeking recognition of belligerency for the Confederacy, were not informed of this great fact and thus saved much trouble in seeking recognition of belligerency at the hands of other nations—seeking a thing hurtful to the Confederacy, helpful to the United States! What a pity Seward and Lincoln were not better informed! How much anxiety—useless and foolish—would have been saved them in trying to prevent a happening which was hurtful to their enemies! It has appeared to rebels everywhere that the recognition of belligerency would help them; and it so happens that all rebels that ever existed on this globe, alike those who remained rebels because they failed and those who became "revolutionists" by success, have been of the opinion that recognition of belligerency was a thing much to be desired, and when obtained a thing of very much advantage.

When the gentleman comes to his third position, he enters upon a very open field of diplomacy. He throws out one of those diplomatic "hints" practiced by Lord Beaconsfield, a hint thrown out into the atmosphere. He hints that the time may come—the time may be nearer than we think—when the McKinley Administration will brace itself up, not for the purpose of recognizing the belligerency, but for the purpose of recognizing and enforcing the independnce of Cuba! What a great thing a hint is when thrown out by a diplomat! Ordinarily you would believe it better that men should make plain, explicit statements, leaving as little as can be to the imagination. That is true of ordinary mortals. But when it comes to diplomats like my colleague from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN], myself, and the gentleman from Illinois, we do things high-handedly by hints. If Cuba shall ever obtain freedom from the Republican Administration, I imagine that she will be "hinted" into it!

Now, a little bit of history, gentlemen, for the record. A little over two years ago, in the last Congress, you told the people, and howled until you were hoarse, about the cowardice of Mr. Cleveland's Administration in not recognizing Cuban belligerency. With our aid you passed through this House a concurrent resolution favoring belligerency. In the last campaign you made the air resonant with a repetition of your war cries and appeals in behalf of "humanity and bleeding Cuba." When your convention met, you promised that you would try to give "peace and independence" to Cuba.

Now, I tell you, you are faced with a situation out of which you can not wriggle when we go before the people. Look at it! The Senate sent to the Committee on Foreign Affairs of this House a recognition of belligerency. It is sleeping there because you want it to sleep. When this bill now pending came into this House, we offered certain amendments, some recognizing belligerency and some independence. To them points of order were made by the Republican chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee with the knowledge and approval of your Speaker and all your leaders. These amendments were perhaps obnoxious to the point of order. We will not rethrash that straw. But the point of order need not have been raised. It would not have been raised, if the Republican party had been willing to help Cuba. This evening we will move to recommit with instructions, against which motion the point of order can not justly lie. There is no doubt about that. Then we will have a yea-and-nay vote in this House, I trust, and put you upon record.

Then, if the point of order is made and it is held that it lies against the motion to recommit, we will appeal from the decision of the Speaker and get a yea-and-nay vote on that.

Then we have already sent to your Foreign Affairs Committee two bills recognizing the independence of Cuba. If you do not take up and pass them, if you do not bring them to the attention of this House, you can not go before the people afterwards and say, as so many of you have said, that while you have the warmest love for the struggling patriots and wish to see liberty enthroned in Cuba, you have defeated our efforts in that direction because—and only because—we have not tried to consummate our aim in the right way.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am no "jingo." I am the farthest from it. I am not arguing for Cuban annexation; this is not a question of annexation; it is a question at most of independence. It is totally unlike the Hawaiian question—the proposition to annex a country 2,000 miles from San Francisco and 4,000 miles from the mouth of the Nicaraguan Canal, for the purpose of enabling a sugar-planting plutocracy to rule through us ten or twenty times their number. Upon that question you would be deserting our traditional position as an American continental power, and trying to make of ourselves an intermeddling-maritime-world-power.

This is not a jingo question; it is a question of justice. All international law says that if there is a "state of public war" in the Island of Cuba to-day we have the right and we should, as a matter of justice to the Cubans, recognize the existence of the fact. The recognition of the existence of the fact is a recognition of belligerency. Nobody would have a right to complain, if in our discretion we exercised our right. It would be just casus belli to no power.

Mr. DALZELL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. DALZELL. There can be no recognition of belligerency unless there are belligerents.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. No, sir.

Mr. DALZELL. There are no belligerents known to international law unless they have some sort of a government.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Undoubtedly.

Mr. DALZELL. Is there any government of the insurgents in the Island of Cuba?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Oh, yes.

Mr. DALZELL. Have they an executive?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes; they have an executive.

Mr. DALZELL. What is his name?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. They have the same sort of a government that every Spanish-American Republic up to the time of its success had, and that many of them have now. But I am not talking about their form of government. Many of them have a mere succession of military dictatorships, which I suppose from our standpoint we do not call a very good government nor a very civil government.

Mr. DALZELL. Will the gentleman from Mississippi tell me the name of the executive of the government of the insurgents?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I got remaining of my fifteen minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has two minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. I am asking the gentleman the name of the executive of the insurgent government.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I will resort to a Yankee trick, because my memory is frequently at fault. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] give me the name of the present King of Roumania? [Laughter.]

Mr. DALZELL. I am not very familiar with royalty, and can not give the gentleman the name just now.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Well, I am not very familiar with Spanish names [laughter] and I can not give the name of the executive of the Cuban insurgents just now, but his name has been in every newspaper in the land and I have read it five or six times, as I naturally presume the gentleman from Pennsylvania also has.

Mr. KING. If the gentleman from Mississippi will permit me, I will answer the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL]. The executive of the Cuban insurgents is Bartolomé Massó.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That is the name, but I doubt if I can even now repeat it after the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. DALZELL. Where is the capital of this insurgent government?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. At a place called Cubitas.

Mr. DALZELL. There is such a place, is there?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. There is.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] in how many different places the capital of the American Government was during the Revolutionary war?

Mr. GREENE. Who was the President of the United States during the days of the Revolution?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. There was no President of the United States during the Revolution.

Mr. DALZELL. We had no established government at that time.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Can I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] who was the president of the Cuban Republic a little over a year ago when the Republicans wanted to recognize the belligerents and when two-thirds perhaps of this side voted with them for a resolution to that effect? [Laughter.]

Mr. DALZELL. I can not say, but I presume the same gentleman that my friend from Utah [Mr. KING] says is the president now.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I have now consumed the time that I reserved for myself, and I wish to yield thirty minutes to the gentlemen from Utah [Mr. KING] and the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS].

[Mr. KING addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I confess that I have heard but very little of this debate, for I have been absent attending the hearings of the Banking and Currency Committee, of which I have the honor to be a member; but since coming into the Chamber a few moments ago I think I have gathered enough of the discussion to be able to understand its general drift, and I desire to submit a few observations upon the subject, which I trust will be found to be somewhat relevant.

So far as I am personally concerned, sir, I am perfectly willing to trust the Chief Executive of this nation in this troublesome Cuban matter. In my humble opinion his whole management of the affair since he came into office has been characterized by the utmost good sense, sound judgment, and exalted patriotism. He has conducted everything so adroitly as to steer clear of those things which menaced our peace and at the same time to obtain for us from Spain everything that we had a right to expect from her.

Under his administration of the problem American rights have been preserved, the prison doors in Cuba have been thrown open to our countrymen who were improperly restrained of their liberty, reparation has been made for injuries inflicted, and, largely in response to the sentiments which he has voiced, a complete change in the policy of Spain in its efforts to subjugate Cuba has been inaugurated. The old Spanish administration has fallen. That military chieftain who was waging war in Cuba contrary to the known usages of war has been recalled. For the old ministry there has been substituted a more liberal ministry—that of Sagasta.

In place of Weyler they have sent a general who is waging war according to the dictates of humanity and the code of civilized nations. Spain, too, is offering autonomy. Now, Mr. Chairman, that autonomy may not be according to our democratic ideas; but it is a great deal for a government constituted like the one which proffers it. It strikes me that under these circumstances there can be no wiser course for this Chamber, irrespective of party, than to uphold the sagacious, able, and patriotic hands of the President of the United States. His past conduct warrants us in the belief that our future will be secure with him. It is quite evident from all we hear that he is keeping a careful eye upon the condition of affairs in Cuba, and that in this matter he is being ably seconded by the distinguished gentleman of opposite politics who is now our consul in that island. He has promised us to see that American interests are jealously guarded, and that if the necessity arises he will act promptly to protect them.

Mr. Chairman, I read in the Washington Post this morning an editorial which, for good sense and conservative judgment, will compare favorably with any editorial that I have seen on this subject. I hope every gentleman of this House read it and pondered over it. It expresses the importance and gravity of the situation which now confronts us in this Cuban question so much better than I can possibly express it myself that if I had the article here I would be tempted to send it to the Clerk's desk and have it read to the House. I commend it to the thoughtful perusal of gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber, and also to some on this side who seem disposed to rush with unbecoming haste toward that which may lead to great national embarrassment. If these gentlemen will read this editorial carefully and reflect over it, I trust that the hand of discretion will be laid on their fiery and impetuous natures and that the country may be saved from some menacing perils which their ill-advised conduct may possibly bring upon it.

It is all very proper, Mr. Chairman, for us to say that we sympathize with Cuba in this struggle for independence. It is all very commendable that as individuals we heartily desire to see the Cubans achieve their liberty. It may even be excusable for us to covet that island and desire that at some time it shall become a part of our own domain. But these are but one-sided, narrow, and superficial views of a great subject of national moment and importance. We must not forget that we are one of the family of nations; that there are certain rules of international law which are to be observed. We must not in our zeal to interfere in Cuban affairs set a precedent which may come home to plague us at some time in the future when we are least prepared to meet its force or avoid its effect.

There have been times in the past when, with very great propriety, we might have questioned the action of Spain—her conduct of the war against the insurgents. If so, I submit to this Chamber that the progress of events has removed very largely that ground of complaint. As I said a bit ago, the entire system of warfare there has been reversed. From being barbarous it has become civilized. I repeat it, the old administration in Spain that waged a different kind of warfare has been overthrown and a new and liberal administration has taken its place. A soldier is now in command of the Spanish forces on the Cuban Island who is doing all he can to pacify the insurgents and who is offering them a species of autonomy which, coming from Spain, is a marvel, though it may not be so liberal as to render it acceptable if tendered to people bred and constituted as our own.

Mr. Chairman, I sincerely lament the distress and suffering in Cuba.

It is well enough for us to contribute to the relief of the sufferings of the insurgents. We can do this consistently with our international obligations. Indeed, it is the exercise of the most commendable philanthropy to do so. But it is quite a different thing for us to exercise the high prerogatives which we possess as representatives of the American people and undertake, in violation of our international relations, to invade by force the internal affairs of that island and to give such a just provocation to Spain as may lead to consequences which we may subsequently very profoundly regret.

Mr. Chairman, our efforts along the line of pacification conducted through our President have been wonderfully successful. By what logic do gentlemen who did not intervene months ago under the barbarous and cruel policy of Spain then being pursued propose now to intervene when the very things which we insisted she should adopt as part of her policy toward that island have been adopted by her, and when she has, at our suggestion, renounced the methods of repression which we denounced with such emphasis?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does not the gentleman know that in the last Congress the majority of Democrats in this House did vote to intervene? I may say all the Democrats, for it was only the personal adherents of Mr. Cleveland on this side, who never were Democrats, that voted against that step.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I wish it were possible that gentlemen could take a broader view of this subject than merely to consider it as something upon which they may hope to obtain a partisan advantage. We may be standing nearer the mouth of the crater than we realize. In our anxiety to avert Cuban bloodshed, let us be exceedingly cautious that we do not precipitate the flow of American blood. The hot-heads here, Mr. Chairman, ought to be restrained and obstructed.

The demand of the hour is for sensible and conservative men on this floor—men who are not influenced by considerations of party expediency or partisan advantage, but who are capable of taking a broad and patriotic view of the embarrassing and important subject. It is the ultimate and impartial verdict of the people as a whole that we should desire, and not the approval of a few incendiaries who would precipitate difficulties upon the country and involve us in complications which all would seriously regret.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Well, I have only a few moments and desired to proceed without interruption, but I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KELLEY. I only wish to ask the gentleman if he means to say that recognition of the belligerency of the rights of the Cubans would mean or amount to the same thing as a declaration of war?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I mean to say that an armed intervention, or a forcible intervention of any kind, or a recognition of Cuba as an independent State would, in my opinion, not only be a gross impropriety at the present time, but it would not be warranted by the facts and circumstances which now exist. Even a recognition of belligerency might result in precipitating war.

Mr. KELLEY. Well, we do not agree on that point.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana (continuing). And however successful in their efforts the Cubans may have been in waging war, we are not, in my judgment, justified under the conditions existing in recognizing them as belligerents, and no other nation on the face of the earth contemplates doing so. It is altogether an unfortunate sympathy, however humane it may be, which disregards our traditions and our well-established policy of nonintervention in foreign affairs that has met the commendation of the people of this country from the inauguration of the Republic down to the present day.

It is the part of good sense, good judgment, and good statesmanship, Mr. Chairman, to stand out against that popular clamor and excitement which does not stop to count the cost of the action which it is seeking to incite, and which, in my humble opinion, does not represent the best American sentiment, and which, if it is left free to achieve its purpose, will not result in advancing the true interests of the Republic.

Mr. BOTKIN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, with his consent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I was going on to say, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BOTKIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana how he harmonizes his present position on the question of Cuban belligerency, or Cuban independence, with the Republican platform of 1896?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Oh, Mr. Chairman, there are two answers to the gentleman's question, either of which would be entirely satisfactory to a reasonable man. The first is that there is no man, no reasonable man, who reads the Republican platform to which the gentleman refers who can contend for a moment that it commits the Republican party to the policy that he insists upon.

Another answer is that I am going to act here on my individual judgment in matters of this character. I am going to act on circumstances as they develop themselves to me at the present time, and I am responsible to my conscience and to my constituents for the action which I shall take. [Applause.] I prefer to accept the wise and patriotic construction of the Republican platform which has been given to it by the President of the United States than the narrow construction which the gentleman would place upon it. I prefer to follow what seems to me to be a statesmanlike path on an occasion like this, rather than to undertake to follow the lead of men who advocate opinions which do not seem to have regard for present conditions or for the best welfare of my country. [Applause.]

Mr. BOTKIN. Does not the gentleman know that the people generally throughout the country and the masses of the Republican party have placed the same interpretation on the platform as that which I have suggested?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I do not know anything of the kind. I knew that the great fight in the last election was waged upon many questions, but that this one did not enter largely into the public estimation. It was dwarfed by others deemed to be more important. The Republicans of this country have placed no construction upon the Cuban plank of the party platform which would justify intemperate conduct upon our part as Representatives.

Mr. GROW. Times have changed, anyhow.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I say, Mr. Chairman, that we may be standing nearer the verge of the crater than some gentlemen may imagine. I grant you that Spain is torn with internecine war. I grant you that her councils are divided. I grant you that her finances are in a disordered state. I grant you that she has not waged, so far, a successful war against Cuba, but at the same time the old Castilian spirit is not dead in her veins, and though she may be impotent to successfully resent our conduct, though she may be incapable of overcoming us in hostilities, yet we may, by our hot-headed conduct in this matter, force her to go to war in response to her pride and her courage.

We may involve ourselves in difficulties of the most extraordinary character. Can we defend ourselves in the forum of conscience before the cool, sober sentiment of this country if we do this? Can we defend ourselves under the law of nations in the eyes of the world if we do it? Everything we have demanded of Spain in the way of stopping her barbarities has been acceded to. Every indication of our desire she has studiously complied with with a view of avoiding difficulty with us.

Shall we now, simply in pursuit of a sentiment, press her to that impassable point which will compel her to commence hostilities against us, and thus indirectly exercise the power to declare war which the Constitution imposes upon us, but which we have not the hardihood to exercise directly? Shall we provoke her into belligerency; shall we menace and shock the business interests of this country; shall we lay aside the matters of domestic legislation—those internal reforms so necessary for the benefit of the country and the prosperity of the people—to devise methods of prosecuting a great war?

How can we justify ourselves if we do anything of this kind? I do not doubt that if a conflict were precipitated—and we know how easy it is for inflammable utterances to provoke a conflict—I do not doubt that my country would bear itself triumphantly, but what I deprecate is the possibility, aye, the probability, if this thing is to be persisted in, of even a successful war. There are gentlemen on each side of this Chamber who know what this condition means, honorable men who participated in our great civil war, who bear their scars all in front, and who bring their maimed bodies here as an evidence of the horrors of the battlefield. Is it not enough that there is suffering and death in Cuba?

Are you going to add to it the possibility of the flowing of American blood andthe loss of precious American life in even a successful war with Spain? Had you not better hold off your impetuous hands until the logic of events gives to Cuba, through her own endeavors, that which you seek to accomplish by embroiling your country in international entanglements? Is this not the part of common sense, of statesmanship, and of wisdom?

Who is there here who wants now, by the agitation of a war feeling, or by precipitating a war even with so impotent a power as Spain is claimed to be, to shake the business interests of this country to the foundation, to arrest all of our recuperation and development, to take our attention from these great internal measures of legislation which are absolutely indispensable to the prosperity of the people? Are you going to devote your time to voting men and munitions of war? Are you going to lay the groundwork for future pension rolls?

Are you going to distract the attention and legislation of the country from the bankruptcy act, which is demanded from many sections of the Republic and which is deemed to be necessary for the relief of the debtor? Are you going to lay aside the question of restricting immigration, that we may stop the coming to our shores from abroad of that element which is dangerous to our national existence and which we can no longer assimilate in the body politic? Are you going to abandon the great question of banking and currency reform which is being earnestly pressed upon your attention from all sections of the land and by men of all political parties, and in the proper solution of which is involved the happiness and prosperity of this great Republic?

Are you going, instead of addressing yourselves to these measures of internal need, to involve yourselves, simply because you very properly and naturally sympathize with the struggle of the Cuban people for their independence, in a war with Spain at the very time when she is adopting the reforms which your President has demanded and before she has had a just opportunity to put them into practice and ascertain their effects? Why, you could with much more propriety, as I have before said, have intervened six months or a year ago; but that time has gone.

Even then I think it would have been improper; but now, when civilized methods of warfare are being employed, when Spain stands with autonomy in one hand and the olive branch in the other, seeking to conquer in the line of concession and conciliation; now, when international law will not permit you to do this thing without setting a precedent that you dare not set among the nations of the earth, you are asked through the medium of incendiary declarations, both in and out of Congress, to precipitate not simply a war scare, but possibly actual hostilities with a nation which, while we may be able to overthrow her, will nevertheless inflict upon us the loss of precious American blood and the expenditure of large sums of money, and thus add to the financial burdens of a people already sufficiently taxed to maintain their Government and liquidate their national indebtedness.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I will let the gentleman ask me a question if he will approach me in an amiable manner and not in that belligerent mood with which he asks information even at the hands of his friends. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Is it not laid down in international law that any rebel government which has possession of the territory or the greater part of the territory of a country is entitled to recognition as a belligerent?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. It is not. The doctrine which the gentleman declares is entirely too narrow.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. That is laid down in the books.

Mr. KNOWLES. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. When you talk about the recognition of the Cuban Government as an independent state, what is there in her condition warranting it? The fact is this: That you are conjuring with a paper government; and when you come to international law, and invade the just rights of a parent government, that law inquires where is the president, where is the seat of government, where is the legislative body, where is the judiciary, where is the process of courts, running throughout the length and breadth of the domain, the judgments which it has rendered, or shown itself able to enforce? I say that that government is a mere myth, a mere government on paper, conjured up to justify gentlemen's actions.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. KNOWLES. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, there are two of the gentlemen who want to ask me questions. This is precisely one too many of them.

How happy could I be with either,
Were t' other dear charmer away!

Mr. KNOWLES. Did you not on April 6, 1896, vote for a resolution recognizing the belligerency of Cuba?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I have no recollection whether I did or did not. [Laughter.] But without waiting to know whether I did or not, if I did, I made a mistake which I now stand ready to rectify [applause], for I do not belong to that narrow-minded class of men who will preserve their individual consistency without any regard to where it leads them. I want also to say that if there is any other gentleman who voted in the same manner as I did, and if subsequent examination of affairs has convinced him that a similar vote now would be wrong, I hope he will have the moral courage to act in the light of changed conditions and existing surroundings and vote his present sentiments fearlessly.

New occasions teach new duties,
Time makes ancient good uncouth;
They must upward still, and onward,
Who would keep abreast of truth.

Mr. KELLEY. By what authority does the gentleman claim that the government of Cuba is a myth?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Simply because when you come down to the bottom facts and investigate the thing you find that the government of Cuba is lacking in many of those elements which entitle it to recognition. Even at this date it is very difficult to ascertain exactly what its status really is.

Mr. KELLEY. But when a gentleman, a Representative, a member of this House, goes to that country and makes an investigation and comes back here and says upon his word of honor what the conditions there are, would not the gentleman take that as an authority?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, there are some men whose very proximity to a subject makes it impossible for them to gain an adequate conception of it. One who stands at the very doors and under the very windows of a great building is often less capable of forming a correct idea as to its character and altitude than one who inspects it from a distance.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Will the gentleman state what line in the Republican platform that he has spoken of as ancient is it which he considers now uncouth?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The gentleman makes that "ancient good uncouth" by putting an improper construction upon it. I say that the man who will properly read that plank of the Republican platform and take it in connection with the construction given to it by a wise and patriotic President will, in view of the condition of existing affairs, see nothing in it which will now justify armed or forcible intervention in Cuba.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman kindly indicate whether or not there is any Spanish sovereignty upon five-eighths of the Cuban territory? Will the gentleman state one province where there is a court, where there is a collector of taxes, or where there is a magistrate to perform civil duty either in Santiago de Cuba or any of the provinces outside of the cities?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Spain, sir, is in possession of that portion of the island that is governed. Whatever of government there is there is under the auspices of Spain. This warfare upon the part of Cuba, however noble and patriotic it may be, however bold and intrepid it may be, is in point of fact a desultory warfare in its character. It is not carried on from the vantage ground of an established government, characterized by a chief magistracy, a legislative department, a recognized and operative judiciary, with powers running and judgments and decrees enforced.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. When Greece was struggling for her independence from Turkey, at the time when several European powers had recognized her belligerency, did she have any President or King or national legislature or judiciary—did she have anything except a military power for her people in arms?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I am not sufficiently conversant with the history of that struggle to answer the gentleman's question; but I believe international law will not now justify recognizing Cuba as an independent nation.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Will the gentleman from Indiana allow me one question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. If the gentleman approaches me in a kind and conciliatory manner, and in no belligerent spirit, I will. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Did not Sagasta, on May 9, 1896, in Madrid, say: "We have 200,000 troops in Cuba, and yet are not masters of the territory trodden by the soldiers. The picture can not be gloomier." Is not that enough to justify belligerency?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I do not know; suppose he did say so. I can imagine a condition of riot in a great city of this nation, in which the constituted authorities could say that they were not masters of the situation, and yet the rioters would not constitute a de facto municipal government. Mr. Chairman, the question whether the war in Cuba is successful or not has not been determined. The question is still in abeyance. Efforts are being made to stop the very bloodshed which you make the basis of your plea to have the United States intervene. And yet, I repeat, while these efforts are being made by Spain to adopt mild measures, you are asking this Government to step in and interfere.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have said far more than I intended to when I arose, but I have been drawn somewhat apart from the line of thought in my mind by these questions that gentlemen have asked me. I want, however, to put the thing in a nut shell at the close, even at the risk of being accused of too frequent repetition, and I want these gentlemen to reflect upon it. At our own solicitation, Spain has reversed her policy. She has stopped barbarous warfare, she has overturned the ministry that advocated it, and she has recalled the soldier who waged it. She has elevated to power a new ministry. She has put in command of her forces a man that wages war according to civilized methods.

She has conceded everything that this Government has asked of her in this line. She comes now holding out the olive branch of peace to the insurgents and asks them to accept it. She proffers them autonomy. It may not be such emancipation as we would prefer, but she is dealing with her own subjects, and it is certainly a great concession for her. You have no right to anticipate the failure of this new policy which has just been inaugurated, nor to pronounce it a failure until it has had a reasonable opportunity to be tried. To do this is to convict yourselves of insincerity and of bad faith; will be to offend one of the greatest nations on earth, a nation that has shown every disposition to consult your wishes and cultivate your favor. You will thus press her so far that at last you will inflame her, and you will then be powerless to stop the current that you have set in motion. You will do more to disarrange the business and impair the healthy development of your country than has been done by any act that has taken place upon the floor of this House since I have been a member of Congress. There is a wiser and safer course to be pursued. In the White House is a man who has seen service on the battlefield, who has served a long apprenticeship to legislation in this House, who has been the chief executive of one of the greatest States of this nation; a man who is something more than a mere politician, who possesses the attributes of a statesman, and who, ripe through long years of experience, is with a steady hand guiding the ship of state clear of breakers in this perplexed question.

He stands there representing the sovereignty, the dignity, and the honor of your country. He is ably seconded by our intelligent and level-headed consul at Habana. This Executive has pledged you his honor that if the time comes when it is expedient and right to intervene he will see to it that the ravages of war are stayed. Hands off, and leave him to select the proper time, to the end that our quarrel may be just.

I am making my plea both to my colleagues on this side of the Chamber and to my colleagues on the other side of the Chamber. This question is not a party one; it is of more consequence than a mere partisan question. All men, all parties, all sections of our common country are equally interested in its safe and righteous solution. There is every reason why we should be calm and restrain our haste. It is not improbable that if gentlemen will have the good sense and forbearance to keep their hands off of Cuban affairs the time will come when Cuba alone will work out her own salvation and gain on easier terms to us the boon they want to confer on her regardless of the woes they may inflict upon their own country.

Mr. BERRY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Yes, one more.

Mr. BERRY. What does the gentleman from Indiana propose to do with the 200,000 people on that island who General Lee, our consul, tells us are there starving to death?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I propose, as the President of the United States has already done, that we shall call upon the warm-hearted, generous, sympathetic American people to contribute out of their means for the purpose of alleviating this distress. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the man now in command of the Spanish army is not throwing any obstacles in the way of furnishing the people with supplies, but is willing to do all he can to aid in the distribution.

I want to say another thing before I close. You demand forcible intervention, at least recognition, because of the suffering and bloodshed of this Cuban conflict. Tell me something. Can you dissociate war with this condition? Where did you ever know a war to be waged in the world's history that has not been accompanied with all the evils about which you are now so sympathetic?

Is it not well enough for the Cubans to stop and calmly reflect when the olive branch is extended to them by Spain, to cease their hostilities at least long enough to hear what is being said to them in the way of pacification? Let us soberly ask ourselves whether or not the sentiment in this country which seeks to prolong these hostilities, which cares nothing for American interests and nothing for American lives in its anxiety to achieve its ends, had not better keep its mouth and its hand out of this controversy; whether it will not be better not only for Cuba but also for our own country, its progress and development, if we manifest a little common sense at this peculiarly troublesome juncture of our affairs.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I can not occupy the floor interminably; I must decline to submit to further questioning and will resume my seat.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Indiana, whether it is not true that within the lines of Gomez peace and order have been preserved and the transaction of business and the pursuit of agriculture promoted, while murder and anarchy prevail within those portions dominated by Spain?

Mr. HITT. The time just occupied by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] must be taken from the other side. I did not yield to him.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to incorporate in my remarks the article to which I referred as having appeared in this morning's Post.

Mr. KELLEY. I object.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Then I ask unanimous consent to have it read in the hearing of the House.

Mr. KELLEY. I withdraw my objection.

The article is as follows:

WHERE IS OUR PROVOCATION?

Mr. McKinley stands pledged to the country to take no step calculated to involve us in war, save under such provocation as will justify that step in the opinion of all patriotic and self-respecting men. It is a promise which crowns him and vindicates the wisdom of the American people who have chosen him as their Chief Magistrate.

The United States wants no war. Barring intolerable insult or encroachment, and apart from questions touching its dignity and honor, this nation has absolutely no disposition to depart from the practice of humanity and civilization and peace. Mr. McKinley has spoken for every element of enlightenment and responsibility in our population. He has spoken for the highest Christianity.

Now comes a thoughtless and hot-headed minority in Congress demanding of the President that he plunge us into war. The movement is given another name. It is clothed in the alluring garb of altruism and paraded as a noble effort of benevolence. But its meaning is war. Its only possible result is carnage, barbarism, disaster.

The advocates of this dread policy point to the ravages of war in Cuba—to the desolation, the famine, the blood and tears and misery now prevailing there—and clamor for action that will involve us in the same calamities. They claim that we must do this for the sake of charity. They outrage that high and holy sentiment by making it the pretext for a dispensation of barbarity and horror. Because men are dying and women and children starve and weep in Cuba we must invite death and wretchedness and ruin upon American homes and send our sons and brothers to the shambles. This, stripped of the flimsy gauze of oratory, is the hideous and ghastly paradox presented to us by the agitators.

What is the basis and what the inspiration of this mad endeavor? On the first day of the current month Spain inaugurated in Cuba the experiment of home rule. The policy had been urged upon the Madrid Government by our own. It was Spain's concession to the United States, and it bound us in common fairness and good faith to lend to the undertaking our cordial sympathy, our genuine cooperation. Spain gave even more than we had suggested. Whether she did this willingly or unwillingly, she did it. We have no right to impeach or to inquire into her motives.

In the constitution she now offers Cuba there is opportunity for a wise and satisfactory self-government by a people capable of employing their privileges intelligently. Some thirty-odd years ago we conferred the franchise upon a recently emancipated people—conferred it all too lavishly, as experience proved. Spain has avoided that improvident prodigality, but she has, none the less, been liberal. There is little if anything in the terms of the decree of Cuban autonomy to which a conservative and enlightened citizen of the island can take exception.

Spain has kept faith with us and with her subjects. Had England been as wise and generous in 1775, she would not have lost her colonies. But we are told now, less than three weeks after the inauguration of the scheme, that autonomy is a failure. We are told so by the insurgents, who represent an insignificant fraction of the population, by so-called sympathizers who want a prolongation of the war, by the irreconcilable Spaniards, who prefer annexation by the United States to the political supremacy of the Cubans, and by various others who have much to gain by agitation and nothing to lose by being wrong.

There has not been time enough to decide the merits of the most unimportant experiment, but in that time the self-appointed authorities have pronounced final judgment upon a great political reform—upon a plan of government involving the prosperity and happiness of a million souls. And this verdict men in Congress, charged with grave responsibility, intrusted with the destinies of a nation, accept without hesitation as a call to arms.

How sincerely they are acting may be inferred from the fact that one of them—one who has already declared his purpose of delivering a speech in favor of "recognition," or "intervention," or whatever else he may call it—has been heard to say in private conversation that for his part he does not regard the matter seriously or care about it in the very least. We may conclude from this that at least one war cry is inspired more by partisan ardor than by intelligent conviction. However that may be, the fact remains. All this clamor and protestation, no matter in what spirit manifested, leads on to war.

That is what it means—a call to arms. We must weigh it as such. We must examine well the path toward which it turns our steps. The President, his Cabinet, Congress, must consider their responsibilities. If we intervene in this miserable conflict now, we inflict upon a nation with which we are at peace, and which has just given us abundant proof of her esteem and confidence, a cruel and intolerable insult. We put upon her an indignity, a wanton affront which she can meet only with a tragedy. Shall we do it?

Shall we invoke a war out of which we may emerge with temporary success, perhaps, but inevitably with a burden of horror in the present and an appalling legacy of disastrous complication for the future? There is at stake no principle to the advocacy of which we are committed. If victims are starving in Cuba, shall we succor them by visiting the island with further desolation? If heroes there are struggling for personal liberty and the right of self-government, has not Spain offered them those blessings?

On what issue, honored in the sight of God or man, shall we bring death to our homes, injury to our commerce, paralysis to our civilization, and reproach to our unspotted flag? Mr. McKinley has declared that he will keep us in the paths of peace, save under provocation which every honorable and patriotic American citizen would wish him to resent. When and from what quarter and in what shape has that provocation been put upon us?

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, there has been no provision, I discover, to allow time to "the third party" in this House. I yield to the request of a representative of that party, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON], that he may have fifteen minutes.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I yield one minute, or two if desired, to my colleague from Kansas [Mr. BOTKIN].

Mr. BOTKIN. Mr. Chairman, I find that on the 6th of April, 1896, the following concurrent resolution was adopted in this House:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That, in the opinion of Congress, a condition of public war exists between the Government of Spain and the Government proclaimed and for some time maintained by force of arms by the people of Cuba; and that the United States of America should maintain a strict neutrality between the contending powers, according to each all the rights of belligerents in the ports and territory of the United States.

Resolved further, That the friendly offices of the United States should be offered by the President to the Spanish Government for the recognition of the independence of Cuba.

I find that this resolution was voted for by the distinguished gentleman from Indiana who has just taken his seat [Mr. JOHNSON], and also by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT].

A MEMBER (on the Republican side). We all voted for it.

Mr. BOTKIN. Yes, you all voted for it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I had forgotten that I voted for that resolution. My reasons for doing so have been incorporated in the remarks which I have just delivered.

Mr. BOTKIN. That was within two or three months—practically within two months—of the time when the Republican national convention adopted the following in its platform:

The Government of Spain having lost control of Cuba, and being unable to protect the property or lives of resident American citizens, or to comply with its treaty obligations, we believe that the Government of the United States should actively use its influence and good offices to restore peace and give independence to the island.

My contention is that the people of this country are interpreting this platform in the light of that concurrent resolution adopted two months before, and not in the light of the position taken by gentlemen on this floor, and the country will hold that party responsible for a change of front on this question.

A MEMBER. And a change of heart.

Mr. BOTKIN. Yes, a change of heart.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, for the second time in this Congress I am under great obligations to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] for granting me time when I was unable to get it from the other side of the House; and I want to extend to him my sincere thanks for his courtesy.

Mr. Chairman, I am not lying awake at night over the condition of Cuba. I have been fortunately situated, not alone in this Congress but during every term that I have served, in occupying a position somewhat between the two great political parties of the country. I have watched the political play of those two parties on this question, and I notice that when the Cleveland Democrats—I make this distinction in speaking of the Democratic party—when the Cleveland Democrats were in power and had the opportunity to recognize the belligerency of Cuba, they hesitated to do so.

Why? Simply because Mr. Cleveland and his Administration and his Cabinet were the agents, as I believe, to a certain extent of the bond-holding interests of the country, and the $400,000,000 of bonds that Spain has issued to carry on the Cuban war were the one great factor, or a great factor at least, in this contest about Cuba. It was my opinion then, and is now, that the Republican party will follow in the same line of action. In fact, they have inherited the policy that has come down to them from the Democrats when they were in power.

Mr. DINSMORE. Will the gentleman from Kansas allow me a suggestion?

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Yes, sir.

Mr. DINSMORE. The gentleman started out by expressing his obligations to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] for the privilege of speaking when he could not get an opportunity from this side. I merely want to remind my friend that I went to him voluntarily and proposed to try and arrange that he should have some time, but he said he hoped to get it from the other side.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Well, I will say that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], a member of the committee, offered me time yesterday, but I was not ready to occupy it and he gave it to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS]. To-day, when I wanted it, I was of course unable to get it from that side; and the gentleman from Illinois very kindly gave me time from the other side, for which I am, as I said, under great obligations to him.

I was about to say, Mr. Chairman, that in my opinion the bond-holding interest is to-day one of the great factors in this contest over Cuba. That bond-holding interest controls the action and policy of this Government as much as it did when Mr. Cleveland was in the White House; and no action will be taken on this subject until that bond-holding interest is guaranteed that whatever form of government may be set up in Cuba, the payment of those $400,000,000 of bonds will be secured.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] said at the extraordinary session, when this question was up, that in good time the Republican party would give the watchword, and the party would march in step and time to that keynote when it was given. Now, I want to make the prediction that that keynote will never be sounded, and the word will never be given until the bond-holding interest of the country and of the world gives its consent, and that consent will never be given until the payment of the bonds is guaranteed, because the revenues of Cuba are what the bond-holders must depend on for payment, if they look to Spain.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am more concerned about the condition and prosperity of our own people than I am about the people of Cuba, as much as I sympathize with them in their troubles. We ought to pass laws here which are for the good of our own countrymen. We have been endeavoring to pass a law restricting immigration. We go so far as to put in an educational qualification for foreign immigrants, and not to admit to our shore as a resident a person who can not read or write.

Now, if we should recognize the belligerency of Cuba, and should become involved in a war with Spain, we would not only have the expense and the horrors of a war, but at the same time we would admit to citizenship and to naturalization the inhabitants of Cuba, and thereby gain a large number of very undesirable citizens as a part of our population. As I said before, however, I am more concerned about the condition of my own country, and that condition should attract our attention.

You say that people are starving in Cuba; that they are suffering on account of privations and want and the condition of war that prevails. But if people are starving in Cuba, they are starving and suffering in this country also. Our own people demand legislation to relieve them from the conditions which surround them.

I know that when the Republican party came into power they proposed to cure all the evils under which we suffered; and the very first thing they did was to present a bill here and have it passed, one of the important results of which bill we were assured was to raise revenues "and to promote the industries of the country." Has it accomplished either? I contend that it has done neither the one nor the other. The revenues of the Government to-day are less, every month, than the expenditures. They are nearly $10,000,000 below the expenditures for the last month.

Every day of the year there is an average of a quarter of a million of dollars less going into the Treasury than is being paid out. As a "revenue getter" this bill is the most monumental failure which has been constructed in modern times. The amount of the indebtedness is steadily increasing, while the revenues are steadily diminishing.

Now, let us see for a moment about the effect of the bill in promoting the industries of the country. I quote from the Washington Evening Star of January 17 an article which I commend to the members of this body, and, in passing, I will say this is a Republican paper, always has been since I have known anything of it, and the most radical and ultra of its kind. Here is the article:

MILL HANDS STRIKE—OPERATIVES IN NEW ENGLAND COTTON FACTORIES RESIST REDUCTION—COMPLETE TIE-UP AT NEW BEDFORD—TROUBLE SPREADS TO BIDDEFORD AND LEWISTON (ME.) MILLS—FIFTEEN THOUSAND OUT.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS., January 17.

A shut down the most complete in the history of the cotton mills of New Bedford began this morning. Not a spindle was turning nor a loom in motion in the factories of the cloth corporations an hour after the usual time of beginning work.

Between forty and fifty operatives went into Bristol mill and twenty-five or thirty into the Whitman, but aside from these no mill made any show of running, and these two soon shut down. Nine corporations operating eighteen mills, in which upward of 9,000 hands are employed, are involved in the strike. The cut down is uniform all over the city—10 per cent. The total pay roll of these corporations is estimated at $70,000 weekly.

THE STRIKE AT BIDDEFORD, ME.

BIDDEFORD, ME., January 17.

Every department of the Pepperell and Laconia mills, in this city, and all the departments of the York mills in Saco, with the exception of the carding and mule spinning rooms, shut down to-day as a result of the decision of the operatives to resist a 10 per cent reduction in wages, which was to go into effect to-day.

The Dressers' Union, who are the leaders in the strike movement, had a meeting at 6.30 o'clock for the purpose of keeping the members away from the mill gates, and although most of the other operatives went into their rooms as usual, they came out again almost immediately, the gates, which are usually locked after 7 o'clock, being opened to allow them to leave the mills. At 8 o'clock every department of the Pepperell and Laconia mills was shut down, and 3,500 operatives and 200,000 spindles were idle.

At the York mills, in Saco, the weavers followed the example of the operatives on the Biddeford side of the river and remained out, and were followed by the slashers and ring spinners. It was then expected that others would come out and that the York mills would also be compelled to close. The cut at these mills is said to average 12 per cent. There are 1,500 operatives and 51,204 spindles. The management of the mills refuse to say what their policy will be regarding the action of the operatives.

ANDROSCOGGIN MILL SHUT DOWN.

LEWISTON, ME., January 17.

The operatives of all the mills here except those of the Androscoggin went to work as usual to-day under a reduction in wages of from 10 to 11 per cent. At the Androscroggin mill only 7 out of 400 weavers went to work. The reduction went into effect at the mills of the Continent and Androscoggin, Hill, Barber, and Bates corporations and at the Lewiston bleachery and dye works. The total weekly pay roll of these companies has been $43,000, about 5,750 operatives are employed, and the number of spindles aggregates 279,000.

And this "Lewiston" that is referred to here is the home of the framer of this bill. Here is the condition of affairs in his own county, in his own district, and his own town, and this is the result of a bill which promotes the industries of the American people.

The article goes on and refers to other points, as follows:

STRIKE EXPECTED AT WOONSOCKET.

WOONSOCKET, R. I., January 17.

The 2,300 people employed in the Social, Globe, and Nourse mills of the Social Manufacturing Company and the Clinton mill, in this city, went to work at reductions of wages averaging, it is stated at the offices of the mills, about 10 per cent. The cut has been accepted without any concerted movement toward a strike, but there are murmurings and protests in a number of instances, and fears are felt that trouble may yet arise.

CUT ACCEPTED AT WORCESTER.

WORCESTER, MASS., January 17, 1898.

A reduction in wages of about 10 per cent went into effect to-day at the Linwood Cotton Mills and Whitinsville Cotton Mills in Northbridge, the Uxbridge Cotton Mills at North Uxbridge, and the Saundersville Cotton Mills at Saundersville, Grafton.

All are owned by Whitin Bros., of Whitinsville. About 62,000 spindles are running, and 1,000 hands employed. The Fisherville Manufacturing Company also cut wages about 10 per cent, where about 450 hands are at work.

The operatives at all of these mills have quietly submitted to the cut down, and went to work as usual to-day. The mills are among the best in the Blackstone Valley and make fine and fancy goods. The weavers have been making from $8 to $12 per week, with an average of $9. Under the new schedule the average will be about $8 per week.

Now, if this bill is to promote the industries of the country—if it was ever going to accomplish that end—it seems to me that it has had a sufficient time to develop efficacy in that direction. It ought to have done so certainly in the New England States, if nowhere else. That it has not done so is evident. Here is another little article to which I ask your attention:

25,000 IDLE BRICKLAYERS AND MASONS.

PEORIA, ILL., January 16, 1898.

The convention of the Bricklayers and Masons' International Union is getting down to business, now that the committees are completing their work. The total membership is reported at 56,396, of whom but 31,630 are employed. For beneficial purposes $280,515 had been expended, and there is $83,376 in the treasury. The establishment of a national home for indigent members is favored.

This shows that 50 per cent of the bricklayers of the country are out of work.

But that is not all. I hold in my hand a copy of a paper published in my own State, which quotes an article from the Springfield Republican which is worthy of consideration. I commend it to our friends who claimed so much prosperity for this new law:

A New Haven shopgirl describes "prosperity" in the Springfield (Mass.) Republican as follows: "Within three years my weekly wages in a dry-goods store have been cut from $8 to $3, and my case is one of many. The wages paid to female help in the stores of this city have fallen steadily since this year opened, until at last they are so small they will not buy sufficient food." This girl has also to support her mother, pay rent, feed and clothe two persons on $3 a week. She inquires: "If it is a fact that prosperity is returning, why are wages steadily reduced?" And finally she asks: "On this Thanksgiving eve I plead for a rescue from this misery. With all the money spent in this city isn't there profit enough to at least keep body and soul together?"

Now, while gentlemen are pleading so eloquently on this floor for the suffering citizens of Cuba, and telling us of the distress prevailing there, is there no word to be spoken in defense of our own citizens who are also suffering? I think there is ample opportunity to display American statesmanship in regard to the enactment of laws which will give our own people a better Government and better condition, instead of devoting so much time to the Island of Cuba.

I can readily understand why parties while out of power are aggressive and all of that, and would take advantage of such things and put into their platforms planks such as the Republicans have put into theirs, and on which they are standing to-day. The gentlemen who form the platform are always adroit enough to frame them so as to catch the "suckers" on election day. [Laughter.] But they always leave a hole big enough—in this case it did not require a very big one—for the Republican party to get out of the obligations it had promised to the people.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am one of those who believe that a party should adhere to its obligations and promises made to the people, and upon which it was elected. I do not think a party ought to go before the country on a platform calculated to deceive the people for the purpose of catching voters, and therefore I think the Republican party should be held to a strict account and responsibility, requiring it to fulfill all of the obligations made in the campaign through its platform.

Therefore, if an opportunity was offered, I for one would vote with the Republicans to help them fulfill their pledges in regard to Cuba. But they are not going to give us an opportunity. I pointed out in the extra session that one man directed the course of this House. We are no longer a legislative and representative body. No measure can pass this House without the consent of the Speaker. As I said before, he is the whole thing. He is Congress, and Representatives of great districts of the United States come here and find themselves powerless to make any motion or present or call up any bill looking to the interest and welfare of their section of the country without the consent of the Speaker.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD a clipping from the Washington Star, containing a statement of the condition of labor in these different States.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to print certain clippings in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE] if he can not give the gentleman from Kansas five minutes more? I should be very grateful for that favor myself.

Mr. DINSMORE. I can not give it without depriving some gentleman to whom it is promised. I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended, however, in order that the gentleman from Kansas may have five minutes. I ask unanimous consent that the vote may be taken at five minutes after 4 instead of at 4 o'clock.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the chairman of the committee wants to get his bill through to-night, I will not further encroach upon the courtesy or good nature of the House.

Mr. DINSMORE. I will yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Kansas if he wishes to proceed.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I do not care to proceed now. I am obliged to the gentleman from Arkansas for his courtesy.

Mr. DINSMORE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the subject now under consideration is not new to the country or to the members of this House, very unfortunately to the people of Cuba, native and American, we have had this subject pressed upon us by red lines of blood, by loss of commerce, by wicked cruelty and devastation, till American patriotism rises and demands a recognition of Cuban rights.

For three long years. this time; and for ten years before the Cubans fought for freedom, and for three years now has this country gazed idly and stupidly on a scene of carnage, ruin, and death in our own immediate vicinity and presence, and denied a helping hand to these determined people. Why longer delay?

For many months this country has been ripe for action. Representatives in Congress, curbed by their patient wait for official information, have several times crystallized their judgment by unofficial and newspaper reports from the doomed and ravished districts, while the friends of Spain have each time doubted and discredited, till in the special session of Congress the Administration, longer unable to withstand the force of public opinion, revealed its secrets and confirmed the information long before secured.

In less than two days after the receipt of that official information, the Senate, with commendable patriotism, passed a joint resolution recognizing the Cubans as belligerents, and it has hung like Mohammed's coffin for months amid the entangling and mystifying rules of the House of Representatives. Not only was the action of the Senate in accord with party declarations in conventions, but it was in consonance with an enlightened sense of justice and humanity and perfectly consistent with the rules of international law.

With sentiment, justice, law, to guide us to action, should we yet longer delay? Should we not at once change the policy in Cuba from rude, barbaric, brute force and violence, without rules, to the rules of civilized warfare?

The Cubans are doing no more than we would do ourselves; no more than what our sires did do when they opposed the tyranny of England—threw off the yoke and made it possible in the Western World to have a continent of the free. They seek, as we did, to throw off the yoke of oppression and assume among the powers of the earth those rights to which the laws of nature and nature's God entitle them.

Does not the history of the ten years of disorders there before—does not this outbreak—establish that the spark of liberty there was not born to die?

Why, then, longer withhold our encouragement? The last Administration, too slow to act itself, "marshaled us the way that we were going," and outlined such a policy as we should pursue; but the Cleveland December message was seen to come and go; his Administration expired, and no time was fixed.

This Administration, declaring the facts which to my mind indicate a state of war in Cuba, on the 17th of last May sent to Congress a message to tell us that from 600 to 800 Americans were perishing on that fertile island that should flow with milk and honey; that Americans, driven from their homes in the country like sheep to the shambles, were immured in the cities without shelter, food, or raiment; Americans, who ought to have a guaranty of rights to breathe the air of that island, to live and move and have their being, are huddled together in pestilence-breeding towns and cities, and, escaping from the wrath of the sword and bullet, they are forced into the jaws of famine and disease.

For over two long years these scenes of carnage and destruction of life and property have been passing before us, two-thirds of the imports to this country from there gone and lost, three-fourths of our exports vanished, brutality, bloodshed, torture, and death "rushes red on our sight," no protection to Americans or their interests, no payment of losses from the bankrupt treasury of this effete and declining dynasty, and yet we are sometimes told that there is no God of Israel to guide us to the performance of our patriotic Christian duty. "O Judgment, thou hast fled to brutish beasts and men have lost their reason." No war in Cuba? Why, then, ask these extraordinary supplies? Why call upon this whole country for contributions for starving men? Representations of facts made, upon which it was urged that we vote this large sum of $50,000 in May to feed the hungry and clothe the naked and destitute Americans, only 90 miles across the water, so many of our people there without the guaranty of any protection to property, to honor, to life, and yet some say in their hearts there is no war.

By what standard are we to judge of war? By the number of soldiers engaged? If so, then 200,000 sent to Cuba or engaged there in three years should establish the fact. Is it to be determined by the fact of deaths, cruelties, starvation, and miseries? Under this standard the proof is made. Will you wait to say it till conflicting Governments are shown? Will you wait till loss of trade and danger to life and property and liberty of our own countrymen appear? If so, the time is ripe for action. Two hundred thousand humans already dead and in Cuban graves, 200,000 Spanish soldiers in Cuba to quell a disturbance that antijingoes say exists only in the imagination of a few weak and designing individuals of the press and in the Congress of the United States.

After three long years we find the promise of Spain to put down the rebellion unfulfilled. All students of history have lived long enough and know her history well enough to measure the distance between her promises and performance, words and acts. We have seen the agent of her tyrannical rule march across the island, leaving behind him, like the fiery meteor of night, a great red trail of blood. We have seen him gloat in satisfaction over an unvanquished foe. We have seen him return to safe retreats, immure the citizens, the objects of his vengeance, in towns and cities, and, fleeing from fire, sword, and ravishment, we have seen them driven to starvation and death.

Is not this the retribution presaged by the Spanish Minister De Lôme's letter to Secretary of State Olney, between the diplomatic lines of which is written the exasperation of Spain at the action of some of our citizens and the slowness of our Government to aid her in this unholy struggle against a people on whose necks she wishes still to hold the tyrannical yoke? Read that letter, and, with the well-known Spanish character, do we not incur greater risks and complications by delay than would have come by a prompt recognition of the belligerency of the Cubans? Every day is fraught with greater danger. The interest of our trade, the safety of our people, warrant it; humanity demands it, not to speak of the eternal principles of patriotism and human liberty, which enforce our duties upon us.

Is it consistent with our interests that a revolution within 90 miles of our shores should continue for three long, bloody years, and can we be compelled to submit in patience to the disturbance and disorders the natural outgrowth of such conditions? Have we not rights as sacred as those of Spain, which, after three years of vain trial to regain a lost star in her wasting diadem, still shows with dogged persistency her inability?

Though our Government has till now recognized the right of Spain to rule the island, we have never recognized her right, by ravishment and death, to dishonor and deplete its population, to drive our citizens from their daily walks of life to nakedness, starvation, and death.

A great duty devolves upon us, not only to the people so near us, but we owe a duty to ourselves, to our country, to our God. For these years patriotic hearts have fought for liberty, and tyranny 200,000 strong has sought to restrain and conquer, till to-day the eyes of nations are upon us, the eyes of trembling natives, 500,000 strong, with liberty kindled in their breasts, but hands not strong enough to strike—their eyes are upon us. All look this way to see if we will relapse into the pusillanimity of cowardice or assert our dignity and strength by a bold stroke of policy. Under the law of nations we only need the facts, first, of the existence of war; second, that our interests are affected.

Both are proven by the flood of light shed on these questions, by every source of legitimate news, and proven as conclusively as fact was ever proven in a court of law. Our efforts at mediation were met with a tone of complaint, that our Government had not done all it ought to smother the rebellion. The last Administration, full of tolerance, gave notice to the country and to Spain that a time would come when we would take action in Cuban affairs.

Sir, I would not stir the mind of any man to mutiny and rage, but if we fail to do our duty to suffering humanity, fighting for freedom, starving for freedom, murdered for freedom, sacrificing themselves in one of the most heroic battles ever fought by man for liberty, facing and meeting their fate, and shot like dogs for freedom—if, sir, under these conditions this free and liberty-loving people, through their Representatives assembled in this Capitol, does not stretch out its arm across the Gulf to rescue these patriots from the iron hand of that tottering monarchy, then I say, tear down your Capitol and let the plowshare run through the soil on which it rests, rather than let it stand as an emblem of a patriotic and enlightened people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The scheme of autonomy, conceived as it was in insincerity, unsanctioned by the organic law of Spain, with no safeguards of security for Cuba, will fail. The Cubans at the end of the ten years' war reluctantly entered into a treaty with Spain, nearly every provision of which was violated by the mother country, and the few that were observed were kept only upon the demand of the Government of the United States.

The loss of Cuba to Spain will be her gain. With the spirit of revolution permeating its people, Cuba will never be more profitable to Spain than were the American colonies in revolt to the British Crown. With all hope of profit swept away, nothing remains for Spain but the wasting of millions to preserve an empty honor, based upon an antiquated fiction of state pride, the breach of which would be far more profitable than the observance to this ancient, crumbling monarchy. Nor ought her pride be thus wounded, judging from the history of the past, by the loss of this fertile but incorrigible island.

In 1800 Spain possessed two-thirds of the present area of the United States, all of Mexico and Central America, and all of South America except Brazil and the Guianas; in all, 7,000,000 square miles. To-day all has passed from her possession save and alone Cuba, that will, and Puerto Rico. All the rest mark the decadence of her waning soldiery and waning powers.

This hemisphere, Mr. Chairman, is dedicated to freedom, and since Dom Pedro was driven from his throne, without bloodshed, by a loving people, who loved not Dom Pedro less but liberty more, it can be said of America that no monarch save he that grants the greatest liberty to the people can hold a place in this continent, and none can sit here on a throne. England would not treat her colonies as Cuba has been treated; no other country would, and this country at this day can not encourage a custom of State pride, honorable though it may be claimed to be, for it is built upon false principles. It never stood upon a solid foundation and never had a place in the progressive philosophy of this locomotive age and country. Glancing across the countries of North and South America, nations of free people greet our eyes, but none shine out with the splendor, the magnificence of that of our country.

We, then, must take the lead; we must acknowledge the belligerency of Cuba, and if necessary go yet even further than that.

Patriotic citizens in name must rise to the dignity of patriotic citizens in fact.

If members on that side ask why action is desired now, the answer is found in your platform and in ours, in the appeals to this country for universal charity to feed the hungry of Cuba. It is found in the 200,000 graves filled with Cubans there as the results of cruel and unholy war. Members of this Congress, "you are not wood, you are not stone, but men; and, being men," listen to the calls of your constituents, listen to the demands of humanity!

We are a just and a proud nation. Let us be yet prouder still. Let us not only do our duty to Americans, but to all humanity, and save the immortal glory of the American name. [Applause on Democratic side.]

Mr. DINSMORE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, probably it is advisable to state in precise terms the nature of the controversy before the House. What is it that the Cubans ask? Do they ask us to intervene? They have never asked it. Do they ask us to make war on Spain? They have never thought of such a thing. What do they ask? They ask us to recognize the insurgent forces as a belligerent power; that is all. And what benefits would the Cubans derive from such a course on our part? A day or two ago I read in the RECORD an eloquent answer to this question.

It was part of a speech delivered in this House by the present chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs [Mr. HITT]. I commend that speech to every Republican in this House, including the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, as one which every American citizen can afford to stand upon. Substantially he told his colleagues and the country that it would place the Spaniards and the Cubans upon an equality on sea and land, giving to the parties access to American ports and American markets on terms of equality; and that this done, the brave Cubans would speedily achieve liberty and independence.

Early in the history of the Cuban revolution there arose between Congress and the executive department of the Government a sharp conflict of opinion as to the duty of this Government in the premises. This conflict of opinion still exists. Over two years ago Congress, by almost a unanimous vote, passed a resolution favoring the recognition of the insurgent forces as a belligerent power. The Executive then insisted and now insists upon treating the revolutionary forces as mere rioters, without standing or achievements sufficient to justify their recognition as belligerents. The retirement of Mr. Cleveland and the installation of a new President brought no change in the Government's Cuban policy, so the question now before this House is the identical question acted upon in so decisive a manner by Congress two years ago.

Those who regard it as the duty of the United States to extend recognition to the Cuban patriots insist that a condition of public war exists on the island; that for over three years the Cuban forces have successfully kept the field against superior numbers; that the revolutionary army has gained constantly in numbers, discipline, and equipments, and to-day stands as an impassable wall of fire against the aggression of the Spanish legions.

The President and his supporters, while not denying that the Spaniards have failed to make any headway, while admitting that the insurgents, by force of arms, have for three years held possession of a large portion of the island, contend that this is not enough. They insist that the establishment of a permanent form of government and the organization of the civil state in all its details is necessary to justify the recognition of the Cuban revolutionary government as a belligerent power. No such principle is laid down by the great writers; not a line or a syllable in any work on international law supports this monstrous proposition. In the near future I shall seek an opportunity to discuss this branch of the question and present to the House a compilation of the authorities bearing upon it.

But let us concede, for the purposes of this discussion, that the law has been correctly stated by gentlemen who insist that before the Cuban authorities can be recognized as a belligerent power they must have a thoroughly organized government, located at a permanent capital, with competent tribunals for the administration of justice and the preservation of order. Even judged by this standard, the Cuban Government can challenge comparison of the conditions existing under the flag of the republic with those prevailing in the region dominated by the Spaniards.

Within the insurgent lines noncombatants and women and children are in no danger of harm. The husbandman tills his fields; the shepherd attends his flocks; the shopkeeper sells his wares; the peaceful folk are unvexed by robbers and secure from false imprisonment or assassination. In regions under Spanish subjection murder, robbery, rapine are systematically practiced by the officers and soldiery of the Spanish Government. Within the insurgent lines are due respect for the rights of noncombatants and regard for the sacred persons of women and children. Under the Spanish flag butchered peasantry, defiled womanhood, the consignment of thousands to death from starvation, the desolation of the desert, and the gloom of the grave tell a story of brutality unparalleled in the annals of Christian nations.

Under such circumstances how puerile, how shameless is the pretense that this brave people have not long ago achieved a standing entitling them to recognition as belligerents. The members of this House know that such a contention is a travesty upon reason. By an overwhelming majority it has so declared, and if, somehow, the shambles that bind it could be cut it would so declare again. But, Mr. Speaker, of what value are our opinions, when, in disregard of the expressed will of the American people, in the teeth of Congressional action demanding the recognition of belligerency, two Presidents have enforced a policy constituting this Government an active partner of Spain in the prosecution of the war? During all the years of Cuba's desperate struggle for liberty the Spaniards have been allowed to purchase in our markets arms, munitions of war, provisions, clothing—everything essential to the vigorous prosecution of the war—while every power at the command of the Government of the United States has been used to prevent the Cuban patriots from exercising the same privilege. Our coasts, from New York to New Orleans, have been patrolled by war ships, at an expense of millions, to prevent vessels laden with supplies for the Cuban army from leaving our ports. Thus have we performed for the Spaniards services they could not have performed for themselves, for it is notorious that Spain's navy is impotent—that once a filibuster gets clear of American cruisers it cheerily pursues its way and arrives safely at its destination.

Mr. Speaker, what the Cubans pray for, what the Americans demand, is that this partnership between the Spanish butchers and the American Republic shall terminate. Hands off and a fair fight is all that is asked, and to refuse this presents to the world a spectacle disgraceful to the Republic. The ships of the Spaniards welcomed to our ports and going hence laden with implements of destruction, forged by Americans, to be used by the butchers charged with the extermination of a race, while American men-of-war continually search the seas, ready to pounce upon the frail craft that carry scant succor to the bravest of the brave—the unclad heroes who, under Cuba's colors, have dedicated their lives irrevocably to the cause of liberty! Freedom's emblem—the Stars and Stripes—signaling friendly salutation to the flag of the Spanish assassins, while the ban of outlawry is laid upon the banner for which Maceo died and under which Gomez is fighting for the liberation of his country! [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HITT. I yield to the gentleman from Maine such time as he desires.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, during the progress of this debate liberty has been taken by gentlemen on the other side to diverge from the subject or subjects kindred to the appropriation bill under consideration, and several gentlemen have taken occasion especially to comment on the depressed condition of the cotton manufacturing industry in New England during the past thirty days. One gentleman has gone so far as to state that the cotton industry of this country was prosperous under former tariffs, and now, under the new tariff, wage reductions are in order, conveying the impression that this result is due to our new tariff.

It is important, Mr. Chairman, in examining a subject of this character, to understand exactly the industrial conditions. In the past six months nearly every industry in this country, with the exception of the cotton industry, has undeniably improved in condition.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And it has improved in condition in the South.

Mr. DINGLEY. In the South, the gentleman tells us, the cotton industry has improved in the last six months; and I am glad that he admits that that is the fact, for I doubt not it is true that the cotton industry in the South is flourishing, while the same industry is not flourishing at this moment in New England. Every industry except one has improved in all parts of the country. First, in the volume of business done; secondly, in the opportunities opened for labor, and thirdly, even to some extent in the increase of wages, although an increase of wages comes as the result of increased opportunities for labor.

Mr. HUNTER. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. DINGLEY. I prefer not to be interrupted just now. After I conclude, I will yield to questions.

Of course, after such a revulsion of business as we have had during the past three years, recuperation must be slow, inevitably; but that the process of recuperation has begun is evident in nearly every direction but one. Alongside the announcement of a reduction of wages in the cotton industry, in Rhode Island for example, comes information of an increase of wages in the worsted industry of the same State.

While in every direction except the cotton industry the evidences of improvement are unquestionable, yet our friends upon the other side overlook the thousand proofs of recuperation and seize upon the reverses that are taking place in the cotton industry to illustrate the point of view from which they survey the industrial situation of the country.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. In view of the fact that there is protection on every other industry which has permitted this——

Mr. DINGLEY. I prefer not to be interrupted at the present time.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I shall not insist if the gentleman objects.

Mr. DINGLEY. I hope the gentleman will do me the courtesy to endeavor to preserve silence.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I do not blame the gentleman.

Mr. DINGLEY. There is another illustration of the candor of the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, it is evident that some exceptional circumstances have arisen which have caused the reverses in the cotton industry—conditions which exist in no other industry. Let us for a moment endeavor to examine and ascertain what these exceptional conditions are.

First, I want to call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that there has been a sudden and unexampled decline in the price of cotton of nearly 33⅓ per cent within a few months, arising entirely from the fact that the planters of the South have persisted in growing perhaps one or two millions of bales more cotton than the world wants for its consumption during the year. Bear in mind that 70 per cent of the cotton production of the world is in the United States.

The production of the United States fixes the price of cotton for the world, and when the planters of the South grow one or two millions more bales of cotton than the world wants, with the pressure for sales that follows, the price falls. The mistake is in not having a more diversified agriculture in the South, so that the production of cotton beyond the world's wants shall not take place and the price of what is grown may be remunerative. Whenever there is put upon the market any article so largely in excess of the world's needs, the price must fall under the economic law, which is above statute law and can not be set aside.

Now, what was the condition of the cotton manufacturing industry at the time that great fall in cotton took place? A decline took place in a brief period from about 8 cents to below 6 cents. As a large proportion of the mills in New England produce goods from six to eight months ahead and hold them in stock, they were caught when cotton fell with goods to that extent made from 8-cent cotton. The buyers, finding cotton had declined to 6 cents, naturally went into the market and demanded cotton goods at the price at which cotton goods could be made with 6-cent cotton. Immediately sales stopped in New England, and Southern mills took the market until Northern mills were compelled to yield. The result was that all the cotton mills in the country that had goods piled up found themselves with immense losses. That was the situation of nearly every mill in New England. They were caught with eight months' stock of goods on hand made out of 8-cent cotton, and the buyer demanding goods made of 6-cent cotton.

This involves the loss of millions inevitably. But that of itself would have been temporary and would have been soon overcome by the mills pocketing the loss, if that had been all there was in the case. What else came in? It so happens that during the past ten years the cotton industry, which had been concentrated so largely in New England until within ten years, has been growing rapidly in the South—properly so, and to the gratification of every right-minded citizen. The growth of the cotton industry in the South has been unexampled. Before it was hardly recognized it was found that the addition to the cotton spindles of this country—largely in the South—had exceeded the demands of the country for cotton goods. That, however, of itself would have been soon adjusted if the basis of competition between the South and New England had been uniform. And here is where the trouble in New England has arisen.

It so happens that wages in Southern mills—of labor which had not before enjoyed an opportunity of entering manufacturing industries—are lower than they are in New England. I have here the report of the committee of the Arkwright Club—the cotton manufacturers' association of New England—that investigated this question of comparative wages, and it will be seen that the wages of the South for the time being are from 20 to 30 per cent less than the wages in New England. And the labor employed in cotton mills of the South is white labor of excellent material. Northern capital went down South rapidly and took advantage of this cheaper labor.

In due time, by ordinary economical processes in the development of the South, the introduction of new machinery and new methods of industry will bring the wages of labor in the South up to the wages in New England. But they have not done it as yet, although wages are slowly rising there.

That is not all. In New England every State has labor laws, and these labor laws restrict the hours of daily labor for women and children to ten hours per day, in some States to fifty-eight hours per week, and the restriction of the hours of labor of women and children in factories determines the number of hours that the factory can run. In New England in no State can any factory, in consequence of these labor laws, run over ten hours a day except for a few days under exceptional circumstances. But in no one of these Southern States, under Democratic control, is there a labor law that undertakes to limit the hours of daily labor, with a possible exception of one or two States, and the result is——

Mr. FLEMING. Will the gentleman allow me? The State of Georgia has a labor law that limits labor to eleven hours a day.

Mr. WILSON. And I want to say to the gentleman from Maine that the State of South Carolina has a law that limits the hours of labor to eleven hours a day.

Mr. DINGLEY. Very well. We will assume that it is eleven hours in all the Southern States, although I believe the hours are twelve in most Southern States. You see at once that cotton mills in States that have cotton factories with lower wages of labor temporarily—for these wages are going to rise at the South,—with 10 to 20 per cent longer hours have a temporary advantage over similar mills in the States of New England, where wages are from 20 to 30 per cent higher and where the days of labor are restricted to ten hours instead of eleven or twelve.

It was inevitable when this fall of cotton came that brought such a loss upon the mills that had stocks on hand, with these conditions of laoor at the South—temporary, as I believe, for, rest assured, gentlemen, the States of New England will not repeal their labor laws and extend the time of labor in cotton mills to eleven hours, but the Southern States will come up to the standard of New England—that while this temporary advantage of the South continues the cotton industry of the North will be greatly hampered.

There is no mystery about this matter. A protective tariff can not reach and equalize competition between different parts of the same country; it does not profess to do it; it simply reaches and equalizes competition from other countries. There is no competition from other countries in the common cotton goods made in this country, as protective duties prevent it except on the basis of our wages. The competition which New England and the North meets in such goods comes solely from the South at present, and arises from the exceptional conditions of which I have spoken. But these conditions will not continue. All parts of a common country will eventually be reached by the same economic laws; wages will be elevated at the South permanently by and by, and not depressed permanently at the North.

I think it is a serious mistake for Representatives of the South, who desire to improve their economic conditions, to forget that there can be no progress except as it is based on an improvement in the standard of living and an improvement in the earnings of the masses.

It is true that this cotton industry—concentrated as it has been in New England—is to-day suffering a severe blow. This blow for the time being involves, unfortunately, and it is claimed necessarily, a temporary return to the wages of 1893–1895, for the reduction that is now being made throughout New England is simply a reduction to the basis of 1893–1895—the increase having been made in 1895, when it was supposed that business was about to improve; but it did not.

Now, it is said that the tariff has something to do with this. The tariff, so far as it is based on the protective idea, deals simply, as I have said, with competition from abroad. We do not have competition from abroad on these coarse goods with respect to which the difficulty has arisen. The competition is only from the South; and it is serious at the present time because of the fact that the standard of wages at the South is lower than that of New England and the hours of daily labor are longer. And it ill becomes those whose legislation allows eleven or twelve hours per day in the mills of the Southern States to rise here and reprove the conditions in New England, where no factory can run longer than ten hours per day.

You men of the South ought, for your own interests, to bring down your hours of daily labor to the standard which exists in New England, and not put upon us conditions which in the minds of many seem to afford no escape except by coming down to your standard. The remedy is to lift your standard, not to depress ours. While temporarily these conditions have, as is claimed, forced upon New England mills a reduction of wages, yet I hope that these conditions are temporary, and that in good time wages at the South will be lifted and the hours of daily labor shortened, and thereby a full remedy be provided.

I wish to call attention, Mr. Chairman, to another fact. The cotton schedule of the existing tariff as to all common cotton goods—the class of goods now in dispute—is precisely the same as the cotton schedule of the tariff of 1894; one is identical with the other, and both are thoroughly protective. Hence there have been no changed conditions created by tariff legislation. There have been no changed conditions created as to our ability to export goods. We are exporting an increasing quantity of goods instead of a decreasing quantity; the coarsest goods to be sure, yet no difficulty has arisen in that respect.

The difficulty comes from internal competition which can not be reached by tariffs, but ought to be reached by lifting the wages of competing Southern mills and shortening the hours of labor there to the standard of the North, as will be done ultimately. Progress in that direction can not be set back; for the laws which bind the people of this country, all the tendencies of our institutions, tend to the gradual increase of the earnings of the masses, upon which prosperity depends. I rejoice in the success of Southern cotton mills, but I want their success to be based on wages as good as those paid in the North and on legislative action that provides for no longer hours of daily labor. Whatever advantages, if any, they have from natural conditions are legitimate and proper.

I think that very likely this crisis would have been postponed for a year, perhaps two years, perhaps longer, if it had not been for this sudden and unexampled fall in the price of cotton, arising from the production of a crop far beyond the demands of the world. Difficulties like this will occasionally come; they can not be provided against by legislation or by any Executive action, or by any working of the law of supply and demand. But in due time this difficulty will be corrected. The lesson of the past year, showing the results of raising more cotton than the world wants, will not be lost next year; consequently the price will inevitably rise. But such an unexampled fall in cotton in so short a time has never been encountered by this industry before. There have been falls as great as this, but they have been spread over a more extended period.

Mr. Chairman, it was not my purpose to discuss this question, especially on this bill; but the use that is attempted to be made of an exceptional condition as to one industry has compelled a statement of facts that are open to every investigator. When gentlemen on the other side undertake to say that the condition as to this particular industry (all other industries having improved) shows that the protective system is a failure, they simply draw a conclusion without any warrant of facts. The protective system is a success so far as it is intended to apply—namely, to competition with foreign countries. It never was designed to reach, and never can possibly reach, competition between different parts of the same country. And there must in due time be by State laws an equalizing of the hours of daily labor in our factory system.

When the mills in certain portions of this country manufacturing cotton goods, textiles, or other articles can run longer hours under the legislation of particular States than the mills in other portions of the country, then there arises at once a competition that has a tendency to drag down rather than to lift up; and if, in the long run, there is no equalizing of these conditions of labor by State legislation, assuredly the labor organizations of this country will insist on such an amendment to the Constitution as will enable Congress to equalize the hours of labor in the factories throughout this country. [Applause.]

My friend from New Jersey [Mr. STEWART] says that in his State the hours of labor are fixed for women and children at not more than fifty-five hours per week, and that this legal regulation determines the time during which the factories can run.

Mr. WILSON. Will the gentleman from Maine allow me to ask a question?

Mr. DINGLEY. Does it relate to the point that I am now discussing?

Mr. WILSON. Directly on that point.

Mr. DINGLEY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WILSON. Does not the length of the hours of labor bear upon the amount of the product rather than upon the cost of the product?

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman knows in an industry like the cotton industry, where the work is done by machinery, the production is practically determined by the time that the machinery is run. The production is increased within the limits of the extension of the hours of labor, provided they do not go beyond the point of endurance. In other words, the character and speed of machinery practically determine the product.

Mr. WILSON. The amount of the product of a factory is determined by the hours of labor in the factory, and the cost of the product is the same as if the hours were distributed over the various days that the factory is in operation.

Mr. DINGLEY. I will not undertake to discuss that question with the gentleman. I have here the report of the committee of the Arkwright Club, which goes fully into these questions, and which I ask the permission of the House to insert in my remarks. The report deals with the entire subject, and shows the difference in the labor cost of production in cotton mills of the South and of New England. It deals with the question of daily and weekly wages, and shows the average labor cost per pound of production. That will touch the point to which the gentleman is referring, as I understand him.

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him at this point?

Mr. DINGLEY. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES. You have not made any allusion to the fact that the cotton is grown in the neighborhood of the mills. You do not take into consideration the fact that the mills are established practically in the cotton fields of the South, where the cost of transportation is entirely eliminated.

Mr. DINGLEY. That was supposed years ago to give important advantages to this industry in the Southern States. But experience has demonstrated the fact that it does not give any special advantage. That point is considered in this report, which I will print with my remarks.

Mr. GAINES. How is it, then, that so many of the Eastern mills are going there and locating?

Mr. DINGLEY (continuing). In other words, whatever is gained in the saving of transportation on the raw material is lost in the transportation of the manufactured goods, and so practically these amounts equalize each other.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. DINGLEY. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. Is it not a fact that so many more yards of cotton goods are consumed in the milder climate of the Southern States, at the point of production, that the saving in transportation of the raw material is an essential item, as compared with the products of the mills in the extreme eastern part of the country?

Mr. DINGLEY. But the gentleman is aware, certainly, of the the fact that nearly all of the goods manufactured, either in the South or the East, are sent to the great centers of trade for distribution.

Mr. BAILEY. But these goods must be consumed amongst the masses of the people; and in the Southern States—in the milder climate there—the larger proportion is consumed by the people who live in those States, at the point of production.

Mr. DINGLEY. A very large proportion of the cotton goods manufactured in the South, just as in the New England States, is transported first to New York and from there distributed according to the demands of trade.

Mr. BAILEY. That depends on what the gentleman calls "a large proportion." It is true that some of the goods manufactured in Southern mills find their way to New York, and it is true in some cases that freight may be paid both ways. But as a general rule it does not apply to goods manufactured in the Southern cotton mills.

Mr. DINGLEY. Well, the committee on the part of the Arkwright Club tell us that in their opinion cheaper labor and long hours and what they call freedom from legislative interference are the principal advantages of the South. They state that the other advantages the gentleman claims are unimportant and of doubtful value.

Mr. BAILEY. Let me say to the gentleman from Maine that the practice of the cotton trade of the South is that where the goods are ordered, for instance, from a New York house, they are shipped to the retail merchant directly from the place of production.

Mr. DINGLEY. In some cases, but, I think, not generally.

Mr. BAILEY. Almost entirely.

Mr. DINGLEY. I will leave that to gentlemen who are conversant with the business, and as the entire matter is embodied in this report of the Arkwright Club, of Boston, I ask leave to incorporate it here as a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine asks leave to print the paper, to which he has referred in connection with his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The paper is as follows:

[Boston Journal, January 2, 1898.]

THE CRISIS HERE—THE ARKWRIGHT CLUB, OF BOSTON, REPORTS ON SOUTHERN COTTON MILLS—CHEAPER LABOR AND LONGER HOURS THE SOLE CAUSE OF THE DIFFERENCE IN THE COST OF PRODUCTION.

The discussion in cotton manufacturing circles to-day centers on a recent meeting of the Arkwright Club, of Boston, at Young's Hotel and the reading of a report on Southern cotton mills before that body.

The club ascribes the entire cause for the present crisis in the North to the Southern cotton mills.

The committee discussing Southern mills says: And now what are their advantages? The southerner claims that there are several. First, that cotton is conveniently near, and that freight on it can be saved; second, that water power is abundant if you care to utilize it, and that coal is cheap if you prefer to run by steam; third, that labor is abundant and cheap, and not inclined to organize against the employers; fourth, that the enactment of restrictive labor laws is not likely to trouble manufacturers for many years.

In our opinion the cheap labor, long hours, and freedom from legislative interference are the chief advantages, and the others are unimportant and of doubtful value.

The cost of erection and maintenance of dams, the necessity of locating mills to be run by water power in low places where the light is shut out, and the additional cost of building foundations, which sometimes have to be started 20 or 25 feet below the surface of the ground, all contribute to make the investment so large that the interest on it goes far toward offsetting the cost of steam power.

The cost of coal varies in different localities from $1.65 per ton for Tennessee bituminous, at which one manufacturer expects to contract for his coal for the coming year, to $3.40 for Pocahontas coal at another point. In some mills wood is used for fuel, costing from $1.10 to $1.40 per cord, and 2 cords of wood are generally considered equal in value to 1 ton of coal.

The saving of freight on cotton amounts to but little and is offset by freight on the goods which have to be shipped North.

The advantages, however, which pertain to labor are very great. The long hours run and the low prices paid, we believe, make the cost of labor in the South about 40 per cent less than in the North. The working day in North Carolina is twelve hours, 24 per cent longer than in Massachusetts, and the price paid per day for common labor in the mills is from 50 to 75 cents.

The committee find that the lessened cost of construction of mills in the South is equaled by the increased cost of machinery, and that practically the sole cause of the growing supremacy of the South is the hours of labor and the wages.

The committee says: "We obtained prices for labor in several mills, and feel that we are making a conservative statement in saying that there is a difference between the prices paid there and in Massachusetts of at least 40 per cent. For instance, the prices paid speeder tenders varied from $3.90 to $4.80 per week of sixty-six hours. Our prices are from $7 to $9.50 for fifty-eight hours.

In submitting this statement we think a better basis for comparison can be given by taking a given number of spindles and showing the cost of running them in both places. The cost of running 112 slubber spindles, 408 intermediate and 408 fine, in one mill we visited, was $36.70 for sixty-six hours. One hand runs 2 slubbers of 56 spindles each, at 75 cents per day; three hands run 4 intermediate frames of 102 spindles each, at 80 cents per day each, and two hands run 3 fine frames of 136 spindles each, at 65 cents per day each.

In one of the newest and best-arranged Northern mills the same number of spindles of each kind is run the same length of time for $35.84, a price 34 per cent more than in the Southern mill. In another Northern mill, not so well arranged and older, the same work costs $43.29, which is 62 per cent more than in the Southern mill.

In the ring spinning department but little difference is made between the prices paid for running warp and filling, 8½ cents per side being paid for 96 spindles of warp and 9 cents for filling. Our schedule price per hour is 28.4 per cent higher on warp and 56.2 per cent on filling. Spooling, 50 cents per day; warping, 50 cents per day for tending 2 warpers.

For weaving the prices paid were 17½ cents for 55 yards, 64 by 64, 38½ inches, and 20 cents for 55 yards, 68 by 72, 39 inches, in one mill; 17½ cents for 62 yards, 39 inches, 64 by 60, made of 34 warp and 41 filling, in another mill. In still another mill 25 cents for 60 yards, 39 inches, 68 by 72, 4.75 goods. The prices paid in Massachusetts for weaving these goods are from 40 to 60 per cent higher.

In regard to the amount of cloth produced per spindle and per loom, we find the first-class, well-managed Southern mill compares favorably with similar mills here. One mill running day and night produced 1.20 pounds per spindle in every fifty-eight hours' run. The goods produced were 38½ inches, 64 by 64, and 39 inches, 68 by 72.

The total cost of labor in several well-run mills was found to be under 4 cents per pound. We do not know of any mill in Massachusetts making similar goods in which the cost is less than 6 cents, or 50 per cent more than this.

Since this report was written, a statement has been furnished us of prices paid for ring spinning in three mills which we did not visit. They are lower than those given above, being 7, 7½, and 8 cents per side per day on frames of 256 spindles, 128 per side. It is also stated that one of the largest manufacturers in the South asserts that the average earnings of his weavers were less than $4 per week.

We do not think that the astounding difference in the labor conditions at the South and at the North in cotton mills has ever been more emphatically and more lucidly set forth than in this statement. It will be seen at once by every manufacturer that this item, and this item alone, is sufficient to account fully for all the difference between the prosperity of Southern manufacturing and the adversity of Northern mills; between the activity in the construction of new mills at the South and the stagnation of a similar industry in this part of the country.

Mr. DINGLEY. I do not wish to be understood, or misunderstood, as criticising in any manner the remarkable success which the cotton industry has had in the Southern States. I glory in it, and I shall glory all the more when I find that the Southern States, taking advantage of our protective system, shall develop their industries in a thousand other directions, and thus increase the demand for its labor and raise wages as ours have been raised in New England. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The present low wages at the South and long hours of labor are temporary conditions that, in my judgment, within some time, how long I can not say, the inevitable law of economic progress will overcome; and wages at the South, gradually rising, will rise still more, and will rise throughout the country. Therefore, I deprecate any conditions in any part of our country that tend to compel competition in such manner as to force us down to your basis of wages rather than bring you up to our basis, because I believe that your highest prosperity depends on the highest possible wages for the masses of your own people, for it must be remembered that even with a reduction of 10 per cent the wages paid in Southern cotton mills are still lower than those paid in New England, and higher than those paid in Europe.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a pertinent question?

Mr. DINGLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. KITCHIN. I understand the gentleman to say that these cotton manufactures in which the troubles are now occurring have no foreign competition, but that the competition is from the South, and that only such coarse goods——

Mr. DINGLEY. I say generally that there are no common cotton goods imported. The cotton goods that are imported are all fine goods.

Mr. KITCHIN. And most of the goods made in the South are common cotton goods. Now, does the protective tariff increase the price of labor in such factories?

Mr. DINGLEY. In the factories of the South? Eventually it must.

Mr. KITCHIN. I mean now.

Mr. DINGLEY. In fact, I may say to the gentleman, already your wages have increased some, and increased because you have introduced these manufacturing industries under the policy of protection, and they will go on increasing in the future.

Mr. KITCHIN. But there is no foreign competition with those goods.

Mr. DINGLEY. Supposing there is not, in the common goods——

Mr. KITCHIN. How, then, does the tariff affect labor in those factories which have no competition with foreign factories?

Mr. DINGLEY. Because the basis of competition in this country under protection is inevitably the basis of our standard of wages and not the standard of wages abroad. That is the object of the protective system. The object is to prevent the decline of wages here by the bringing in of foreign goods that come in competition with our own and which, under free trade, would be sold at a price which compels the reduction of wages. That is just what is taking place in a lesser degree now in New England with the competition of the South.

Mr. KITCHIN. I understood the gentleman to say that the fall of wages in New England factories had been caused by competition from the South; that it was not affected by foreign competition.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is so.

Mr. KITCHIN. And did not the gentleman, in the former part of his speech, say that the protective-tariff system applied to those articles which had foreign competition and did not apply to the conditions which you were then discussing?

Mr. DINGLEY. I said that a protective system would only protect as against foreign competition, and when the competition was between different parts of the same country, the protective system, being a duty on imports, could not apply; but there are other methods of advancing the protection of labor beside that of protective duties. One is, by labor laws, reducing the hours of labor. That is one direction in which a labor-protective system may act. When there is one portion of our country that is producing cotton goods, running its machinery eleven or twelve hours per day, and especially when it is doing this for less wages than another part of the country, which can run its machinery only ten hours a day, the effect of such competition is either to destroy the industry in the communities having the ten-hour day or to compel a reduction of wages; and we do not want anything of that kind. We want to avoid it.

Mr. KITCHIN. But that is not a protective-tariff system that does that.

Mr. DINGLEY. I can not yield for any more interruptions.

Mr. KITCHIN. I hope the gentleman will not get impatient.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. DINGLEY. I will hear the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I understand that the Committee on Labor are to-day having a hearing on a bill proposing to reduce the hours of labor in the United States to eight hours.

Mr. DINGLEY. You mean labor in Government employ?

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. All labor.

Mr. DINGLEY. Oh, no; that would be unconstitutional. That is why I suggested that we may have to come, by and by, to an amendment to the Constitution giving Congress the power to fix the hours of labor in the factories in this country, as far as women and children are concerned.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. So as to protect you from the South!

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Will the gentleman see to it that such a measure is brought in?

Mr. DINGLEY. Will the gentleman favor it?

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I will, indeed. Will you vote for it?

Mr. DINGLEY. I am confident that the Southern States themselves, although completely under Democratic control, will ultimately enact such legislation and reduce the hours of labor, for it is an evil to have factories running eleven or twelve hours per day in one part of the country and ten hours per day in another part of the country, bringing the two into competition and compelling the latter to either close or go back to longer hours.

But if, in progress of time, that is not done, then I am sure the labor organizations of this country will insist that no State in this country shall, by refusal to enact proper legislation, continue a condition of labor in this country that will tend to increase the hours of labor. [Applause on the Republican side].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. DINGLEY. I will.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I understood the gentleman from Maine to say a moment ago that the tendency of a protective tariff was to a reduction of the hours of labor.

Mr. SHATTUC. I insist, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Maine should be allowed to proceed without interruption. Gentlemen on the other side have been speaking for a long time, and now we desire time on this side.

Mr. DINGLEY. One at a time. Here I see four gentlemen desiring to interrupt me. I am listening to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I understood the gentleman to say that the tendency of a protective tariff was in the direction of shortening the hours of labor.

Mr. DINGLEY. I said that its tendency was to increase the wages of labor. That is my statement.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I understood you to say that it shortens the hours of labor.

Mr. DINGLEY. I said nothing of that kind, because it does not address itself to that matter.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Why, then, if I did not understand the gentleman, my question is not pertinent.

Mr. BAILEY. Inasmuch, Mr. Chairman, as the time fixed for this vote approaches, and inasmuch as we are now having a debate upon the tariff question, I ask the gentleman from Maine if it would be agreeable to that side of the House to let the committee rise and go into the House and have the time extended.

Mr. HITT. I shall have to object to that.

Mr. DINGLEY. I am speaking in the time of this side of the House and in direct reply to assaults made by the other side in their time.

Mr. BAILEY. But the other side would be pleased to have an opportunity to answer. I do not wish to further consume your time.

Mr. DINGLEY. Have you anything further that you desire to say?

Mr. BAILEY. Not if the gentleman is not willing to extend the time.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I would ask the gentleman from Maine if it would not be a more simple way out of the difficulty for the New England States, that can not compete with the Southern mills, to cease trying to compete with the mills we have?

Mr. DINGLEY. In other words, you ask if it would not be a more simple solution for New England to close its mills and abandon an industry which has existed there for seventy-five years, rather than to hope that you will eventually pay New England wages.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Nothing in the world can enable you to compete with the mills of the South but a protective tariff for New England, and that you can not get.

Mr. RIDGELY. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. DINGLEY. I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. RIDGELY. I will make it short. Taking it for granted that the tariff bill will advance the wages here, where labor is not overcrowded, will overproduction advance the price of goods in the open market?

Mr. DINGLEY. Well, I will reply by another question. Does the gentleman desire to extend our trade to foreign countries at the price of reducing the wages of own people? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. RIDGELY. No, sir, I do not; but your position puts you in that hole. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DINGLEY. I will simply say that our theory is that when we develop an industry in this country by means of protection, we tend to increase wages. Take the tin-plate industry that we established by the tariff of 1890. When it was established, we were buying all our tin plate abroad. We put a protective duty upon it, which could be reduced as time went on, and what has been the result? We are making nearly all the tin plate consumed in this country, and the price, taking into consideration quality, is lower than before this protective duty was imposed. [Applause on the Republican side.] And, more than that, I am informed that within a few weeks a large quantity of tin plate has been shipped to London for the purpose of making cans and sold in England because the quality of our tin is superior to that produced in Wales. [Renewed applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. RIDGELY. Then is that a fact that in raising the price of labor you cheapen the goods?

Mr. DINGLEY. It has always been the effect of a protective duty. Gradually, as you establish the industry, you cheapen the goods by stimulating the inventive genius of our people.

Mr. Chairman, when you establish any industry resulting in the employment of more labor and when you increase the production of articles already made here and reduce the importation of articles that we may make without natural disadvantage, you increase the opportunities for labor, and if you increase the opportunities for labor, wages rise inevitably. Where there are two jobs seeking one man, wages rise; and where there are two men seeking one job, wages fall. That is the law.

That is the way protective duties develop our industries and tend to increase the demand for labor and consequently increase wages; and it is then, as I have said, that the masses of our people have the highest measure of prosperity.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a single word further. I beg pardon for my divergence from the subject before the House, but this reply has been called out by my friend from Kansas and my friend from Kentucky, and I thought it was as germane to the bill as much that has been said on the other side of the House.

Now, a single word further. The gentleman from Kansas still keeps up the chatter that the existing tariff will not produce revenue enough. I have heard that for some time, and I want to say to my friend from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON] and other gentlemen who have been keeping up this chatter that you had better be pretty prompt, because your time for such talk will soon be gone. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Will the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means please fix the exact time?

Mr. DINGLEY. I will say that the time will come earlier than the period I fixed as a prophecy on the floor of this House six weeks ago.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. As the gentleman is in the prophecy business, will he not please fix the date? [Laughter on the Democratic side.] Tell us when this good time, so long delayed, will come.

Mr. DINGLEY. I wish to say to the gentleman from Kansas that while he was making this chatter, only yesterday, the receipts from customs alone by the Treasury of the United States were a little over $860,000. I want to say further that the receipts of this month will be as large as the average monthly expenses for six months, from the 1st day of January to the 1st day of July.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. DINGLEY. No; I know what the gentleman is going to say. He is going to call attention to the fact that the expenses in January are largely in excess of the receipts. I think I will take the time myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine declines to yield.

Mr. DINGLEY. Now, the gentleman from Kansas ought to know, and I think he does know, that January and July are the two great months for large expenditures under this Government, and rarely, if ever, do the receipts for those months meet the expenditures. The half-yearly payment of interest becomes due in January and July, with other large expenditures. But the gentleman will remember that the average monthly expenditures from the 1st of January to the 1st of July next will be not exceeding $29,000,000 or $30,000,000 per month.

This month they will run up to $34,000,000, perhaps, because it is the interest-paying month; but the average of the six months will not exceed $29,000,000 or $30,000,000. Now, the receipts for this month will come very near, if not fully, meeting this average monthly expenditure for the six months. Again, the receipts for customs were increased at least two and one-half million dollars from last month, and they will be three millions larger than in the month of January of last year, under the Wilson tariff law, which the gentleman from Kansas favored.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. DINGLEY. Yes, I will.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I was going to say that the report from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury shows that yesterday the excess of the expenditures over the receipts was $190,745.09.

Mr. DINGLEY. How much interest was paid yesterday? Will the gentleman read that item?

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I do not know. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I will answer the gentleman from Maine, if he will permit me. [Cries of "No!" "No!" "No!" on the Republican side.]

Mr. DINGLEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I did not think it important to make any reply to what the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON] said on this point, and what several other gentlemen have said, because the progress of events will make a reply which will silence the gentleman in a very short time. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Now, if the gentleman from Maine will permit me, I have the item here and I can tell him.

Mr. DINGLEY. Well, what is it?

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. The amount paid for interest yesterday was $100,000, a mere bagatelle.

Mr. DINGLEY. The average expenses per day in this country are now about $1,100,000; the receipts yesterday were over $1,300,000; so that really there was a surplus yesterday over the average daily expenses. But there was a large payment on account of pensions stretching forward through the month, and also a payment of interest, so that the receipts on that particular day do not equal the expenses. It is that very thing which illustrates the course of the gentlemen here; if they can only find one small thing that seems to sustain their contention, they forget the whole volume of facts that show otherwise. They see the speck on the barn door, but they never can see the barn door. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DINSMORE. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON].

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I am not surprised that the gentleman from Maine, having got hold of a hot wire, should have made the labored explanation as to why the bill that was intended to promote industry has not promoted industry. I have only three minutes and I have not time to answer all his argument. He dwelt long upon the argument that the reduction of wages in Maine was due to the fact that wages were cheaper down in the Southern States.

Now, the gentleman ought to know, and undoubtedly does know, that cheap labor is the dearest thing in the world. James G. Blaine, of sacred Republican memory, proved that fact some years ago in his report upon the manufactories of Europe, where he says that goods produced by cheap labor are produced at great cost. The true explanation why the New England cotton manufacturers can not manufacture as cheap as those in the South is this: In New England there is a large population which has become more extensive, and the landlord can and does extract from the laborer a larger proportion of his wages in payment for rent, and the New England manufacturers are unable to pay the wages to compete with the Southern States, where land is more plentiful and rents are lower.

Now, in Denver, Colo.—in a State where they pay the highest wages of any State in the Union—the Overland Cotton Mill to-day is sending its goods to Massachusetts and competing with the goods of all parts of the United States. So the only way in which the gentleman from Maine can fortify his position is by the suggestion that we must have a protective tariff in favor of New England against the Southern States. That will carry the protective-tariff policy out to its legitimate conclusion, each State protecting itself against the others, each county protecting itself against other counties, and finally, following out the gentleman's line of policy, we shall have each township, I presume, protecting itself against the competition of other townships. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I hope the gentleman will give me two minutes more.

Mr. DINSMORE. I can not possibly do so.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I have a little extract I should like to read.

Several MEMBERS. Put it in the RECORD.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I ask leave to put this extract in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

[The extract referred to will be found in a previous part of the remarks of Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas.]

Mr. DINSMORE. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I have been amazed and mortified at the expressions made in the highest legislative body of the greatest Government on earth. Expressions which can only be construed as a demand that this powerful Republic should so direct its policy and so legislate as to avoid the possibility of war with Spain. The spirit generated by such a policy and by talks and speeches of that character dragged down the great Empires of Assyria and Rome and Greece and Carthage from the highest to the lowest grade of nations. This was the kind of talk of the Tories in the Hartford convention, and which for nearly a century has been denounced as treason.

I do not question for a moment the patriotic impulses of the distinguished gentlemen who oppose granting belligerent rights to Cuba, but I allude to these historic facts to warn my friends of the criticisms to which in the future they are in danger of being subjected.

I would like to reply to the tariff speech of Mr. DINGLEY, but where the honor and glory of my country is on the one side and dollars and cents on the other, my voice and efforts will be exercised in defense of and in uplifting American honor, glory, and chivalry.

I am astounded that representatives of the bravest men on earth should stand upon this floor and declare that our action must be governed by a fear of war with Spain.

Such speeches and such a spirit always have invited rather than prevented war, and the inculcation of such a spirit among our people in case of war would largely tend to bringing upon us an ignoble defeat.

Up to 1865 the dominant spirit which controlled in this country was one of honor, chivalry, glory, and patriotism. To-day the dominant spirit is pride in gold, wealth, and palaces, and in effecting marriage alliances with dukes, princes, and counts, and the exercise of the entire power of the legislative branch of the Government is now in the interest of money changers and millionaires and against the interest of the mass of the people.

The spirit of chivalry and true nobility taught by American mothers has made our country the pride and fear of the world.

God forbid that this should be supplanted by the pride of money and wealth—the worship of Mammon!

God forbid that the growing generation should prefer to be money changers rather than brave soldiers, fighting, and if need be dying, in the front rank of battle.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DINSMORE. I yield the remainder of my time to the honorable gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the courtesy of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE]. My only regret is that he has not more time to give me. The two or three minutes now allowed before the time fixed for the termination of this debate would not be sufficient to enable me to discharge the duty which my friend from Arkansas has assigned me in addressing myself to a particular phase of the Cuban question which he desired me especially to discuss. I thank, too, the honorable chairman, the gentleman from Illinois, who also extended to me some time. But I will not impose myself in any degree upon the patience and courtesy of the House.

Mr. HITT. I move that the committee now rise and report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HEPBURN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6449) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and had directed him to report the same back with a recommendation that it pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. HITT moved the previous question on the engrossment, third reading, and passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. I believe that either at this point or after the engrossment of the bill it is in order to move to recommit the bill with instructions.

The SPEAKER. The time when such motion can be made is after the bill has been engrossed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BAILEY. I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Foreign Affairs with instructions to report it back with the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That a condition of public war exists between the Government of Spain and the government proclaimed and for some time maintained by force of arms by the people of Cuba, and that the United States of America should maintain a strict neutrality between the contending parties, according to each all the rights of belligerents in the ports and territory of the United States.

[Applause.]

Mr. HITT. I make a point of order against this proposed instruction, which is in the nature of an amendment, that it is not germane to the bill, and that it is also obnoxious under the rule as new legislation.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BAILEY. Before the Chair sustains that point, I desire to say that my understanding with gentlemen on the other side was that if we did not press this amendment during the session of the committee yesterday we were to have a vote upon this motion to recommit with instructions.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no!

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, there was no understanding of the kind. The matter of amendments was presented and pressed persistently by many gentlemen, and there was a statement by gentlemen on that side that they proposed to make a motion to recommit with instructions; but the nature of the instructions to accompany the motion was not stated; and a gentleman who makes a motion proposing instructions which are subject to a point of order must take the consequences. I move the previous question.

Mr. BAILEY. The gentleman from Illinois, I am perfectly satisfied, would not misstate the matter. My conversation, however, was not had with him, but was with other gentlemen on that side. And, if I may be permitted to refer to the matter more fully, I would say that there were gentlemen over there who desired to attend the funeral of a distinguished ex-member of the House, but they did not wish to leave the House if we proposed, on this side, to press the amendment which is the subject of this motion to recommit.

I agreed with those gentlemen that they might absent themselves, with the assurance that we would not demand a division on the amendment during that time, provided they would give us a vote on the motion to recommit the bill with instructions.

Mr. HITT. I understood nothing of the kind. On the contrary, no such understanding was had in the presence of the House or with me. We did have an understanding as to the conduct of the general debate upon the bill, which was departed from by gentlemen on the other side of the House, who occupied, as will be remembered, more than a day in amendments of this character, and in debating amendments similar to this before the general debate properly began.

Mr. BAILEY. That was an arrangement to which the gentleman from Illinois readily assented.

Mr. HITT. The "gentleman from Illinois" did not assent to any motion to recommit.

Mr. BAILEY. I will not be put in the attitude of insisting on an agreement that was not made. But I stand here and declare that I made that statement to the Speaker of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes to be distinctly understood as stating that the gentleman from Texas is entirely mistaken when he makes the statement that any agreement was had with him on this subject. The gentleman from Texas notified the Chair that they would make, on his side, no further opposition to the consideration of the bill until the time came when they would offer a motion to recommit. The gentleman has offered the motion to recommit, and the Chair has ruled it out of order. That is all there is of it.

Mr. BAILEY. And I make the statement that I went to the Speaker and stated in conversation with him and two or three other members of the Committee on Foreign Relations who were present, "We have agreed that we will not press this amendment again, so that your friends may be absent, if they desire to attend the funeral of the Commissioner of Patents, provided we can get a vote on the direct motion to recommit with instructions." The Chair assented to that arrangement, as I understood, and I returned to this side of the House and told our friends that we had agreed upon that programme.

Mr. HITT. I would state, Mr. Speaker, that I have never known until this moment, when they were read, what the instructions to be proposed by the gentleman were. Neither the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] nor the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] communicated them to me, and in offering them they took the chance of their being shown to be in opposition to the rules of the House.

Mr. BAILEY. The gentleman from Illinois will understand that when I went to inquire about the subject I distinctly stated that a motion to recommit with instructions would be offered. I did not say that to the gentleman from Illinois, because I did not have the conversation with him, but those gentlemen with whom I had the conversation will remember that fact.

Mr. HITT. Nor was there such conversation in the open House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair simply states that no agreement was made between the Chair and the gentleman from Texas upon that point, and if it needs corroboration, other gentlemen who were present will corroborate it.

Mr. BAILEY. It needs corroboration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair makes this statement: The point is overruled. The question now is——

Mr. BAILEY. And against that statement I make my statement: That we did make an agreement, and that the gentlemen on that side, in pursuance of the agreement, did absent themselves. I appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. HITT. I move to lay that appeal on the table.

Mr. BAILEY. And upon that question I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas appeals, the question being, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House? And the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] moves to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, this precise question has been ruled on during the course of this debate at least half a dozen times.

Mr. BAILEY. It will be ruled on once more.

Mr. DALZELL. When I get through the gentleman may have the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. DALZELL. I make the point of order that the appeal is dilatory.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I understand that the motion to lay the appeal on the table cuts off all debate——

The SPEAKER. All this debate has been proceeding by the sufferance of the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Well, then, let us have the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Any gentleman has the right to demand the regular order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I demand it, unless both sides can be heard.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Mr. Speaker—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. DALZELL. I make the point of order that the appeal is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. There is no difficulty about this matter at all. The Chair is perfectly willing to rest it upon the statement which has been made.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I heard the statement between the gentleman from Texas and the Chair, and the Chair is right. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is right. The Chair will rest it upon the statement which he has made to the House. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BAILEY. And I will rest it on my statement.

The SPEAKER. That is right. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT], that the appeal be laid upon the table, and on that the gentleman from Texas asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, will you please state the question to the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already stated it. It is on a motion to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. FLEMING. Will the Chair please state to the House what the precise ruling of the Chair was?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has ruled that the motion to commit with instructions is not in order, upon the ground that a motion to commit, which would not be admissible as an amendment, is not admissible as instructions.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 160, nays 114, answered "present" 4, not voting 78; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

Mr. HITT. The consular and diplomatic bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent for general leave to print remarks in the RECORD on the bill just passed.

Mr. MAHANY. I object, Mr. Speaker. I understand the request was made for general leave for five days.

The SPEAKER. The difficulty is that this is a general permission.

Mr. DALZELL. Is it for the gentleman himself?

Mr. HITT. If he would confine his remarks to the consular and diplomatic bill——

Mr. MAHANY. Is it for himself?

Mr. DALZELL. For the House.

Mr. MAHANY. Then I object.

Mr. RIDGELY. Then I ask it for myself.

Mr. MAHANY. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to print remarks upon the consular and diplomatic bill.

Mr. RIDGELY. Upon the Cuban question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, while upon my feet I will make a brief and probably unnecessary personal explanation. I notice the statement in the morning newspapers that I voted yesterday to consider the resolution of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] because the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] had asked me to do so. The statement is not true. I do not remember that the Senator from Missouri ever spoke to me on the subject. I voted that the resolution of the Senator from Colorado should be considered simply because I thought the resolution ought to be considered. I thought for the benefit of the country and the Republican party the discussion should be had on that question now.

MRS. M. E. ROBERTS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], coming over from yesterday.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate full, explicit, and exact copies of all charges made or filed against Mrs. M. E. Roberts, who was, on the 13th day of May, 1897, removed from her position as clerk in the Pension Bureau, whether said charges be in the form of statements, affidavits, depositions, letters, or in any other form, together with the exact dates of all said charges, statements, affidavits, depositions, letters, or documents, respectively, and the respective dates of their filing.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

Mr. ALLEN. Before a vote is taken on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire, I think it is due that I should make a statement in addition to that which I made yesterday. Since that time I have made some inquiry, the best I could, as to who this lady is. I find that in 1882, I think it was, if I can have the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire——

Mr. GALLINGER. I will be delighted to listen to the Senator if the Senate Chamber will be in order and the Senator speak a trifle louder.

Mr. ALLEN. I was proceeding to state that last evening and this morning I have made some inquiry as to the antecedents of this lady, as far as was within my power. I find that she lived from girlhood until her mature womanhood at Covington, Ky., and was an acquaintance and friend of the family of ex-Senator and ex-Secretary of the Treasury Carlisle; that for many years after her widowhood she was a member of the family of Senator James B. Beck, of the State of Kentucky, from whom she got her appointment in 1882 or 1883, her appointment coming from the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who was at that time Secretary of the Interior, and I think the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] interceded in her behalf and secured the appointment for her through the suggestion of the then Senator from Kentucky, Mr. Beck. That is as far as I know anything about her. That information I have gathered in the last few hours, and not from her, but from her acquaintances.

I have learned something also, in a general way, of the manner in which she was treated when she applied for a specific statement of the charges made against her. It is needless for me to say that if the statement made to me is correct, no self-respecting gentleman would treat her or any other woman or any other human being in the way in which she was treated.

Now, I am not concerned very much as to how this Republican Administration runs. If it can injure itself, I am willing that it should do so. I am willing that the Republican party should injure itself at every step of its progress, for the sooner it goes out of power, in my judgment, the better off the country will be. Therefore I am willing to hasten its exit at any time, under any circumstances, that I possibly can.

Mr. President, I can not see how a gentleman like the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] can even be an apparent apologist for treatment such as this lady received at the hands of the Commissioner of Pensions and the Secretary of the Interior. A domestic animal ought not to be treated so. It is not very lordly, and it is not very gentlemanly, and it is not a mark of very high breeding for one man occupying an exalted position to be brutal in his treatment to a person occupying a subordinate place under him. If it is, then I do not know what pertains to the character of a gentleman. If the Commissioner of Pensions wanted the position this lady had occupied for seventeen years for some hanger-on of his party, if he wanted to violate the present civil-service law, as he evidently did, why did he aim a covert dagger at the heart of this woman by impugning her character? Why did he not come out boldly and say to her, "You are a Democrat, or come from a Democratic family. The Republican party is now in power, and we want your position. That is what I meant when I called for your resignation. I want your position to give to some Republican, and if you do not surrender your commission as clerk here. I will remove you for incompetency or upon some other subterfuge; but I will not be so unkind and so inhuman as to place a charge upon the record against your character and then bar the door to your inspection."

Mr. VEST. Is there a charge against her on record, and what is it?

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Missouri asks me if there is a charge on record against this lady. I say there is, according to the statement of the Commissioner of Pensions and the Secretary of the Interior to her. The Senator from Missouri also asks me the significant question and the question I have been asking, What is that charge? Neither the Secretary of the Interior nor the Commissioner of Pensions will say what the charge is. There is a charge impugning something against the character of the woman in the recesses of the Pension Office, which is locked against her inspection. He will not even tell her what it is. He will not show her the charge. Taking advantage of his high position, he studiously secretes the charge from this woman; and I am led to believe that this is simply one of hundreds of cases. He must be a coward and a poltroon indeed who will make a covert insinuation against the character of any person and then not have the manhood to state what that charge may be and afford an opportunity to meet and repel it.

The Senator from New Hampshire says that we ought not to concern ourselves in looking into these matters of differences between the head of a Department and a clerk. I suppose that in the estimation of the Senator from New Hampshire a clerk is about like a dog, to be kicked out upon some flimsy dodge without an opportunity to defend himself.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator means seriously to impute any such purpose to me, the Senator is not only using unparliamentary language, but unjustifiable language in the Senate Chamber. He has no authority or right to make any such accusation or insinuation.

Mr. ALLEN. Let me read the language of the Senator from New Hampshire yesterday, and the Senate will see whether I have not a right to draw this deduction. I read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday the remarks of the Senator from New Hampshire:

> It is a resolution calling for very extraordinary information—

Says the Senator—

> I hold, rightfully or wrongfully, that the heads of Departments have absolute power to remove clerks, and if they have not that power they have been deprived in some way of a right that naturally and properly belongs to the heads of Departments. Further than that, we have a Civil Service Commission which assumes the right to review the acts of Cabinet officers to the extent of writing letters to them concerning the transfer and dismissal of clerks, and demanding that they shall do certain things.
> It strikes me—

He says further—

> that if Congress takes up a matter of this kind and calls upon Cabinet officers to communicate to the Senate why they have reduced or removed a clerk, we will be transcending any action that has ever been taken in matters of of that kind.

Now, Mr. President, what does that signify if it does not signify exactly what I have stated? There the Senator from New Hampshire wants to convey the idea that it is beneath the dignity of the Senate of the United States to inquire into the merits of the charge made against this woman and her removal; that we should intrust that matter entirely to the heads of Departments; and although the removal may be made in violation of the statute, in violation of justice and decency, the Senate should remain silent when its attention is called to it.

I am not prepared to believe (although I can believe many things that a few years ago seemed impossible) that the Senate of the United States is willing that this stain and stigma should be placed upon the character of this woman without an opportunity to vindicate herself, and if there is any head of a Department or any superintendent of a bureau who has so far forgotten his high position and the duty he owes to his kind that he will make a charge and receive a charge of this kind and not afford the accused persons an opportunity to defend themselves, then I think it is due that the Senate of the United States should vindicate the rights of such a person.

Now, Mr. President, I think that is all I desire to say.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly that after the opening sentences of the speech just made by the Senator from Nebraska, which were truly Chesterfieldian in character, he should have made an insinuation against me that is not warranted by anything I said in the debate yesterday or by anything that I have ever said or done at home or in Washington touching the rights of any woman when she comes before any proper tribunal asking redress.

Mr. President, I knew nothing about Mrs. Roberts on yesterday when the debate occurred. I think I know a little something about Mrs. Roberts to-day; and I want to say to the Senate that this is not the forum in which to try this question. I have made a motion to send the case to the appropriate committee. That committee in the privacy of the committee room can call for these papers and examine them, can summon Mrs. Roberts if they think proper, can summon the Secretary of the Interior if they see fit, and can report to the Senate whether or not this resolution should be adopted. It is the orderly way in which to transact such business, if indeed a matter of this kind should be brought into the Senate at all.

Mrs. Roberts, as I said yesterday, is a ready letter writer, or she has an amanuensis who is accomplished in that direction. In her last letter to the Secretary of the Interior, which the Senator from Nebraska read yesterday, is this language:

> I speak with some show of feeling, and I have a right to do so, because I have been treated throughout in this miserable affair in the most infamous and outrageous manner, unworthy of men who should from their positions be above the suspicion of quibbling and double dealing.

Mr. President, that is remarkable language to be addressed to men like Cornelius N. Bliss or Henry Clay Evans—men who are known in Washington, who are known in the States from which they come as gentlemen always, and as being above suspicion in any act that would do injustice to a citizen of this Republic, and especially a woman.

The Senator from Nebraska says that I believe it is right to treat a woman like a dog, that a Cabinet officer can heap injustice and outrage upon a woman and I will protect him in so doing. The President of the United States removes men from office. Nobody ever suggested that he looked upon them as dogs because he removed them from office. I hold that a Cabinet officer has precisely the same right to remove from office any clerk, whether he be a Democrat or a Republican; and I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that from my personal knowledge the Commissioner of Pensions has removed and reduced Democrats as well as Republicans, and my own State has not been exempt in that regard.

I submit to the Senate that this is not a question that ought to be treated in the way the Senator from Nebraska treats it—that we ought not to impugn the motives of Cabinet officers or of the Commissioner of Pensions, and we ought not to make accusations against public officials, such as this woman has made, which are unworthy the utterance of any man or woman.

Mr. President, I have no desire to prolong this discussion. I said on yesterday, what is an absolute fact, that there are hundreds and thousands of cases of clerks in this country who have just as good a right to come before the Senate and demand that we shall serve an order upon the head of any Department in the Government that correspondence shall be sent here regarding the dismissal of those clerks, and thus constitute ourselves a police court or some other kind of a court to try the controversies between Cabinet officers and their subordinates. It is not the function of the Senate to do this. This case, unfortunately, has been brought in here; and I trust that the action taken to-day will be in the nature of a notice that such controversies ought to be settled outside of the Senate Chamber.

But, Mr. President, if we are to take cognizance of it at all let us send it to a committee. That committee is composed of men, I take it, who do not look upon women as dogs. Even if the Senator from Nebraska thinks that I would treat a woman in that way, I am sure he will not make that accusation against any member of the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment. They will give this matter careful consideration away from the public gaze. The charges that may be preferred in support of the dismissal of this woman will be heard privately by that committee; they will not be given to the newspapers; they will not be given to the public. Her honor and her rights will be respected and subserved in that way, and she will have reason, I feel sure, if my motion prevails, to thank me that I did not allow the Senator from Nebraska to obtrude the question upon the public, by compelling us to act upon a matter that ought not to be considered in the Senate Chamber.

Now, Mr. President, this is all I care to say. As I said a moment ago, I have no disposition to prolong the discussion. If the Senate thinks it is proper and judicious to undertake to settle this dispute between this clerk and the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Pensions, I think I am justified in saying to the Senate that this will not be the last case of the kind that we will be called upon to consider, because there are clerks in my State who will come to me and ask that I shall introduce a similar resolution calling for the reasons for their dismissal; and there are clerks from every State in the American Union who, noting this as a precedent, will ask their Senators to champion and vindicate them in some matter in controversy between them and the head of some Department.

Mr. ALLEN rose.

Mr. GALLINGER. I regret that the Senator from Nebraska does not see the propriety of allowing the resolution, without further controversy, to go to the committee. I have only to add that whether the Senator sees it in that light or not, I trust that the Senate, in its orderly procedure and for the good of the public service, will see that my motion prevails, as I have no doubt will be the case.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, just a word. There is a hint all the way through the remarks of the Senator from New Hampshire that there is something vitally wrong in the moral character of this lady. That hint is locked up, or has been locked up, in the Pension Bureau. It is that hint reduced to writing or in the form of a charge that this lady has been seeking for many months since her discharge on the 13th of last May. If the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Pensions had seen fit to present that charge in a proper form to this lady and had afforded her an opportunity to meet it and controvert it, there would have been no occasion for the Senate to take any action.

But I submit that the eulogistic words of the Senator from New Hampshire of the gallantry of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Pensions are not warranted in the light of the facts developed by the record. I presume the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Pensions are ordinary men. They are probably well qualified to discharge their respective duties. I do not suppose, however, there is anything angelic or particularly sacred in their nature different from that of any other man.

I agree with the Senator from New Hampshire upon the one proposition, that his party having come into power they are entitled to all the positions in the gift of the Government. I agree with him that if there is a gigantic humbug and swindle in this country it is civil service as administered. It is made simply for the purpose of keeping the worthy out of position and keeping the unworthy in position. Mr. Cleveland near the close of his Administration put about 30,000 additional offices in the United States in the classified service, and when the Republican party came back into power last year, with the vast army of self-sacrificing patriots that was following it wanting positions, they found themselves with too many applicants and too small a number of offices. Then they began casting about how to get possession of those offices, and men were placed in positions who would carry out the evident policy of the party—that is, to evade the conditions of the civil-service law. Now, was it necessary in evading the terms of the civil-service law that a gallant and distinguished head of a Department should make a covert insinuation and thrust against the character of a woman of mature years—in fact, a woman who is an invalid?

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. What authority has the Senator for saying that the Secretary of the Interior made any covert thrust against this woman?

Mr. ALLEN. I mean to say that in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions, and in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, too, for that matter, a covert insinuation was made by both those officers against the character of this woman.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator must realize that it may be an act of great gallantry to keep those charges in those offices rather than to give them to the public.

Mr. ALLEN. That may be true; I am not contending upon that proposition; but I say it is absolutely cowardly to withhold the charge from the woman and not give her an opportunity to defend her character. Does the Senator from New Hampshire justify that course?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do most assuredly. If I happened to occupy the position of a Cabinet officer—which I never expect to do—I certainly should not feel bound to tell every clerk under me who was dismissed precisely why I dismissed him or her.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, there is not an individual in this country who is so humble and so insignificant that, if a charge were made against his character to me and I had the power to inquire into it and to retain him in a position or discharge him in consequence, I would not call him to my office and tell him the charge and give him an opportunity to meet and refute it.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will agree to send the resolution to the committee of which the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] is chairman and of which my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is a member, this matter will be investigated.

Mr. ALLEN. I am not contending that this woman should retain her position in office. I have no sympathy with her in that respect. They are the victorious side in the fight last year; at least they have possession of the Government. To them belongs everything that goes with that victory. I have no sympathy with any person who holds an appointive position who, when the Administration changes, wants to hang on like a barnacle to the bottom of a ship. I think about the first thing self-respecting persons ought to do after an Administration changes is to hand in their resignations, take their hats, and leave for their homes.

All that I am contending for, and all that I do contend for at this moment, is that no human being, however humble he or she may be, should be the recipient of a charge involving his or her character, and then not be given a full and fair opportunity to meet and refute that charge. If I am to be catechised by the Senator from New Hampshire because I characterize the treatment of this lady in strong language, I am perfectly willing to receive that catechisation.

If I can have any assurance from the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment that this question will be taken up and sifted to the bottom and this woman given a full and fair opportunity by herself and by her witnesses to disprove the charge against her, then I shall have no objection to the resolution going to that committee. I see the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], a member of the committee, and I should like to hear from him if the committee is willing to make this investigation.

Mr. LODGE. The committee will certainly consider any resolution that is sent to it. The chairman of the committee is not present, but I know I can answer that for him.

Mr. PRITCHARD entered the Chamber.

Mr. ALLEN. I see the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD], the chairman of the committee, is now here.

Mr. LODGE. I am sure the chairman of the committee will say, as I have said, that any resolution referred to us will receive full attention and investigation.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Most certainly it will.

Mr. ALLEN. That is a little general. I should like to hear from the Senator from North Carolina. I am directing my remarks to that Senator. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina, if the resolution goes to the committee of which he is chairman, whether the lady whose character is involved will be given a full and fair opportunity by herself and her witnesses to meet and refute whatever charge may have been made against her.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I desire to say, in response to the inquiry of the Senator from Nebraska, that we will consider all matters which come before our committee and give them a thorough and fair consideration.

Mr. ALLEN. Then, Mr. President, under that statement, I am willing the resolution shall go to the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], that the resolution submitted by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] be referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 6449) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 467) for the regulation of cemeteries and the disposal of dead bodies in the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. 468) authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to accept the bequest of the late Peter Von Essen for the use of the public white schools of that portion of said District formerly known as Georgetown, and distribute the same among the heirs of Peter Von Essen, deceased;

A bill (H. R. 5493) to amend section 2234 of the Revised Statutes; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 121) to fill vacancies in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

MARSHAL OF EASTERN DISTRICT OF ARKANSAS.

Mr. LODGE. I desire, if morning business is concluded, to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I wish the Senator would withhold that motion for a moment to enable me to offer a resolution.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be directed to inform the Senate at what time Hon. Henry M. Cooper entered upon the discharge of the duties of marshal of the eastern district of Arkansas; how many deputies and other employees he found were employed in the office at that time, and how many have been discharged, when and upon what grounds; whether vacancies made by the discharge or resignation of old employees have been filled under the civil-service rules and regulations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none, and the resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to have the resolution again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be again read.

The Secretary read the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps I may show lamentable ignorance in putting the question which I am about to put to the Senator, but when a United States marshal takes office is the term of service of the previously existing deputy marshals terminated by discharging them, or do they go out of power with their chief, like the ordinary deputy sheriffs?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. My understanding is that under the civil-service rules these officers can only be discharged for cause.

Mr. HOAR. Deputy marshals?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is my understanding. I am not sure about it, and I want information from the Attorney-General's Office on the subject.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator would not desire the Senate to put a question to the Attorney-General which involved a clear misunderstanding of the law on the part of the Senate. If I heard the resolution read correctly, it was to inquire how many deputy marshals——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. And other employees.

Mr. HOAR. Were in the marshal's office when he entered upon his duties, and some circumstances in regard to their discharge. Certainly the old rule in regard to United States marshals, as in regard to ordinary sheriffs, is that when the term of office of the sheriff or marshal expires, his deputy, who is a mere personal subordinate, also ceases to be an officer. I think the resolution had better go over, and let the Senator look at it and see whether he has phrased it as he desires. There may be something in the civil-service rules to change the rule I have stated, but if so, I do not know of it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not pretend to understand who are technically deputy marshals and who are not. For that reason in drafting the resolution I have used the phrase "deputies and other employees" of the office; so that if, in the opinion of the Attorney-General, the terms of the deputy marshals expire with the term of the marshal, it would be easy for him to say so, and so of the other employees. Then we can understand what are the facts in connection with any discharges which have taken place in the office.

Mr. HOAR. Let the resolution go over so that the Senator can further examine it, and in the meantime he can ascertain whether the terms of deputy marshals expire with the term of the marshal, and so with regard to the other employees of the office.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to say in regard to this inquiry that I understand the civil-service rules were extended to deputy marshals by the late Administration, but that no eligible lists have been prepared, and therefore they have never been classified and still stand under the old law. However, I see no objection to the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I can not understand how any civil-service rules could apply to deputy marshals unless in accordance with the statutes. Ordinarily the marshal appoints his deputies; they are solely under his control, and they go out of office with him. Unless there is some legislation to make the office of deputy United States marshal continue after the marshal's term of service is gone, this resolution is incorrect in its language. Such a civil-service rule could not be made unless in accordance with law. It seems to be a matter of the change of the law in reference to the tenure of office.

Mr. LODGE. I was merely stating what had been done. I do not know whether it is legal or not.

Mr. HOAR. Let the resolution go over.

Mr. FAULKNER. The Senator from Massachusetts will remember that there are virtually two classes of deputy marshals by law. There are what are called office deputies and there are field deputies. The classified service has been extended, as I understand, to what are known as office deputies, who are appointed by the Attorney-General on the recommendation of the marshal. The field deputies are appointed immediately by the marshal himself, and are responsible to him alone.

Mr. BERRY. They are appointed by the court on the recommendation of the marshal.

Mr. FAULKNER. I mean they are appointed by the court on the recommendation of the marshal. The classified service has never been extended to field deputy marshals.

Mr. HOAR. Let the resolution go over. That will be the best way.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the resolution will lie over.

PAYMENT OF GOVERNMENT BONDS.

Mr. VEST. Before the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] renews his motion to go into executive session, I want to make a statement, and ask the attention of the Senate to it.

The concurrent resolution submitted by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] and reported by me from the Committee on Finance, known as the Stanley Matthews resolution, will come up at 2 o'clock as the unfinished business. Several Senators who are opposed to the resolution have approached us on this side this morning and stated that their personal convenience required that the matter should not be taken up for debate to-day, especially in view of the fact that we propose to adjourn over until Monday. They have suggested the arrangement that the resolution go over until Tuesday next, at the conclusion of the morning business; in the meantime any Senator who desires to speak upon the resolution on Monday, or to-morrow, if the Senate shall then be in session, may call it up and deliver his speech. On Tuesday the resolution is to be taken up and debate proceed on it until Wednesday at 4 o'clock, when the resolution and all proposed amendments shall be voted upon. To this proposition we have no objection.

Mr. STEWART. I have no objection to the arrangement provided I can have an opportunity to address the Senate on the resolution before Tuesday. I should like to-morrow morning, after the morning hour, in case we sit to-morrow, to occupy a short time. I do not wish to make any lengthy speech.

Mr. ALLISON. We ought to sit to-morrow.

Mr. STEWART. If we have a session to-morrow, I should like then, immediately after the routine business, to make some remarks upon the resolution, if that will be agreeable.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to the general suggestion made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], but it is possible that amendments may be offered to the concurrent resolution at a later period which might require some explanation. Therefore I hope he will so modify his suggestion as that we shall have a final vote on the resolution and all amendments thereto on Wednesday before adjournment. I think we can trust to the good sense of all of us not to sit very late, and it may be convenient to have a brief debate at a later hour than 4 o'clock.

Mr. VEST. There is no objection to that.

Mr. ALLISON. I think we can have an arrangement that we shall complete this business on Wednesday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is unanimous consent given, as requested by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], with the modification made by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]?

Mr. SPOONER. Let that arrangement be stated.

Mr. TURPIE. I desire to propose a modification of the unanimous-consent agreement by making the time for taking the vote Thursday instead of Wednesday.

Mr. VEST. Thursday before adjournment?

Mr. TURPIE. Yes, sir; instead of Wednesday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] suggests that the arrangement be made for Thursday next instead of Wednesday, and that the vote be taken on the resolution and all amendments pending before adjournment on that day.

Mr. ALLISON. All amendments to be offered. There are no amendments now pending.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. All amendments then pending, the Chair should have said.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; all amendments then pending.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to that request?

Mr. VEST. I make no objection, although I think if we should fix Wednesday, sufficient time would be afforded; but my friend from Indiana thinks the vote should be taken on Thursday, and I shall make no objection to that.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to inquire, is it the understanding of the Senator that the resolution may be called up at any time between now and Thursday?

Mr. VEST. At any time between now and Thursday by any Senator who desires to address the Senate upon the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution is now the unfinished business.

Mr. VEST. It remains the unfinished business. That is to be understood.

Mr. ALLISON. It is the unfinished business. While on this subject respecting the order of business, I hope it will be understood that we shall have a session to-morrow.

Mr. STEWART. I give notice that I shall address the Senate on the resolution immediately after the conclusion of the morning business to-morrow, or on Monday if we do not have a session to-morrow.

Mr. ALLISON. That will be a sufficient reason for meeting to-morrow.

Mr. TURPIE. I give notice that on Monday next, immediately after the close of the morning business, I shall address the Senate on the resolution.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PERKINS. I was instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to call up to-day the bill (H. R. 4303) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes; but the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] is not prepared to proceed with the consideration of the bill to-day, and I therefore give notice that on Monday morning, immediately after the routine morning business, I shall call up the bill.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 6449) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three hours and forty-eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. OVERSTREET, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 357) for the relief of William S. Grant.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6251) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for prior years, and for other purposes, numbered 2, 3, 5, 6, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15; that it had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill numbered 1, 4, 7, 8, and 10; that it had agreed to the amendment numbered 9 with an amendment; that it asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CANNON, Mr. NORTHWAY, and Mr. SAYERS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6251) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

On motion of Mr. HALE, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments numbered 1, 4, 7, 8, and 10, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and disagree to the amendment of the House to the amendment numbered 9, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, January 22, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 21, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

S. 959. An act to increase the pension of Capt. Isaac D. Toll.

The message also announced that the Senate had concurred in the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

S. 468. An act authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to accept the bequest of the late Peter Von Essen for the use of the public white schools of that portion of said District formerly known as Georgetown.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills and joint resolutions were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 468. An act authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to accept the bequest of the late Peter Von Essen for the use of the public white schools of that portion of said District formerly known as Georgetown, and distribute same among the heirs of Peter Von Essen, deceased; and

S. 357. An act for the relief of William S. Grant.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE CHOCTAWHATCHEE RIVER.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4760) authorizing the construction of two bridges across the Choctawhatchee River, a navigable stream, in Dale County, Ala.

The bill was read. It provides that the court of county commissioners of Dale County, in the State of Alabama, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate two bridges across the Choctawhatchee River, a navigable stream, in the county of Dale, State of Alabama, one of said bridges to be located near the town of Newton, at or near the place where the bridge formerly stood on the Newton and Ozark wagon road, and the other one of said bridges to be located at or near where the bridge called the Hollis Bridge formerly stood.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CLAYTON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the discharge of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the consideration of House bill (H. R. 6251) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for prior years, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, known as the urgent deficiency bill, and that the same be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to consider in the House as in Committee of the Whole the urgent deficiency bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois how much time he thinks this matter will occupy?

Mr. CANNON. There is only one Senate amendment that will probably give rise to any discussion, and I hope to complete it inside of an hour.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that this is a matter of the highest privilege, and for the gentleman to bring it up to-day and take the Private Calendar from us will be a hardship upon those who have private bills upon that Calendar.

Mr. CANNON. I think it will take but very little time, and I have already waited two days.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I feel confident that this matter will take all day if we enter upon a discussion of it.

Mr. CANNON. Well, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the urgent deficiency bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to make a respectful appeal to the gentleman to allow us to have the Private Calendar considered to-day. The gentleman's measure is a measure of the highest privilege, and he can call it up at any hour.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman that in view of that fact I asked unanimous consent, and from the gentleman's side of the House came the objection. It will take less time to consider it in the House than in the Committee of the Whole; but the objection comes from the gentleman's side of the House, and as we are to proceed under the rules, there is nothing left to me but to move that the House go into Committee of the Whole. This is a matter of universal public interest.

Mr. BAILEY. May I ask the gentleman from Illinois a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to know if it is proposed to move to nonconcur in all of the Senate amendments?

Mr. CANNON. I shall move to concur in most of them, about which I think there is no difference of opinion. So far as I am advised, there is only one matter where there is a difference of opinion on the Senate amendments, and that is touching the payment of freight on bullion.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the gentleman from Illinois agree that if this matter is not disposed of within thirty minutes——

Mr. CANNON. I can not make that agreement, but if it is considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, if undue discussion seems to be desired by individuals, against the wish of the majority, it is then within our power to move the previous question.

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, I understand that, but will the gentleman agree that if it is not concluded inside of an hour, he will give way?

Mr. CANNON. I think we ought to pass it inside of an hour, but I will not agree to that. However, I will ask unanimous consent again before I make my motion that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask my colleague on the committee if an agreement of this sort could not be reached: That if the House will consent to nonconcur in that amendment, will you consent that it may be brought back and discussed separately?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I have no doubt that if the House will consent to follow the recommendation of the committee and nonconcur in the Senate amendment, the Senate will stand by its amendment and that the matter will be presented singly and alone to the House. Of course, speaking for myself, if I should be on the conference committee, we would not agree that the House should recede and concur until the House had had a chance to pass upon it.

Mr. McRAE. I think there will be no objection to disposing of the other amendments at once, if it be understood that this particular amendment shall be brought up to be separately discussed and acted on by the House.

Mr. CANNON. I think that practically that would be the best way.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands, objection is made. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of Senate amendments to House bill No. 6251, known as the urgent deficiency bill.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I ask whether the effect of this motion, if adopted, will not be to postpone the consideration of matters on the Private Calendar—the Methodist Book Agents bill, for instance—until these Senate amendments are disposed of, though it should take all day?

The SPEAKER. If the House should go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, it could not transact business on the Private Calendar.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Then the issue is really whether we shall take up the Private Calendar or these Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not say that. The issue is what the House understands.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Well, I make that statement myself.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to; there being—ayes 127, noes 25.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. PAYNE in the chair) for the purpose of considering the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6251) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Amendment numbered 1 was read, and, on motion of Mr. CANNON, nonconcurred in.

Mr. BELL. Allow me to make a suggestion. The only question here is on amendment No. 5, on which, as I understand, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will make a motion to nonconcur. What is the necessity of taking up all the other amendments separately?

Mr. CANNON. We can soon reach amendment numbered 5 in regular order.

Mr. BELL. On that amendment I propose to make a motion to concur. I suggest that the gentleman from Illinois make some motion to dispose of these other amendments without the necessity of reading and separately acting on each.

Mr. CANNON. The amendments are very short, and we shall soon reach the fifth amendment.

Mr. BELL. I think there will be no objection to the action proposed on the other amendments.

Amendments numbered 2 and 3 were read and, on motion of Mr. CANNON, concurred in.

Amendment numbered 4 was read and, on motion of Mr. CANNON, nonconcurred in.

Mr. CANNON. I now ask unanimous consent that amendment numbered 5 be passed over temporarily, and that amendments 7, 8, and 10 be nonconcurred in, and amendments 6, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15 be concurred in.

Mr. FOOTE. Why can we not have these amendments read, so that we may know what we are concurring or nonconcurring in?

Mr. CANNON. My only object was to save time.

Mr. FOOTE. These are very important matters, and we should like to know what we are acting upon.

Mr. CANNON. I supposed that the gentleman had a printed copy before him, as most of us have—a printed copy of the amendments.

Amendment numbered 5 was read, as follows:

On page 5 of the printed bill strike out the following:

"That hereafter, in addition to the charges now imposed upon deposits of gold bullion at any of the assay offices or mints, the cost of transporting such bullion to the mints where the same is to be coined shall be collected from the depositor of the same.

Mr. CANNON. I ask that this amendment be passed over until the others are acted on.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

Amendment numbered 6 was read.

Mr. CANNON. I move concurrence in that amendment by instruction of the committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Amendments numbered 7 and 8 were read, and, on motion of Mr. CANNON, were nonconcurred in.

Amendment numbered 9 was read, as follows:

For the Marion Branch, namely: For electric-light plant (provided such amount of the appropriation for repairs for the Marion Branch for the year ending June 30, 1898, as may be spared is made available), $3,500; for barn, $1,130; and for lodge and gateway, $34; in all, $4,664.

Mr. CANNON. The committee instructs me to recommend concurrence in that amendment.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask, with the consent of my colleague, to offer the following amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois. I move to concur in the amendment of the Senate with the amendment I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the House agree to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, with the following amendment:

Insert after the matter proposed by said Senate amendment the following:

"NATIONAL CEMETERIES.

"For the repair and improvement of the national cemetery at the city of Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas, and for rebuilding and furnishing the lodge and other buildings in said cemetery, and restoring and repairing the monuments of the dead therein, $15,000."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, in respect to the proposition of the gentleman from Arkansas I wish to say that I have had a conversation with him about the amendment, and have looked into the necessity for its adoption at this time, and I am advised by the War Department that for the care and preservation of the national cemeteries the usual appropriation is $100,000, and that there is unexpended, in round numbers, some $20,000 of that sum at the present time. They seem to have had a cyclone, a most damaging storm, at Fort Smith, Ark., and the cemetery there and buildings connected with it have been seriously damaged. The Secretary of War informs us that it will take about $15,000 to repair that cemetery, and asks that that sum be appropriated by way of a deficiency.

Now, this amendment of the gentleman is not strictly germane to this amendment of the Senate or to any other provision in the bill, but under the circumstances, and in view of the facts which have been reported to the committee, I am not disposed to make the point of order, and after consultation with members of my committee and also members of the Committee on Military Affairs, I shall not offer an objection to the amendment in the shape of a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE] to concur in the Senate amendment with the amendment just read.

The motion was agreed to.

Amendment numbered 10 was read.

Mr. CANNON. The committee recommend nonconcurrence in this amendment.

The recommendation of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. The committee recommend concurrence in amendments numbered 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15.

The several amendments were read and concurred in.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, we will recur to amendment numbered 5, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4, strike out lines 7 to 11, as follows:

That hereafter, in addition to the charges now imposed upon deposits of gold bullion at any of the assay offices or mints, the cost of transporting such bullion to the mints where the same is to be coined shall be collected from the depositor of the same.

Mr. CANNON. The committee recommend nonconcurrence in that amendment, and I make that motion.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to concur in the amendment of the Senate.

Now, I would like your attention for a few moments, and I want you to understand the amendment which is pending. It is an amendment put on the bill that was not in order and that went through the House without being understood. It went to the Senate and, as I understand, did not have a single friend in that body on the Committee on Appropriations. It did not find a single friend at any point in its consideration in the Senate; and from what I understand, they not only believe it to be unwise, but believe that the amendment reached the domain of folly.

I want the House to understand what we are doing in the consideration of this matter. This amendment provides that gold bullion that is deposited at Philadelphia, for instance, if some Director of the Mint thinks it ought to be minted at San Francisco, he can put on the man that deposits the bullion the price of transporting it from Philadelphia to San Francisco. Under this amendment if a man deposits gold bullion at the mint at San Francisco and the Director of the Mint, through some whim, thinks that the bullion ought to be coined at New Orleans, the man who deposits it can be compelled to transport it at his own expense to New Orleans.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Is not the gentleman perhaps making a misstatement inadvertently? The House fixed it so that the owner of the bullion was compelled to pay the freight from the assay office to the mint, and the Senate cut that out.

Mr. BELL. Yes; but here is the point. The Senate struck out all the amendment. I have not overstated this a particle. I want to read it:

That hereafter, in addition to the charges now imposed upon deposits of gold bullion at any of the assay offices or mints, the cost of transporting such bullion to the mints where the same is to be coined shall be collected from the depositor of the same.

The Senate struck out this provision, but the committee is trying to reinstate it.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will allow me, I propose to offer an amendment to his amendment. The gentleman moves to concur in the Senate amendment, which is to strike out all of it.

Mr. BELL. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Now, I propose, as soon as I get the floor, to amend the gentleman's amendment by striking out the words "or mints" in lines 20 and 21. I make this statement so that the gentleman may discuss that as well as the other.

Mr. BELL. Well, I admit that as a great improvement, and if the House strikes out the words "or mints," our State would be benefited by it, because we have a mint at the city of Denver; but I want to say to you, my friends, that this is a broader subject——

Mr. HOPKINS. If the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is adopted, then you will be satisfied?

Mr. BELL. No. I would be satisfied as a selfish citizen of Colorado, because it would benefit us much more than to require the Government to pay this; because if the Government had to pay it, it would pass by the Denver mint and go on to Philadelphia or somewhere else; but as a representative of a governmental question, as the object underlying the enactment of the original law—to gather gold from every conceivable portion of the country and put it into our mints—as a great public question, I believe that every assay office in the United States ought to buy this gold just as it has heretofore. Now, that may be an injury to Denver; that would be an injury to our mint; but it is to the interest of the Government that we should look in this proceeding.

Now, at the time of the enactment of this law, as I understand, in 1879, when we were going to resume specie payments, the policy was adopted of establishing these assay offices for the purpose of gathering gold with which to resume specie payments, and in case we failed to get gold enough to consummate the redemption of the greenbacks, then we were permitted to issue bonds and sell them for the purpose of buying gold. The act stood with two horns, one to sell bonds to get gold for the purpose of redeeming the greenbacks, and the other to establish assay offices in the mining camps, the Government buying the gold there and holding it in bars or coining it, whichever it saw fit, for the purpose of redeeming the greenbacks. Those greenbacks are not yet redeemed. The law for selling bonds still exists. So I ask you, What reason have you for repealing the act for the gathering of gold and getting it into your possession for the purpose of redeeming those greenbacks?

Now, as I said before, if you make the individual pay the transportation, and if he has the right to choose his mint, the city of Denver and the State of Colorado will be benefited; but my opinion is that such a policy will be to the detriment of the Government.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. If the gentleman will allow me, I want to suggest this amendment:

Provided, That all gold bullion shall be coined at the nearest mint to the assay office where deposited, when practicable.

That covers your question.

Mr. BELL. They will always call it impracticable.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I will change the word, then, to "possible."

Mr. BELL. They will always say it is impossible.

Mr. LINNEY. Leave out the words "when practicable."

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, that is about all I desire to say upon this question. Here is a policy which was adopted contemporaneously with our policy for the resumption of specie payments—a policy for gathering gold for that purpose. One provision was to sell bonds to get the gold; the other was to establish assay offices where the gold is produced, the Government paying the mint price at the assay office and coining the gold wherever it saw fit. Those provisions have stood from that day until this. A few days ago, without warning to anybody especially interested, the Director of the Mint suggested that in his opinion the depositors of the bullion ought to pay the expenses of transportation to the mint.

Mr. HOPKINS. How is the law regarding the deposits of silver bullion?

Mr. BELL. It was the same while we had the free and unlimited coinage of silver—while the mints were open to every individual.

Mr. HOPKINS. How was it from 1878 to 1893?

Mr. BELL. I do not know; but I understand that this only applies to free and unlimited coinage.

Mr. McCLEARY. Do you believe it to be good policy for the Government not only to perform the service of coining the gold for a man, but also for the Government to pay the freight on the man's property up to the point where that service is to be rendered?

Mr. BELL. That is the course that was adopted in 1879, because it was thought cheaper than to sell bonds to get the gold to redeem these greenbacks.

Mr. McCLEARY. That was to meet a contingency.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Does not the emergency still exist?

Mr. HOPKINS. No; it has passed.

Mr. BELL. The emergency still exists. There are now $340,000,000 of these greenbacks, and for their redemption the law provides for the sale of bonds and for raising the gold to redeem the greenbacks. That was one of the provisions. The other provision was to use these assay offices to gather gold to avoid selling bonds; and it seems to me that any man who understandingly votes to repeal this provision——

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I hope we will have order. It is impossible to hear what the gentleman is saying.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order, and all gentlemen will be seated and cease conversation.

Mr. BELL. Any man who will understandingly vote to repeal this provision indirectly votes for the issuing of bonds for the purpose of gathering gold.

Mr. HOPKINS. I know; but how can a gentleman representing the kind of politics he does favor compelling the Government to pay an individual for transporting, say, from Colorado to Philadelphia, and then coin that gold into money for nothing?

Mr. BELL. I would not.

Mr. HOPKINS. Is it not better to make the individual pay the transportation?

Mr. BELL. No, sir. The policy of the Government is to have the first opportunity of obtaining the gold. It offered the inducement by establishing its own assay offices where the gold was produced. It believed that it would be less expensive for this Government to pay the transportation than to furnish minting facilities there or to issue the bonds to get this gold.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman allow me to state what was the policy? The policy of the Government was to facilitate the gathering of gold into the Federal Treasury, and when the depositor sent the bullion to the assay office the depositor took a certificate for it, and that certificate was money issued by the Government, and the bullion became the property of the Government. That certificate went into use as money and the owner of the bullion no longer had any control over the gold. He could not pay for the transportation of it, because it was not his property. The moment that it was put into the Government depository and the certificate was issued the bullion became the property of the Government.

Mr. HOPKINS. Under those conditions the individual sold his bullion.

Mr. BLAND. You do away with the right of the owner to deposit his bullion and take his money and put it into circulation, the gold to become the property of the Government. The Government does not pay for the transportation of the depositor at all, it pays for the transportation of its own property, and not the property of an individual. You are trying here to abolish the law rather than to limit it so as to compel the depositor of this bullion to transport it to the mint after it becomes the property of the Government, which practically keeps the money out of circulation.

Mr. BELL. I would say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], we have a mint fully equipped at New Orleans, we have a mint fully equipped in San Francisco, we have an appropriation made for a mint now being built at the city of Denver; but the Director of the Mint, under the law, has the right to have the bullion coined wherever he sees fit. Now, he refuses absolutely to coin at the city of New Orleans. Why? Because he says that they do not need money in New Orleans; that the money is needed in Philadelphia; therefore, that it is as cheap to transport the bullion before it is coined to the city of Philadelphia as it is to transport the money to Philadelphia or New York after it is coined, which is the place where the money is to be used.

In other words, this provision simply makes the coining of the bullion produced subject to the caprice of the Director of the Mint. He has the power to make the producer of the bullion distribute the money of this country for all the people to such points as the convenience of the people demand. He was examined before the Committee on Appropriations. I was absent at the time, as I was unable to attend the committee. At the suggestion of the committee he drew this provision. Now, his idea is not to coin a dollar, and everybody who knows him knows that it is his idea—except in Philadelphia—and I suppose he is honest in his policy. His idea is that there should not be a dollar coined for this Government except at such a money center as requires the coin. His further idea is, that the man who produces the gold ought not only to be deprived of a mint where gold is produced, but that you should put on him the burden of transporting that gold to the mint of the Government. Why? Because, he says, that is where the money is to be used; and he is going to make him pay the transportation, not to a mint of the Government for the purpose of being coined, but he believes one great central mint at Philadelphia can do all the work cheaper than the mints coining at San Francisco, Denver, or New Orleans.

Mr. HOPKINS. Those are the views of the present Director of the Mint?

Mr. BELL. Yes, sir. He does not believe in minting everywhere, and he refuses to coin at New Orleans. He was asked why they did not coin at New Orleans, and he said because they did not need the money there; and he will insist under this amendment that when you put a pound of gold in New Orleans that you shall not have the right to coin it, but you shall have the additional burden of transporting it from there to Philadelphia.

Now, that is the thing in a nut shell. That is one man's idea.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I want to inform the gentleman from Colorado that the policy of the Government in paying the expense of transportation of gold to the government mint was inaugurated in England under Queen Anne, and was adopted by this Government as we adopted many other customs of England.

Mr. BELL. Well, it may be the policy of every government on earth; I do not know about that; but I want to say to our friends now that the moment you say to the men at Denver that produce over a million dollars of gold monthly that they shall bear the burden of transporting that gold to Philadelphia, that moment you offer a premium to every foreign power to take that gold from you.

Mr. HOPKINS. How do you make that out?

Mr. BELL. Why, Congress considered this the very way in which to keep the gold here in the first place. They said that this was the proper method to get the gold into its possession.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; but is it not cheaper to transport gold from Colorado to Pennsylvania that it is to Liverpool?

Mr. BELL. No; I do not know that it is. Our merchants in Denver tell me that as to many articles they can transport them from Liverpool to Denver cheaper than they can from New York or Philadelphia.

Mr. HOPKINS. Do they tell you that they can transport gold from Denver to Liverpool cheaper than they can to Pennsylvania?

Mr. BELL. No; they have not told me that, but there are many articles that they can transport cheaper, and I do not know why they can not transport gold as cheaply.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. If the gentleman from Colorado will allow me, I would like to say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] that his question asked the gentleman from Colorado was apparently not understood by him. The reason the Government has adopted the policy of paying the cost of transportation on bullion is this: If the miner sold his gold to a private person the Government, being in need of it, would have to borrow it and pay interest on it. In order to avoid that, they offered to pay the transportation charges and thus secure the gold at a much less cost than it would have been to borrow it and pay the interest charges.

Mr. BELL. That is my statement. It is for the purpose of concentrating and gathering the gold at these places. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Forty minutes.

Mr. BELL. I reserve the balance of my time, and I yield fifteen minutes to my colleague [Mr. SHAFROTH].

Mr. CANNON. Before the gentleman proceeds, I want to say to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL] that I propose to move to amend the gentleman's motion, which is, that the House agree to amendment numbered 5—that is the gentleman's amendment—as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment, insert the following:
"That hereafter, in addition to the charges now imposed upon the deposit of gold bullion at any assay office, the cost of transporting such bullion to the mint shall be collected from the depositor of the same to any of the mints."

I propose to offer that amendment, and I want to give the gentleman notice now so that we may discuss the whole matter while we are discussing it.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me?

Mr. CANNON. This is not my time. This is the time of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL].

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Colorado yield the floor?

Mr. BELL. No, Mr. Chairman; I want to hear the amendment read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the House agree to amendment numbered 5 with the following amendment:
"In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following:
"That hereafter, in addition to the charges now imposed upon deposits of gold bullion at any of the assay offices, the cost of transporting such bullion to the mints shall be collected from the depositor of the same."

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, now let us look at this as it is. Suppose, under that amendment, a man takes his gold to Carson City and offers it there at the Government assay office.

Mr. CANNON. If the gold is carried there he could get the mint price.

Mr. BELL. He might at that place; but suppose he takes it to any of the assay offices of the United States where they have no mint. When he takes it to the assay office the Director of the Mint may say that instead of transporting that to Denver or San Francisco he shall pay the transportation of it to Philadelphia. Now, why not make the amendment to the nearest mint?

Mr. CANNON. He can choose which mint he will deposit it in.

Mr. BELL. No; not under your bill or amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I think so.

Mr. BELL. Let us look at it as it is.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my friend this: What I am trying to accomplish by this amendment, and what I think it does accomplish, is that if any holder of gold bullion wants to get the mint price for it, he must take it to the mint.

Mr. BELL. Then you wipe out the assay offices?

Mr. CANNON. If he wants, however, to deposit it at the assay office in Montana or Colorado or anywhere else, my amendment would not give him the mint price for it there, because it would cost the Government the expressage to take it to the mint at Denver, or the mint at Carson, or the mint at San Francisco or New Orleans. Now, it is equitable that the depositor of bullion a thousand miles away from the mint should pay the express charges before he gets the mint price.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. And the Government would not get the gold?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, it would, according to my contention.

Mr. BELL. That provision has one weakness in it, and that weakness is this: If you take it to an assay office, you do not permit the bullion producer to send it to the nearest mint.

Mr. DINGLEY. Certainly it does.

Mr. BELL. Then, why not provide for it in the bill? Mr. Chairman, I yield fifteen minutes to my colleague [Mr. SHAFROTH].

Mr. CANNON. I will say this, if the gentleman will allow me, let us understand this matter.

Mr. BELL. My time is running out, and I can not have any more interruptions.

Mr. CANNON. I will yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH].

Mr. SHAFROTH. All right.

Mr. CANNON. I want to do what is right about this, and I will withdraw the amendment I have just offered and offer this one to meet the gentleman's objection. I propose that the House agree to amendment numbered 5 with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment, insert the following:
"That hereafter, in addition to the charges now imposed upon deposits of gold bullion at any of the assay offices, the cost of transporting such bullion to the nearest mint, authorized by appropriations by Congress for operation as a coinage mint, shall be collected from the depositor of the same."

Mr. BELL. That is an improvement.

[MR. SHAFROTH addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. BELL. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. GREENE. Mr. Chairman, it would be very difficult in the time allotted to enter upon a thorough discussion of this question in all of its relations, but it does seem to me that it is a matter about which we should talk and upon which we should think dispassionately, without any regard to the party to which we belong. It ought to come to this House with a great deal of force, that a committee of the Senate, having investigated this subject, without a single friend of the measure, proposed, reported it adversely, and the Senate, as I am informed, was solidly against it, that it is not a partisan question.

If we will all stop and consider that gold, while in a sense a commodity, is not strictly so under the laws of this and other countries, we will at once see the difference between the holder of gold bullion paying the charges on that article to market and the man who has wheat and corn paying the freight on it to market. The argument has been made, and on its face is plausible, that the holder of gold bullion has no more right to deposit in an assay office and have the Government pay the charges to the mint than the owner of corn and wheat would have to deposit those products at some elevator near by his home and have the Government pay the charges on them to the market. Now, I say that argument on the face of it seems plausible, but when you come to consider that corn and wheat are purely and strictly commodities, and that by operation of law another function has been given to gold, the argument must fall.

We are at the present time, as we all know, practically upon a gold standard. In other words, the Government of the United States has determined that gold shall be the commodity upon which this Government will stamp its money, and that it shall be the standard money of the country. That being true, this question is more far-reaching than at first glance many would suppose. When we come to consider that gold being the standard, and as such must measure the values of all commodities of the country, and that the values of all commodities are determined by the volume of money in circulation, then we can see that this proposition becomes far more wide reaching than at a glance one would suppose.

As has been truly said, the object of the Government in framing its mint laws was to secure to the Government the largest possible volume of gold. To do that, it provided that at any established assay office the holder of bullion could deposit the same and receive a certificate of deposit at the regular mint price of the gold. Evidently that had two effects. In the first place, the certificate of deposit could go into circulation in that locality as part of the medium of exchange of the country. In the second place, gold mining is encouraged, because the holder of gold can take it to his home assay office and receive the full mint price.

Now, if we attempt to repeal that law, if we attempt to modify it so as to make the holder of the bullion pay the cost of transportation to the mint of the United States, we lay that much of a burden, whatever it may be, whether it be slight or whether it be great, upon the producer of gold bullion, and to that extent we cripple the production of gold in the United States. For instance, say there is a gold mine in California that is barely paying, that there is a gold mine in Colorado barely paying for the working, the moment you put that much burden on the holder of the bullion, the man who takes the bullion out of the mine, of paying the transportation on it to the mint, you lessen his profits and must in a measure decrease the production of gold.

So, while this clause in the bill which compels the producer of gold bullion to pay the freight charges to the mint seems to be a small matter, it is, in fact, but an entering wedge which has for its object, whether foreseen by the framers of the bill or not, a tendency to lessen the output of gold. In other words, it is another step, though short it may be, in decreasing the supply of money and raising its purchasing power. It is the little things, sometimes overlooked in legislation, that ought to be strictly guarded. It was the little thing in the bill of 1873 that struck down silver and brought bankruptcy and ruin in its trail. This proposition is but another token of the plans and purposes of the gold power to raise their product, money, in price and cheapen the products of labor.

Sir, this subject opens the whole field of finance, and I therefore avail myself of the occasion to discuss the subject in a general way.

The problem of money has in all ages, among civilized people, been the one all-absorbing and all-important of economic questions. Questions of internal and tariff taxes, the management of corporations, etc., have at times seemed to predominate and for a time had the attention of the people, but when the smoke of these skirmishes had cleared away the money question has reappeared in all its importance, fraught as it is with the weal or woe of the great masses of producers and consumers; and, sir, vital as this question is to the interests of the people, lying at the very base of their prosperity, and as much and as long as it has been discussed, it seems to be as little understood, and I might say the least understood, perhaps, of all great economic questions. The men who claim to be the financiers, in their effort to elucidate the subject, only make it more complicated and much harder to be understood.

Indeed, it is amusing to the student of political economy, who has endeavored to study this particular branch of the subject, to see the utter stupidity and gross ignorance of the men who are assuming to instruct the people on the subject of money. This grows out of the fact that we are accustomed to look to the millionaires and large banking houses for our information on money matters. In short, the people have been taught that none but men who possess large quantities of money are capable of discussing the subject, and if one without money dares to discuss it, it is asked, "What does he know about money, when he is not worth a dollar? Let the men who have accumulated money enlighten us on the subject." The same reasoning would have said of Galileo, "What can he know of astronomy, when he never owned a star?"

The truth is these self-appointed instructors of the people seem to know less about money than almost anybody else in the country. Because a man can drive a sharp bargain and cheat his neighbor or the community does not constitute such an one a "financier;" but in modern times if a man by chance strikes a rich mine and becomes the possessor of large quantities of gold, his opinions on the money question are sought after by the press and the public and go as wise sayings of a great financier; or if a rich relative of some ignoramus dies and leaves a large estate to him, he at once blooms into a financier and is sought after for his opinions on money and political economy and his idiotic sayings are published as authority on the money question, when, in fact, he could not give an intelligent definition of money if his life depended upon it.

No wonder there is ignorance on this subject!

Take the writings sent out by the "Sound Money League," and it is evident that the writers do not know the difference or distinguish between money and commodities, but blend the two as one and the same thing, and yet they assume to teach the masses on a subject of which they themselves are in woeful ignorance.

There can be but one result; when "the blind lead the blind," it is inevitable, "both shall fall into the ditch."

Among the gold-standard people there are two classes, one whose interest it is to keep the people in the dark and another class with honest purposes, but deceived by the former, and I might add a third, who advocate it for office only and have no especial opinion in the matter. The former class can not be reached by argument, neither can the latter, but it is to the middle class that I would appeal.

The people are misled by such expressions as these: "Intrinsic value," "Inherent value," "The money of the world," etc. They argue that money to be good must possess "intrinsic or inherent value," and that such value makes it the money of the world.

In order to a correct understanding of any proposition, it is important that we understand the terms therein employed, and so in the discussion of this question we can never understand the science of money while we use the words "value," "price," and "worth" as synonyms. These terms when applied to the science of money have entirely different meanings. "Worth" is an intrinsic quality, "value" is the relation which one commodity sustains to another, and "price" is the expression of that value in the units of money.

Let it therefore be understood, first, that there is no such thing as intrinsic value either in gold, silver, or any other object, either on the earth or beneath it. Neither is there such a thing as inherent value; nor is there any such thing as "the money of the world"—never was and never can be until all the nations of the earth are under one government. Such phrases as these have their origin in and emanate from the distorted imaginations of the advocates of the single gold standard.

In order to a correct understanding of the science of money it is highly important that we know what "value" is; second, what money is; and be able to distinguish between money and commodities, and that we know the functions of money. Without such an understanding it is as impossible to comprehend the relations of money to the business and prosperity of the country as it would be to learn to read without knowing the letters. It shall be my aim and purpose in this discussion to make, if possible, myself plain and clear touching these questions, so that those who do me the honor to hear or read what I have to say will have no trouble in comprehending at least what I believe as touching this subject.

I desire first to call your attention to the subject of value.

Those who believe in the single standard of gold and who erroneously believe that value resides in gold are continually asking if we believe the Government can create value, and, assuming that it can not, again ask how we can make a piece of silver worth but 50 cents in gold worth 100 cents. I am frank to say that if I believed value to be an inherent quality in the metal I would find this question difficult of an answer, for I do not believe that this Government can create value; neither do I believe that all the governments of the world can do it.

They can not, because value is not a thing, nor yet the attribute of things, and does not reside in any thing or things. It is amusing to see certain newspapers and politicians handling the word "value" as a boy would his toys, and to hear them talk of "intrinsic value," "inherent value," "commercial value," etc., while it is true that from the days of Aristotle down to Mill it has been the constant effort of the best political economists of the world to define it, and during all this time their investigations have led them to look upon and treat value as I have defined it and will discuss it in these remarks.

I have said that value is not an inherent quality of matter; that it does not reside in matter and is not the attribute of matter, but that it is a relation. In other words, value is the relation between various commodities interchangeable among the people, including all services.

Alexander Delmar, in his work on The Science of Money, on page 14, says:

> In other words, value, though difficult to define, is not immeasurable. In this respect it resembles time, space, gravity, and the other primordial conditions or relations of matter.

And on page 15 he says:

> Value is not matter, but is a condition or relation of matter.

To make it still more simple, value is the relation, we will say, between two commodities; and if, then, you take into consideration all the exchangeable commodities of the world and all the services of the world, value would be the relation that one of those commodities sustains to the other and to all other commodities and services. These relations may change by the law of supply and demand—that is, a failure in wheat may change its relation to all other commodities, and so with any other commodity—but that relation, whatever it may be, is still value.

I will call your attention to some other authorities on political and monetary science to prove that value is but a relation, and that there is no such thing as "intrinsic value."

First, I will quote from Theory of Political Economy, by W. S. Jevons, pages 81, 82, and 83, as follows:

> Value is a relative term. The value of a thing means the quantity of some other thing, or of things in general, which it exchanges for. Now, if there is any fact certain about value, it is that it means not an object at all, but a quality, attribute, or rather a circumstance of an object. Value implies, in fact, a relation; but if so, it can not possibly be some other thing. A student of economy has no hope of ever being clear and correct in his ideas of the science if he thinks of value as at all a thing or object, or even as anything which lies in a thing or object. Persons are thus led to speak of such a nonentity as intrinsic value. There are, doubtless, qualities inherent in such a substance as gold or iron which influence its value; but the word value, so far as it can be correctly used, merely expresses the circumstance of its exchanging in a certain ratio for some other substance.
> If a ton of pig iron exchanges in a market for an ounce of standard gold, neither the iron is value nor the gold, nor is there value in the iron nor in the gold. The notion of value is concerned only in the fact or circumstance of one exchanging for the other. Thus it is scientifically incorrect to say that the value of the ton of iron is the ounce of gold; we thus convert value into a concrete thing; and it is, of course, equally incorrect to say that the value of the ounce of gold is the ton of iron. The more correct and safe expression is that the value of the ton of iron is equal to the value of the ounce of gold, or that their values are as 1 to 1.
> Value in exchange expresses nothing but a ratio, and the term should not be used in any other sense. To speak simply of the value of an ounce of gold is as absurd as to speak of the ratio of the number 17. What is the ratio of the number 17? The question admits no answer, for there must be another number named in order to make the ratio; and the ratio will differ according to the number suggested. What is the value of iron compared with that of gold? is an intelligible question. The answer consists in stating the ratio of the quantities exchanged.

Mr. Francis A. Walker, in his work entitled Money, at page 208, says:

> Value is a relation.

In Elements of Political Economy, by James Mill, on page 131, that author says:

> By value of money is here to be understood the proportion in which it exchanges for other commodities, or the quantity of it which exchanges for a certain quantity of other things.

In his work on Political Economy, Francis A. Walker, at page 5, defines value thus:

> Value is the power which an article confers upon its possessor, irrespective of legal authority or personal sentiments, of commanding, in exchange for itself, the labor, or the products of the labor, of others. Briefly and somewhat elliptically speaking, value is power in exchange.
> We say, irrespective of legal authority, the Emperor of Germany can by a word call two millions of men from their homes and send them to distant fields, even to foreign lands, to work, to watch, to march, to fight, and to die. Yet these services are not economic, because they are not voluntary, being rendered in submission to legal authority, supported by overwhelming force. On the other hand, the services of a soldier in the British army are economic, as they are rendered under the terms of voluntary enlistment, the result of a fair and open bargain between the crown and the subject.

Mr. Jevons, in his essay, Value of Gold, says:

> Value, like utility, is no intrinsic quality of a thing; it is an extrinsic accident or relation.

Mr. Bailey, in his work entitled Nature of Value, pages 34 and 35, says:

> I can not too strongly recommend the student of political economy never to let the word value pass before him without putting the question, "Value in what?" or "In relation to what?" The value of a commodity must be its value in something, and whenever the term is used with any definite meaning that something may be assigned. If it can not be assigned, the reader may rest assured that the author, whoever he may be, is writing without any definite ideas.

Mr. John Stuart Mill (Political Economy, book 3, chapter 1), defines value thus:

The word "value," when used without adjunct, always means in political economy value in exchange.

Francis A. Walker, in Money and Its Relation to Trade and Industry, page 32, says:

Value is not a property of anything. It arises wholly out of the relations which exist between things.

MacLeod, in his Theory and Practice of Banking, page 48, in speaking of the word "value," says:

This unhappy phrase meets us at every turn in economics, and yet the slightest reflection will show that to define value to be something external and then to be constantly speaking of intrinsic value are utterly self-contradictory and inconsistent ideas. Thus, over and over again, it is repeated in economical treatises that money has intrinsic value, but that a bill of exchange or bank note is only the representative of value. Money, no doubt, is the produce of labor, but as Adam Smith observed, "If it would exchange for nothing, it would have no value;" so, M. Say says, that the value of gold and silver consists only in what they will buy. How, then, can its value be intrinsic? How can anything have intrinsic value unless it has the things it will exchange for inside itself? "Money has intrinsic value!" Has a piece of money got the merchandise and all the other things it will purchase inside itself? Money will exchange for anything—corn, houses, horses, carriages, books, etc., and each of these is the value of the money with respect to that commodity; but which of these is its intrinsic value? The incongruity of these ideas is so glaring that it is only necessary to call attention to it for it to be perceived at once.

Jevons, in his Essay on the Value of Gold, says:

There is no such thing as intrinsic value.

The same definition is carried out in Mill's Principles of Political Economy, book 3, chapter 6. I might multiply quotations in proof of this position beyond the time allotted here, but I take it that enough has been given to convince anyone who cares to learn that value is, as I have claimed, simply a relation between commodities and services, and can only be expressed in the units of money, and such expression we call price.

We speak of the distances between the stars. What is that distance but the relation that one planet sustains to the other? This relation may, and does, change. Sometimes they may be nearer together and sometimes further apart, but the space between them is forever distance, or relation.

If I inquire of you what is distance, there could be but one answer to the question. It is the relation which one object sustains to all other objects. No man or government can create distance any more than he or it can create value, because both are but relation or conceptions of the mind. If I were to talk to you to-day about intrinsic distance, or inherent distance, or speculative distance, I would appear ridiculous, because there is no such thing, for it, being a relation, can be neither intrinsic nor inherent, and yet I would be no more foolish than the self-appointed modern instructors in finance are when they talk to us of intrinsic value, because both are but relations, and can therefore be neither inherently in matter nor an attribute thereof.

Let us take a simple example. The distance from New York to San Francisco, we will say, is 3,000 miles. Is that distance inherent in New York or is it an intrinsic quality of San Francisco, or is it an attribute of both? No sane man, in my judgment, would claim either, because it is apparent to all that the distance from one city to the other is simply the relation between them.

I have said the distance is 3.000 miles from one of these cities to the other—that is, it is the relation that one city sustains to the other; but how do we know that distance to be 3,000 miles? The answer is, because we measured it. The very fact that we have measured that distance implies a rule or fixed standard of measure, and that standard we made by law. We fixed an arbitrary standard by law to measure the relation between these two points, and all points, and we found after applying this measure that the relation which New York sustains to San Francisco, or the distance between them, when expressed, was 3,000 miles.

Now, let us suppose that some individual or corporation had the power to lengthen the surveyor's chain so as to make it twice as long as it now is and still call it 4 rods, and we would with that chain measure the distance from New York to San Francisco, it would be found that while the relation or distance between the two cities was just the same as before, it would take only half as many chains to measure it, thus making the distance, when expressed in miles, 1,500 instead of 3,000 miles. This change would grow out of the fact, not that the relation between the two cities had changed, but because of the change in the length of the standard of measure.

Now reverse it. Suppose the chain is shortened so as to be only half as long as it now is and we still call it 4 rods; now if we measure the distance with this chain, we will find that that distance when expressed is 6,000 miles, because it takes twice as many chains to measure the relation. This no one will deny.

Now, as I have tried to show, value is the commercial relation between commodities. We want to know what that relation is, and we can only know by measuring it; and we can not measure it without a standard or rule of measure, and that rule of measure is money.

The law of supply and demand causes one commodity to rise or fall in price, and thus the relations between the various commodities change, but that relation is always measured by money, not by one dollar, but by the sum total of all money in circulation, and that relation is expressed in the units of money, or dollars and cents. The expression of that relation in dollars is called price. Now, if the sum total of money is the measure of value—and on this point all political economists are agreed—then it follows as an inevitable consequence that to contract or enlarge the volume will affect all values when expressed in dollars, the same as changing the length of the surveyor's chain would affect the distance when expressed in miles, but in an inverse order.

For instance, if you contract the volume of money, it increases the measuring capacity of money, or increases its purchasing power, and so when we measure the relation of commodities with it, that relation, or value, when expressed in the units of money or dollars, is less. In other words, it does not take so many dollars to measure it, because of the increased measuring power of the dollar, and we have falling prices. While one commodity, because of scarcity, may command as many dollars as usual, we have a fall in the level of prices. Now, suppose we increase the volume of money. That shortens or lessens the capacity of the dollar as a measure, or lessens its purchasing power, and so when we come to measure values with it, that measure, when expressed in the units of money, is greater, or it will take more dollars to measure values, and we have a general rise in prices, followed by an era of prosperity in all commercial lines and other industries.

This would not be beneficial to money loaners and gold gamblers. They have money to sell for labor and its products, and to increase the volume of money would cheapen the thing which they have to sell—money; but it would be a blessing to all who buy money with their labor and products, because they would get more dollars for them and thus be more able to meet their liabilities.

These are not new doctrines, but are as old as civil government, and have been taught by all political economists in all ages of the world.

It is for the reasons I have given that such a vigorous fight is waged by the London Jews and their allies in this country in the interest of scarce money, in the demonetization of silver, and their effort to retire the greenback. They are enhancing the measuring power of their dollar and thereby enabling them to command more of the proceeds of labor with it. What is the duty of Congress? To pass laws in the interests of the money lenders and gold gamblers or in the interests of the whole people?

To ask this question is to answer it.

What we want to do is not to decrease the volume of money but increase it. How? The quickest way is by keeping the greenback currency in circulation and restoring silver to its time-honored place in our currency, where our fathers put it and designed that it should stay.

Since the Republican party demonetized silver in 1873, it is a fact patent and known of all men that the level of prices of all farm products has steadily fallen. This effect was produced by reason of the almost simultaneous striking down of silver by the leading nations of the world, thereby producing a shortage in the world's supply of money. The increase of the money volume of the world has not kept pace with the increase of population and the ever-increasing volume of business.

This state of things has had the effect of increasing the demand for money, and the increasing demand has increased the price of the dollar, or, in other words, lengthened it as a measure of value, resulting, as it always has, in a fall in prices, stagnation in business, general depression, and hard times.

This condition, as a result of striking down silver, was foreseen by many of our wisest statesmen in all parties, and they sounded a note of warning and predicted just what has come to pass.

They saw that the single gold standard meant a contraction of the world's supply of money and that such contraction could only result in increasing the purchasing power of money and a consequent falling in prices of all the products of labor.

They knew, as all political economists know and have known, that a fall in prices would increase the burden of all the debtors of the world and take away their means of buying the necessaries of life, which would result in the paralysis of all business and the ultimate absorption of the wealth of the world by the manipulators of gold. The Hon. James G. Blaine, one of the greatest statesmen who has graced the Republican party since Abraham Lincoln, in speaking of the effects of a single gold standard on the business of the world, in a speech delivered by him in the United States Senate February 7, 1878, Forty-fifth Congress, second session, volume 7, page 821, said:

On the much-vexed and long-mooted question of a bimetallic or monometallic standard my own views are sufficiently indicated in the remarks I have made. I believe the struggle now going on in this country and in other countries for a single gold standard would, if successful, produce widespread disaster in the end throughout the commercial world. The destruction of silver as money and establishing gold as the sole unit of value must have a ruinous effect on all forms of property except those investments which yield a fixed return in money. These would be enormously enhanced in value and would gain a disproportionate and unfair advantage over every other species of property. If, as the most reliable statistics affirm, there are nearly seven thousand millions of coin or bullion in the world, not very unequally divided between gold and silver, it is impossible to strike silver out of existence as money without results which will prove distressing to millions and utterly disastrous to tens of thousands.

Alexander Hamilton, in his able and invaluable report in 1791-92 on the establishment of the mint, declared that "to annul the use of either gold or silver as money is to abridge the quantity of circulating medium, and is liable to all the objections which arise from a comparison of the benefits of a full circulation with the evils of a scanty circulation." I take no risk in saying that the benefits of a full circulation and the evils of a scanty circulation are both immeasurably greater to-day than they were when Hamilton uttered these weighty words, always provided, that the circulation is one of actual money and not of depreciated promises to pay. In the report from which I have already quoted, Mr. Hamilton argues at length in favor of a double standard and all the subsequent experience of well-nigh ninety years has brought out no clearer statement of the whole case nor developed a more complete comprehension of this subtle and difficult subject. "On the whole," says Mr. Hamilton, "it seems most advisable not to attach the unit exclusively to either of the metals, because this can not be done effectually without destroying the office and character of one of them as money and reducing it to the situation of mere merchandise."

I would invite especial attention to that part of Mr. Blaine's remarks in which he says:

The destruction of silver as money and establishing gold as the sole unit of value must have a ruinous effect on all forms of property except those investments which yield a fixed return in money. These would be enormously enhanced in value and would gain a disproportionate and unfair advantage over every other species of property.

This is precisely what I contend. The gold standard means the contraction of the currency, and a contraction of the currency means falling prices in all the products of labor, while investments which yield a fixed return in money would command as many dollars as before, and by reason of the enhanced purchasing power of these dollars the investment, yielding such fixed income, would gain a disproportionate and unfair advantage over all other forms of property.

It is for this reason, sir, that all the money lenders of this and the Old World, all the stock gamblers, all the men who have fixed incomes, are seeking to "fasten more firmly upon this country the single gold standard."

In the Senate of the United States, February 15, 1878 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Forty-fifth Congress, volume 7, page 1052), Senator Ingalls, of Kansas, in discussing the single gold standard, says:

If we are to have a monometallic standard, I believe silver to be immeasurably preferable to gold. It is less subject to fluctuation; its production is more steady; its cost more uniform.

No enduring fabric of national prosperity can be builded on gold. Gold is the money of monarchs; kings covet it; the exchanges of nations are effected by it. Its tendency is to accumulate in vast masses in the commercial centers and to move from kingdom to kingdom in such volumes as to unsettle values and disturb the finances of the world. It is the instrument of gamblers and speculators and the idol of the miser and the thief. Being the object of so much adoration, it becomes haughty and sensitive and shrinks at the approach of danger, and whenever it is most needed it always disappears. At the slightest alarm it begins to look for a refuge. It flies from the nation at war to the nation at peace. War makes it a fugitive. No people in a great emergency ever found a faithful ally in gold. It is the most cowardly and treacherous of all metals. It makes no treaty that it does not break.

It has no friend whom it does not sooner or later betray. Armies and navies are not maintained by gold. In times of panic and calamity, shipwreck and disaster, it becomes the chief agent and minister of ruin. No nation ever fought a great war by the aid of gold. On the contrary, in the crises of greatest peril it becomes an enemy more potent than the foe in the field; but when the battle is won and peace has been secured, gold reappears and claims the fruits of victory. In our own civil war it is doubtful if the gold of New York and London did not work us greater injury than the powder and lead and iron of the rebels. It was the most invincible enemy of the public credit. Gold paid no soldier or sailor. It refused the national obligations. It was worth most when our fortunes were lowest. Every defeat gave it increased value. It was in open alliance with our enemies the world over, and all its energies were evoked for our destruction. But as usual, when danger has been averted and the victory secured, gold swaggers to the front and asserts the supremacy. But silver is the money of the people. It is the money of wages and retail. Its tendency is toward diffusion and dissemination. It enters into the minute concerns of traffic and is exchanged day by day for daily bread.

It penetrates the remotest channels of commerce, and its abundance, bulk, and small subdivision prevent its deportation in sufficient amounts to disturb or unsettle values. If it retires at the approach of danger, or from the presence of an inferior currency, it still remains at home ready to respond to the first summons for its return. During a late visit to a remote portion of Arkansas I was surprised by the great amount of old silver in circulation, including Mexican and pillar dollars and American halves and quarters coined half a century ago. Seeking an explanation, I was told by the merchants that upon the withdrawal and retirement of the fractional paper currency these old coins immediately appeared in sufficient quantities to supply all needs of trade, conclusively showing that when silver vanished at the beginning of the legal-tender-paper period it had been hoarded among the people and had promptly returned to circulation when its presence was required. I have no doubt that two hundred and fifty millions of silver would be thus readily absorbed among the people of the United States, forming a vast, permanent, stable accumulation which would be an enduring basis of prosperity, less liable than any other currency to the mutations and vicissitudes of financial panics and disasters.

Hon. John G. Carlisle seems to have been mysteriously converted to the single gold standard and the appreciation of the gold dollar while a member of Grover Cleveland's Cabinet, and lent his great influence in the last campaign to the election of President McKinley and the inauguration of a policy in the interest of gold gamblers, which in all the years of his long political career he had denounced. In speaking of the gold standard and its consequences upon the people, in the House of Representatives, Forty-fifth Congress, volume 7, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 43 of Appendix, he said:

According to my view of the subject, the conspiracy which seems to have been formed here and in Europe to destroy by legislation and otherwise from three-sevenths to one-half of the metallic money of the world is the most gigantic crime of this or any other age.

The consummation of such a scheme would ultimately entail more misery upon the human race than all the wars, pestilences, and famines that ever occurred in the history of the world. The absolute and instantaneous destruction of half the entire movable property of the world, including houses, ships, railroads, and all other appliances for carrying on commerce, while it would be felt more sensibly at the moment, would not produce anything like the prolonged distress and disorganization of society that must inevitably result from the permanent annihilation of one-half of the metallic money of the world. With an ample currency, an industrious and frugal people will speedily rebuild their works of internal improvement and repair losses of property, but no amount of industry or economy on the part of the people can create money. When the Government creates it or authorizes it, the citizen may acquire it, but he can do nothing more.

I need scarcely add that the above sentiments were freely expressed by all the leading statesmen of the country outside of those who were under the influence of Eastern capital. These men saw then and contended for the very things for which I am contending now, that, money being the measure of value, prices would go up and down just as we increase or diminish the volume of money, and I might say here and now that this has been the experience of the world in every age and in every country since the dawn of civilization. It is a fact well known to every historian that nations have grown and prospered while keeping in circulation a large volume of money, and it is equally well known that no nation has ever contracted its volume of money but that stagnation in business and falling prices have followed, and that these financial distresses have been in the ratio of the contraction. It is not only the experience of the world that such is true, but it has been taught, I believe, by almost every political economist from Aristotle to the present hour.

Mr. John Locke, in his Considerations, says:

Money, while the same quantity is passing up and down the kingdom in trade, is really a standing measure of the falling and rising values of other things in reference to one another, and the alteration in price is truly in them only. But if you increase or lessen the quantity of money current in traffic in any place, then the alteration of value is in the money.

David Hume says:

It is not difficult to perceive that it is the total quantity of money in circulation in any country which determines what portion of that quantity shall exchange for a certain portion of the goods or commodities of that country. It is the proportion between the circulating money and the commodities in the market which determines the price.

David Ricardo, in his Political Economy, at page 326, says:

That commodities would rise or fall in price in proportion to the increase or diminution of money I assume as a fact which is incontrovertible. Mr. Bosanquet, in his admission of the effects on price from the discovery of a mine, shows that he has no such doubts on this subject as the governor of the bank, who, when asked by the committee, "Do you conceive that a very considerable reduction of the amount of the circulating medium would not tend in any degree to increase its relative value compared with commodities, and that a considerable increase of it would have no tendency whatever to augment the price of commodities in exchange for such circulating medium?" answered, "It is a subject on which such a variety of opinions are entertained that I do not feel myself competent to give a decided answer."

Mr. James Walker, in his Political Economy, says:

That in whatever degree the quantity is increased or diminished, other things remaining the same, in that same proportion the value of the whole and of every part is reciprocally diminished or increased.

John Stuart Mill, in his Political Economy, page 299, says:

That an increase of the quantity of money raises prices and a diminution lowers them is the most elementary proposition in the theory of currency, and without it we should have no key to any of the others.

Mr. Torrens, in his Essay on the Production of Wealth, at page 336, says:

We have seen that a fall in the value of the circulating medium alters the distribution of wealth in favor of the productive classes. A rise in its value has a contrary effect, enriching the class whose revenues are expended unproductively, at the loss of those by the agency of whose labor and capital the wealth of the community is created. A greater portion of the farmer's produce would be required to pay his rent (or his debt), and a less portion would remain to be reinvested in cultivation and improvement. The salaries of public functionaries, the wages of all the civil and military servants of the state, though nominally the same, would in reality be increased. The mortgagee, the annuitant, and the fund holder, all those who, without actively engaging in the work of production, living upon the interest of money, would have their revenues increased at the expense of these funds which pay the profits of stock and the wages of labor. In all the transactions of trade the creditor would be benefited at the cost of the debtor.

Mr. Francis A. Walker, in his Political Economy, at page 136, says:

But while the money supply varies thus incessantly, it is none the less a real thing, so that at any given time an increase in the demand for money will enhance the value of money—that is, will lower prices—and a decrease in the demand will reduce the value of money—that is, will raise prices.

We have spoken of reducing the value of money as equivalent to raising prices, and of enhancing the value of money as equivalent to lowering prices. This is manifest enough to anyone who thinks of the matter; but the student of political economy needs to become so familiar with this equivalency that he will not have to think consciously about it, but the one mode of expression will always and instantly suggest its equivalent. To enhance the value of money is, of course, to give a larger purchasing power to each integral part of the circulating money—that is, to each piece or coin and to any given number of pieces or coins. But if money purchases more of other things, other things, conversely, purchase less of money—that is, bear lower prices. On the other hand, to say that the value of money is lowered is to say that money purchases less of other things; but if money purchases less of other things, other things, conversely, purchase more of money—that is, bear higher prices.

Fichte says:

The amount of money current in the States represents everything that is purchasable on the surface of the State. If the quantity of purchasable articles increases, while the quantity of money remains the same, the value of the money increases in the same ratio; if the quantity of money increases, while the quantity of purchasable articles remains the same, the value of money decreases in the same ratio.

Mr. Torrens, in his Political Economy, says:

Gold is a commodity governed, as all other commodities are governed, by the law of supply and demand. If the value of all other commodities in relation to gold rises and falls as their quantities diminish or increase, the value of gold in relation to commodities must rise and fall as its quantity is diminished or increased.

And Mr. Cernuschi, one of the greatest financiers of the age, says:

The purchasing power of money is in direct proportion to the volume of money existing.

Mr. Francis A. Walker, in his work on Money, at pages 59 and 60, quotes from John Stuart Mill as follows:

It is to be remarked that this ratio would be precisely that in which the quantity of money had been increased. If the whole money in circulation was doubled, prices would be doubled. If it was only increased one-fourth, prices would rise one-fourth. The very same effect would be produced on prices if we supposed the goods diminished instead of the money increased; and the contrary effect if the goods were increased or the money diminished. So that the value of money, other things being the same, varies inversely as its quantity, every increase of quantity lowering the value (or purchasing power), and every diminution raising it in a ratio exactly equivalent.

Mr. Walker adopts these views with the mere exception that the purchasing power of money as such depends not entirely upon the amount in circulation, but upon that and the rapidity with which it circulates, or what some authors term the velocity of exchanges, and upon this, so far as I have been able to investigate, all standard authors are agreed.

It is needless to multiply authority on the foregoing proposition, that is, that the purchasing power of money rises with a decrease in its volume and falls with an increase. This is true for the very obvious reason that the price of money is governed by the quantity of it, the same as a commodity. Men who must have money with which to feed and clothe their families must buy it with the product of their labor; if a farmer, he must buy it with the proceeds of his farm, the laborer with his muscle, and the professional man with his knowledge.

If money, therefore, is scarce, the farmer must sell more of his wheat, his beef or pork, with which to buy a dollar; the laborer more of his muscle, the professional man more of his time and energy, and these classes are in consequence injured, while the man who has the money to sell is benefited thereby. This is as true and certain as, if a few men owned all the wheat, or controlled it, that they would be benefited by a raise in the price of wheat, and all those who had wheat to buy would thereby be injured. But I may be asked, "What benefit would accrue to the people by an increase in the volume of money and a consequent rise in prices?" "Would not the seller at high prices be compelled to purchase at high prices, and hence be no better off than before?"

To the questions I would answer, if this country and its people were out of debt, the gain by a cheaper currency would not be so great, but would still be beneficial, because of the increased business which would result from such a condition, for it is known that in all countries an inflation of the currency has resulted in great business improvement, both public and private, and hence we would have the difference between stagnation and activity. But it is not true that we are out of debt. We are one of the great debtor nations of the world. Our National Government, States, counties, and municipalities are bonded, and our people have their homes and farms under mortgage to the amount of billions. For this reason, therefore, a cheaper currency and an increase in prices would be of incalculable value to all our people, except, perhaps, to the money lender and the coupon clipper.

But we need not rely for the proof of the above statements upon political economists or historians. Let us take what is within the knowledge of the older men upon this floor. There was a time when we had a large volume of money in circulation among the people. I refer to the years 1864 to 1867. I know it is claimed by the advocates of the gold standard that we have more money in circulation now than we had then, and tables are given in the Statistical Abstracts of the United States and in the reports of the Treasury Department, making comparative statements of the money in circulation per capita for each year from 1860 down to the present time, which tables show that our per capita circulation is larger now than it was in 1865; but the only trouble with these tables is, they are absolutely false, as I shall proceed to prove.

On May 20, 1878, Hon. Morton C. Hunter, Republican Representative from Indiana, delivered a speech in Congress, to be found in CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Forty-fifth Congress, Appendix to Part V, commencing on page 112, in which he gives the following table:

NOTE.—The one and two year notes of 1863, the compound-interest notes, and the seven-thirties of 1864 and 1865, being interest-bearing, never enter into the circulation to any considerable extent. The Secretary of the Treasury in his annual report for 1865, page 9, estimated that only $30,000,000 of the $205,549,040 one and two year notes and compound-interest notes outstanding October 31, 1865, were then in circulation.

J. T. POWER, Chief of Division.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Warrant Division, May 10, 1878.

The note at the bottom was the opinion of Mr. Porter, the chief of the division, and merely an estimate of the amount of Government paper that was not in circulation; but it was all outstanding and among the people, and, applying the same rule that is now applied by the Treasury Department in making its estimate of the amount of money in circulation among the people per capita, was all in circulation. The Treasury Department estimates that we have at this time twenty-two dollars and a fraction in circulation per capita, and to do it they estimate all the money outside of the Government Treasury as being in circulation. If they would make an estimate of the bank reserves and of the money hoarded and deduct that from the circulation at this time, as they sought to do in making their calculation of the money in circulation in 1865, we would have less than $12 in actual circulation per capita at this time.

I only refer you to these things at this time to show you the unfairness that is being practiced upon the people to deceive them as to the effect of a large supply of money. It will be seen from the above table that there was outstanding among the people of Government paper currency June 30, 1865, the sum of $1,512,773,307.76.

It will be seen further, by reference to the Treasurer's report for 1865–66, on page 5, that we had in circulation on the 1st day of October, 1865, national-bank notes to the amount of $171,321,903, and on the same page that we had in circulation State-bank notes to the amount of $78,867,575.

Now, it will also be borne in mind, and is so conceded by nearly all reports, that there was about $25,000,000 of specie in circulation on the Pacific Slope, which makes a grand total of $1,641,556,065.76. The population of the United States is estimated at about 33,000,000 in 1865. Now, divide the sum of $1,641,556,065.76 by 33,000,000, and you will find the amount of money in circulation per capita June 30, 1865, to be the sum of $49.74+.

It will be further borne in mind that prior to that time and since the breaking out of the rebellion, in 1861, the seceded States were making and using their own money; so that to arrive at a proper estimate of the amount of money in circulation among the people of the North it would be proper to deduct 11,000,000, being the population of the seceding States, from the 33,000,000, the total population, which would leave as the actual number of people using the sum of money which I have described but 22,000,000. Now, if we divide the sum of $1,641,556,065.76, the amount of money outstanding, by 22,000,000, we find that we had outstanding in the Northern States just previous to and at the close of the war the sum of $74.61+ per capita.

Now, suppose, for the sake of argument, that we drop out of our calculation all of the one and two year notes of 1863, all of the compound-interest notes, and all of the 7.30 notes, aggregating the sum of $817,705,190, there would still be left, as admitted by all, in actual circulation, according to the note of Mr. Porter to which I have referred, $823,850,875.76, which would give a per capita circulation to the whole population, including the Southern States, of $24.96+, a much greater sum than is in circulation to-day; and when we deduct, which is proper to be done, the 11,000,000 in the seceded States who were not using our currency, it would give us, on the claims of those who desire to make us believe that scarce money works no injury, a sum per capita of $37.44+, or a third more than they claim we have to-day.

I have given these last figures, not that they are correct, but to show that, admitting all that is claimed by the advocates of dear money, the records disclose that our circulation has been contracted nearly one-half per capita; but the real fact is that the 7.30 notes were in circulation as well as the one and two year and compound-interest notes, and were paid out in large quantities to the soldiers in the field, and unless all rules of computation must be set aside we had in circulation among the people of the Northern States just prior to and at the close of the war the sum of $74.61+ per capita, and this, too, on the assumption that there was not a dollar of silver or copper coin in circulation in all the country, which everyone knows was not true, for we had coined from 1861 to 1865, inclusive, at the mints of the United States in minor coins $2,775,390, and of silver in the same period $7,146,646.40, and of gold $175,103,531, making a total coinage of $185,045,527.40, of which no account is taken in the above calculation save $25,000,000 of gold on the Pacific Slope. So it must appear to every thinking man that the claims made that our per capita circulation is as great to-day as it ever was is wholly unfounded in fact, and must be made by those who make it either from ignorance of the facts or a desire to deceive.

It would be needless, perhaps, for me to say that when this vast sum was outstanding the country was full of prosperity. Such a thing as a tramp was unknown. There were no strikes or lockouts and but few mortgaged homes. The Union Army discharged a million and a half of men and the Confederacy a million more, and this great army entered the marts of trade and business, and into agricultural pursuits, and at once found ready employment at high wages. Every forge was ablaze and every spindle turned, and it may be truthfully said that it was an era of the greatest prosperity the nation had ever before or has since enjoyed.

The farmer received splendid prices for his produce and was counted one of America's most independent citizens. This state of affairs, however, was not long to last. By reference to the table which I have read, prepared by Mr. Powers, it will be seen that notwithstanding we had taken back into the Union eleven millions of people to share in the circulating medium of the country the work of contraction was immediately begun, and up to 1873 the vast sum of Government paper money had been contracted to $737,202,118.52, and all know what followed. Prices had steadily fallen, business became stagnant, and close upon its heels came the great panic which paralyzed business and filled the thoroughfares of our country with tramps and our towns and cities with soup houses. To show the picture is not overdrawn, I read a table of prices of the leading farm products from the year 1865 up to and including the year 1889. a Upland.

b No data.

I will present it in another form, so that at a glance you can see the rapid decline in the prices of all farm products under a contraction of the currency. I will only go back to 1872, when all prices, as you have seen, had already fallen under the blighting touch of the gold king. In 1872 the average value of corn in the United States was $12.24 per acre. In 1895 it was only $6.91, a loss to the farmer of $5.33 per acre on his corn. In 1872 the average price of wheat per acre in the United States was $14.87. In 1895 it had fallen to $6.99, a loss to the farmer of $7.98 per acre. In the former year rye was worth per acre $10.83, and in 1895 but $6.33. In 1872 oats were worth $10.14 per acre, and in 1895 but $5.87. The same years, respectively, barley was worth $14.20 and $8.88 per acre and buckwheat $15.04 and $9.09. (See Statistical Abstract United States, 1895, page 298.)

From these figures it is not difficult to see why the farmers have been driven to the wall and why the wealth of the country has passed into the hands of a few people. All the wreck and ruin that we see on every hand is due to the speculators and moneyed oligarchy pushing the country on to the gold standard. What for? To make the Jews of Lombard and Wall streets rich out of the toil, tears, suffering, and blood of our people.

But, sir, contraction not only lowers prices but, aided by a high protective tariff, breeds trusts and combinations of capital whose object is to control the output of products and the price of the same. No one who has watched the course of events but who is aware that as prices of laborers' products fall the people buy less, and so large combinations of capital find it to their advantage to combine and crush out all small concerns. This of course enables them to both control the output and the price.

Why, sir, the first trust was formed in the United States in 1865—the Western Union Telegraph Company. They have fattened and thrived under our vicious financial system until they have grown arrogant and defiant, and seek to and do, in a large measure, shape the legislation of our country; and I say, though I regret that I have to say it, that our courts are not free from the influence and power of these soulless creatures of law.

Some startling exhibitions of this influence have been seen in the flagrant use of the writ of injunction, by means of which labor has been trampled upon in the interest of organized capital.

Here is a list of trusts, with their capital stock, which have, like a fungus growth, sprung up to bleed and curse the country during this reign of the British monetary system in America. The table is taken from the World Almanac for 1897:

It will be seen by a computation of this table that the common stock of these soulless creatures is $3,134,259,124, that their preferred stock is $269,616,543, making a total capital stock of $3,403,875,667. It is impossible to determine the exact dividends that these several corporations have paid to their stockholders, but as far as their dividends are given they amount to 6.8 per cent on the entire capital stock of these companies. So it is fair to estimate that all of these several corporations are paying dividends in at least that percentage.

Assuming that all these trusts are paying only 6.8 per cent—which I shall presently show is not true—their net income would be $231,463,545.35, which, if divided by the number of our population, estimated at seventy-three millions, would be $3.17+ for every man, woman, and child in the United States. Now, if we estimate five to each family, then it appears that every family in the United States is contributing to these trusts each year $15.85. But it will be borne in mind that these trusts are largely made up from the various manufacturing corporations of the country. In the World Almanac before referred to, on page 169, will be found a table giving the number of manufacturers in each State and Territory, the amount of wages paid, the number employed, miscellaneous expenses, capital invested, and the value of the products. Of these, 322,688 have reported.

Their entire capital invested was at the time of these reports $6,139,397,785; their miscellaneous expenses were $615,337,620; wages paid to officers, firm members, and clerks, $372,078,691; all other employees, $1,799,671,492; cost of materials used, $5,021,453,326; value of products, $9,056,764,996. By a simple computation it will be seen that after deducting all expenses, including the salaries paid to officers, firm members, and clerks, including also materials used, the valne of the products exceeded expenses by $1,227,879,557. By this it appears that after paying large salaries to officers, firm members, and clerks, these corporations had left 20 per cent as a profit on their investment, and when we consider that at least one-third of the capital stock is water, it will be seen that their profits will be equal to 30 per cent on the actual capital invested. So it is not hard to understand how the wealth is drifting from the people into the hands of the trusts and corporations as a result of high tariff and the gold standard.

Just here I will say, the concentration of wealth into few hands breeds discontent and disloyalty among the people.

It is a fact that already our courts are looked upon by thousands of our people with distrust. The poor man has already begun to feel that the legal forum is no place for him, and especially so if a wealthy corporation is on the other side of the controversy. The laboring man sees in our courts only the engine of organized capital to wreck his hopes and ambitions for a better condition in life.

Sir, men may talk and sneer at these statements, but to every candid lover of his country and his race these are alarming conditions. But, notwithstanding all these things, we are told that we must further contract our currency by a retirement of the greenbacks, that old dollar that went with our flag to the front when gold had hid away and was waiting like a vulture to feed upon our decaying hopes; the old dollar that fed and clothed the wives and children of the brave men on the field; the old dollar loved and honored because of its sacred memory. The dollar that all men like, outside of a few infernal Jews, must be put away to aid Wall street to further its schemes of peculation and plunder; that the burdens of the people must be made heavier by further lowering prices, to the end that Wall street may reap a greater profit.

What we want to do now is not to decrease the volume of money, but to enlarge it, for to enlarge it means better prices for labor's product, and that means a revival in business and a return to prosperity.

But how shall we increase the volume of money? First, by returning to the free and unlimited coinage of silver without waiting for England to tell us we may. Here I know some one is ready to ask that foolish question: "Do you want to make a 50-cent dollar?"

That question is a fool's argument. There is not now and never was such a thing as a 50-cent dollar. If there is a gentleman here who ever saw one in his life, he will do me a favor by telling when, where, and what it was called.

Do you say it was greenbacks? If so, I answer greenbacks were promissory notes and not money. Here let us stop and see what money is. Money is not gold, silver, or paper. If you had 1 pound troy of gold, in bars, and you owed your neighbor 5 cents, you could not make him a legal tender of the entire pound of gold in payment of his debt. Why? Because it is only a commodity and possesses no function of money. But suppose you cut it up into pieces weighing just as much as a twenty-dollar gold piece and of the same fineness, could you compel your neighbor to take one of such pieces in payment of his debt of 5 cents? There is but one answer to it. No; because there is not one cent of money in it. Now, take that same piece to the mint and have it coined into a twenty-dollar piece. You owe another neighbor $20. You offer it to him, and it is a legal tender. It now is $20 in money. Let me ask you, where did it receive its monetary value? To this there is but one answer. The law imparted the quality of money to it. Now, take the same piece, place it on an anvil and strike it with a hammer a few times. Take it to the scales and weigh it. It weighs just what it did before. Is it money? No, because the stamp of the Government, that which makes it money, is gone. Sir, I say, and no man can successfully dispute it, money is preeminently a creature of law, no more, no less; and if this Government takes 412½ grains of silver and stamps it 100 cents, it is $1.

Of this fact we have a practical standing proof. Our present standard silver dollar contains 412½ grains. The bullion in it, as compared with gold, is worth a fraction less than 50 cents, and yet the stamped dollar backed by law making it a legal tender is as good as gold. It is an irredeemable dollar backed by nothing but the sovereignty of this great Government.

The advocates of the gold standard see and feel the force of this living, incontrovertible argument, and to avoid its force they tell the people that the silver dollar is redeemable in gold and that is why it remains at par.

Why, sir, I see this statement almost every day in the patent sides of the Republican country press. No paper of national standing would care to make the statement, but in the articles prepared and sent out on stereotyped plates to the country press this claim is made, made to deceive the people, because the argument made by the silver dollar can be answered in no other way. The silver dollar is not redeemable either in gold or any other kind of money, and yet, because the Government has declared it to be a dollar, it is so.

Mr. Chairman, we who favor free coinage do not want or favor a 50-cent dollar. We want and intend to have a dollar just like the silver dollar we now have. Four hundred twelve and one-half grains of standard silver, stamped by the Government mint, backed by the sovereign decree of seventy-three millions of people declaring it to be a legal tender for all debts, both public and private, and with that dollar, or gold dollars at the option of the Government and not at the option of the creditor, we propose to pay all debts of the Government which by their terms are payable in coin.

But you say, "That is dishonest!"

Sir, when our bonds were funded by the act of July 14, 1870, it was expressly and explicitly declared by the letter of the law that our bonds were payable in the standard coin of that date, and the declaration has been inserted in the very body of all our bonds issued since. Everyone knows that at that date our standard coin consisted of gold and standard silver at the ratio of 16 to 1. What followed? Germany, where a large amount of our bonds was held, proceeded to cripple our silver by demonetizing it, and forced Holland to suspend her coinage. In fact, all the holders of our securities have been using all their efforts to force silver down and out of existence as money.

Sir, it comes with poor grace for these same people to criticise us because we want to pay according to the terms of the contract. Dishonest? Suppose I would sell you an article and agree to take a certain horse in payment, and before the day of payment arrived I go and maliciously shoot and cripple the horse and then raise the cry that it is dishonest for you to insist that I take him in payment. Would I have the sympathy of any good man? If the horse is less valuable, I made him so, and no one with a proper conception of justice would say that you should suffer for my wrongful act.

Sir, if silver is crippled, who did it?

It was done at the instance of the holders of Government securities and their allies, the manipulators of gold. Shall our people be made to suffer by paying in a different thing from that which they agreed to pay, and thereby double their burdens, to satisfy the avarice of these public plunderers?

Have the people no rights worthy of our respect?

But would the free coinage of silver bring prosperity?

If it would, then we ought to have it. If not, we should abandon it. That it would increase our circulation, none will deny. That an increase in the circulation raises prices I have abundantly shown.

What will be the first effect of a rise in prices?

When a general rise in prices occurs, the agricultural classes are the first to feel it. I believe history bears out this statement. "When the farmer prospers, we all prosper" is axiomatic. Why? Because the farmer must buy in proportion to the money he receives for his produce. When prices are low he can buy but little, and as a consequence retail merchants sell but little, their trade with wholesale houses must be curtailed, and as the trade of the wholesaler falls off, the manufacturer sells less and so must lessen his output. This he can only do by either running on part time or closing his mill permanently.

This lessens the demand for labor and forces a reduction in wages. If prices rise, the farmer is enabled to better feed and clothe his family; better able to build a comfortable home, and will do it. Then the retail merchant finds a ready sale for his goods; his trade increases; he buys more from the wholesaler, and the wholesaler in turn more from the manufacturer. As a result the mills must run on full time, a demand for labor is created, and wages rise. This is the way, and the only way, to open the mills of this country and to bring blessings of plenty to all our people.

As I said before, the gold gambler may in a measure lose his calling, but the toiling millions will receive the just reward of their labor and an era of great prosperity would follow.

In this connection I want to read some opinions from others on this subject.

In an article written by Mr. Henri Cernuschi, appearing in the Paris Économiste and reproduced in the Omaha World-Herald under date of June 26, 1896, Mr. Cernuschi says:

> The present monetary situation in the United States is doubly unfavorable to the economic interests of that great nation, since, owing to the state of affairs now obtaining, the gold-standard countries of Europe, and particularly the manufacturing countries like England, find it enormously advantageous to purchase their raw materials in those countries whose standard is depreciated with regard to gold, like Asiatic countries, Russia, or the Argentine Republic, and, on the other hand, to sell their manufactured products in the American market, where they are paid for in gold currency.
> The present monetary policy of the United States is consequently very advantageous to the interests of England, a gold monometallic country, but it is utterly ruinous as regards the foreign financial relations of the United States, and especially for its foreign producers.
> This is why, inasmuch as England's attitude prevents the realization of international bimetallism and condemns one-half of the world to gold monometallism and the other half to silver monometallism, I would not hesitate, were I a citizen of the United States, to become—I, Cernuschi, the father of international bimetallism, as I am everywhere called—a silver monometallist.
> From a theoretical point of view, the free coinage of silver at 16 to 1, reestablished by the United States without the concurrence of Europe, would be a vicious solution, but it would nevertheless be a step in the direction of international bimetallism; for under the régime of the new standard the productive power of the United States would receive so enormous an impulse, and this development would have such a disastrous effect upon the economic and financial interests of England and the other European nations now governed by the gold standard, that it may be confidently predicted in advance that the course of events would force the adoption of international bimetallism as the only true solution, even upon those who to-day deny the possibility and efficacy of it.

In an article copied in the Chicago Tribune in 1896, from the New York Sun, written by Dr. Dana, one of the ablest gold monometallists in the country, Mr. Dana said:

> The owners of real estate and of tangible property will neither lose nor gain by an alteration in the money standard. Hence every one who has money at his disposal can protect himself against loss by investing his money in farms, houses, and various kinds of merchandise, and, if necessary, borrow more money and use it for the same purposes. He will make a profit on the transaction at the expense of the man from whom he borrows. Under the reign of silver at 16 to 1, a farm or a house and lot now worth $10,000 will be worth $20,000. A bushel of wheat now selling for 50 cents will sell for $1, and sugar, coffee, tea, and similar articles will advance in the same proportion.

I read this for the purpose only of showing that intelligent gold monometallists believe just what I am contending for, to wit, that free coinage of silver will increase the quantity of the circulating medium and that the prices of land and all farm products will rise in price in the ratio of the increase in the circulating medium.

In the Omaha Bee, under date of February 2, 1895, one of the leading Republican papers west of the Mississippi River, appeared an article from the London Statist, under date of February 3, telegraphed to the Bee from London February 1, from which I read the following:

Of course a great country like the United States adopting a silver standard would have influence on the whole world, and silver would undoubtedly rise, but it would be a long time before it reached 60 pence. The great reduction of debts all over the United States by a fall of silver would give the farming and producing classes generally a sense of freedom and prosperity which they have not had for many years, and would give a great stimulus to production. If silver did not rise much for awhile, American cotton, pork, etc., would compete with the product of other countries at a very great advantage, and there would probably be a very rapid and great growth of exports and the beginning of an era of great prosperity.

In the Omaha Sunday World-Herald, under date of July 26, 1896, appeared an article from the London Financial News, one of the leading gold-bug papers of England. When the article appeared, it set forth so strongly the advantages of free silver to America and its disadvantages to Europe, and particularly to England, that the gold organs of this country, seeing no way to answer it, branded it as a forgery, but were compelled afterwards to admit its genuineness after the World-Herald had procured a facsimile of the paper in which it originally appeared. And so I am fully justified in reading it here as an expression of British opinion on the effects of free coinage of silver in America. The article is as follows:

There is a plain moral in the remark that if the United States would venture to cut herself adrift from Europe and take outright to silver, she would have all America and Asia at her back and the command of the markets of both countries. The barrier of gold would be more fatal than any barrier of a custom-house. The bond of silver would be stronger than any bond of free trade. There can be no doubt about it that if the United States were to adopt a silver basis to-morrow, British trade would be ruined before the year was out. Every American would be protected, not only at home but in every other market. Of course the United States would suffer to a certain extent through having to pay her obligations abroad in gold, but the loss of exchange under this head would be a mere drop in the bucket as compared to the profit to be reaped from the markets of South America and Asia, to say nothing of Europe. The marvel is that the United States have not long ago seized the opportunity. It has been a piece of luck that it has never occurred to the Americans to scoop us out of the world's markets by going on a silver basis, and it might serve us right if, irritated by the contemptible apathy of our Government toward the silver problem, the Americans retaliated by freezing out gold? It could easily be done.

I have said that we not only want a home market but also a foreign market, and the greatest opportunity, if promptly seized, lies in the direction of South America and Asia. We have already waited and allowed the British to dictate our financial policy in her own interest and against ours until, by the same means, doubtless, that she used on us in 1873, she has forced China and Japan to adopt the gold standard, attempting thereby to forestall any act of the United States tending to secure the trade of those countries by the adoption of free silver. If, however, this country, without British consent, adopts the double standard, these countries would gladly return with us to their old and established systems of money; and if they did, our action, in the language of Mr. Cernuschi, "would have one of two effects—either it would force European nations to adopt a like standard or else would commercially partition the earth."

That is to say, it would make the United States the great commercial mart of the Western Hemisphere.

I want here to call your attention to the trade of some of these South American countries with the United States and with other countries, for the purpose of showing the importance of doing something to enable us to secure their trade and commerce.

By reference to the Commercial Directory, prepared by the Bureau of American Republics, for the year 1897, at page 10, we find a table giving the imports to the Argentine Republic from all the countries trading with that Republic for the first nine months of 1896. During that period Germany sold in that country merchandise to the amount of $9,953,632; France, $9,127,420; Great Britain, $32,623,052. The entire goods sold to that country for the same period by other nations amounted to $80,834,739, of which large sum the United States sold only $7,061,898.

In 1896 the total exports from the United States to Brazil amounted to the sum of $14,000,000 in round numbers, while the exports from Great Britain to Brazil amounted to between $40,000,000 and $50,000,000.

In the year 1895 Great Britain exported to Chile merchandise to the amount of $40,913,074. During that year the exportations from other countries to Chile amounted to $55,419,109, of which amount the United States sold but $1,000,647. (Same authority quoted before, page 418.)

In the years 1895 and 1896 British Guiana purchased from other nations merchandise to the amount of $6,929,055.65, of which amount the United States furnished only $1,831,904.91 worth.

These are only a few of the many countries whose trade might be largely supplied by the United States if we were wise enough to avail ourselves of the opportunities now open before us, but if we wait until England fastens her gold standard not only upon us, but on all these countries, our opportunities will be gone. This vast trade, aggregating hundreds of millions annually, might be secured by the adoption of the money of the Constitution, but the cry is raised by the gold speculators that they will "dump their silver onto the United States;" but if they do, they will take our goods in return.

To supply this great demand, as well as an increasing demand at home, will open every mill in the United States and keep them constantly running, and if these countries bring their silver to America they will pour it into the lap of American toil in exchange for American labor, and once more our people will be blessed with plenty in the home of the farmer and in the cottage of the laborer. Merchants, tradesmen, and professional men will alike share in the general prosperity, and I believe that once more our merchant marine will sail on every sea and anchor in every port, and once more the Stars and Stripes will be seen and honored by all peoples and we will have indeed become the great trading mart of the Western Hemisphere.

Are we wise enough and courageous enough to seize this opportunity, or shall we, as a nation, listen to the dictates of the money changers and stock gamblers, who cringe like cowards at the feet of the Lombard Jews?

My Republican friends, pray God for a baptism of the spirit of 1776.

Mr. BELL. I yield to the gentleman from Nevada.

The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BELL. The gentleman will return to me whatever time he does not consume.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has eleven minutes remaining.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, as a mere question of economy in the expenses of the Government the policy laid down by the gentleman from Illinois may be sustained, though there is room for contention as to that. But we have to consider here a great question of governmental policy.

We all know that in the past fifteen or twenty years by administrative construction the Government has stripped itself of its option to pay its demand obligations in the shape of greenbacks, etc., in either gold or silver and has transferred that option to the holders of its obligations. As a result we have the declaration made to-day that there are nearly $900,000,000 of Government obligations in the shape of greenbacks, Treasury notes, silver certificates, and silver coin, all of which are regarded by the Treasury Department as debts redeemable at the demand of the holder in gold. That has necessitated the holding of a great gold fund by the Government in its Treasury, and with a view of maintaining that fund, we have on several occasions issued large amounts of bonds, which are now a tax upon the resources of the country.

What has been the policy of the Government then? To coax the gold into the Treasury, and with that view the Government reaches out its hand to the frontier and takes the gold from the miner at the point of production, gives him every facility of payment, and then transports it to the place most convenient for mintage. What does it pay for that gold? A check on Government depositories, which is paid in greenbacks, Treasury notes, or silver certificates.

A MEMBER. Or gold.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes, or gold; though as a rule the paper money or certificates of the Government are accepted in payment. Thus by this process gold is drawn into the Treasury and greenbacks, silver certificates, and silver paid out of the Treasury. On the other hand, the policy of the Government is to stimulate the export of silver from the Treasury. It coaxes the import of gold into the Treasury, and it stimulates the export of silver from the Treasury. How does it do it? By the payment of transportation charges upon silver to the uttermost limits of the country, with a view to distributing it throughout the country in circulation and thus relieving the Treasury of silver. So we have the policy of the Government in favor of coaxing gold into the Treasury and of exporting silver out of the Treasury.

Mr. KNOWLES. If the gentleman from Nevada will permit me, I have here a certificate from the Secretary of the Treasury saying that during the past year the Government has paid $81,526 for the transportation of silver coin from the various depositories to the banks.

Mr. NEWLANDS. There you have it—$81,000 for the transportation of silver coin from the Treasury to the banks, and only $40,000 has been paid for the transportation of the gold bullion from the frontier to the mints.

Mr. SHAFROTH. And $36,000 of that has been returned to the United States Treasury by reason of selling gold bars at one-tenth of a cent premium.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It seems to me that as long as this policy is to be maintained of turning silver into debts and redeeming it in gold, as long as it is the policy to maintain this large fund of gold in the Treasury for the purpose of redemption, it is much better to pay $40,000 a year for the transportation of gold to the Treasury than to issue $200,000,000 of bonds for the purpose of replenishing a diminished Treasury; and it seems to me, for these strong reasons, that every man, be he Democrat, Republican, Populist, or silver man, should oppose now an ill-considered change in this policy presented in an appropriation bill, and should insist upon the Government maintaining this cheap and inexpensive method of coaxing gold into the Treasury.

Mr. HOPKINS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOPKINS. Suppose the amendment offered by my colleague is adopted, will that have any perceptible effect in gathering the gold or of disposing of it to the United States Government, in your judgment?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I understand the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] extends only to the mints. It prevents the purchase on favored terms at the assay office. It seems to me that the policy of the Government should be maintained of reaching its hand out in every direction and offering these facilities for the transfer of gold to the Treasury.

Another thing must be recollected. If this bullion is not caught up by the Government immediately, it is likely to drift to foreign countries. Are you aware of the fact that since 1889 there has been produced in the United States thirty to forty millions of gold, and we have only had in that whole period between twenty-five and forty millions added to the gold stock of the country? The balance has drifted to Russia, Austria, and other European countries. It seems to me that the gentleman ought not to deprive the Government of this economical method of reaching out and gathering the gold for its own Treasury.

As a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, I have had occasion to examine the Mint reports running back a number of years. I can not refer now to the particular year, but I think it was in the administration of Mr. Leech that the Mint Director refers to the policy of the purchase by the Government at the assay office as a means of drawing gold into the Treasury. And if my recollection is correct, ex-Secretary Fairchild himself, in his recent statement before the Banking Committee, comments upon the methods employed of drawing gold into the Treasury and refers with approval to this very method of paying for gold with a check on a Government depository, which the Government redeems in greenbacks, Treasury notes, or silver certificates. There is no evidence whatever that the Government has changed its policy in this matter, and it does not seem to me that real economy of administration requires that in order to save $40,000 or $50,000 per annum for freight we should reverse a policy that has maintained the gold fund of the Treasury with such economy and benefit to the administration of fiscal affairs.

I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL].

Mr. CANNON. Now, the gentlemen who agreed with my friend from Colorado have had an hour. I should be glad if the debate on our side could be limited to twenty-five minutes, instead of an hour, and I should like to have unanimous consent to have the debate close in that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] asks unanimous consent that debate close in twenty-five minutes. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention of the committee for five minutes I think, so far as I am concerned, I am ready for a vote. I will ask that the Clerk send me that amendment that I have proposed. Let us get at the core of what is proposed to be done. The gentleman from Colorado proposes to agree with the Senate and strike it all out. To that proposition I offer the following amendment:

That hereafter, in addition to the charges now imposed upon deposits of gold bullion at any of the assay offices, the cost of transporting such bullion to the nearest mint authorized by appropriations by Congress for operation as a coinage mint shall be collected from the depositor of the same.

That is free coinage. But the citizen of Illinois in my district may have a thousand dollars' worth of bullion. To avail himself of this free-coinage provision he must take it to Philadelphia or New Orleans——

Mr. SHAFROTH. He may take it to St. Louis.

Mr. CANNON. Yes, he may take it to St. Louis; but let me state my case. To avail himself of this free coinage privilege he must take his bullion to some mint. "But," says the gentleman, "your constituent may take it to the St. Louis assay office and deposit it there under the law as it now stands." He may. "He may take it to Deadwood and deposit it there under the law as it now stands." He may. "He may take it to Denver and deposit it there under the law as it now stands." He may. And when the Denver mint is completed and equipped for coinage, he can do it under the law as I propose it shall be altered.

Now, I say that in my judgment the citizen of any State who wants to avail himself of free coinage should be permitted to deposit his bullion, without expense to "Uncle Sam," at some mint equipped for coinage—simply that—nothing more and nothing less. Now, what is it that we propose to do here? We propose to say to the man who deposits his bullion at the St. Louis assay office, where there is no mint, "You shall not receive the mint price for your bullion, but you may have the mint price, less what it would take to lay down the bullion at New Orleans or Philadelphia, or the nearest mint equipped for coinage."

Mr. SHAFROTH. In other words, you propose to make a market for this bullion at Philadelphia and at one other point, but not at any of these other places?

Mr. CANNON. I propose to make a market for it at its coinage value at Philadelphia, at New Orleans, at Denver as soon as the mint is equipped for coinage there, at Carson City, at San Francisco, and at every other point where there is a mint equipped for coinage.

Mr. OGDEN. Not at New Orleans, because you have withheld the appropriation for that mint; you propose to dry it up.

Mr. CANNON. That mint is equipped for coinage.

Mr. OGDEN. But you withhold the appropriation and propose to bring operations there to an end.

Mr. CANNON. Very well; if it is the sense of Congress to close any mint, it will not be included in this provision.

Now, what is the proposition of the gentleman on the other side? To continue the law so as to allow the holder of bullion anywhere where there is an assay office to get the mint price for it. How does that operate? I have some dispatches here to show how it operates. I have a dispatch form Mr. Vanderlip, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. I will read it:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 20.

Hon. J. G. CANNON:

Cost per thousand for transporting gold bullion from points herein named to Philadelphia is as follows:

From Charlotte, N. C., $1 a thousand; St. Louis, Mo., 97 cents a thousand; Boise, Idaho, $3 a thousand; Helena, Mont., $2.36 a thousand; Denver, Colo., $1.85 a thousand; Deadwood, S. Dak., $1.88 a thousand; Omaha, $1.31 a thousand. Omaha to Denver, 54 cents a thousand.

Observe this—

Omaha to Denver, 54 cents a thousand; from Carson to San Francisco, $1.50 a thousand. Am unable to furnish rates of transportation of gold bullion from points in Alaska to Seattle and San Francisco. Balance of information requested will be forwarded to-morrow.

I have that information, and I want to call attention to it:

JANUARY 21.

In further answer to your verbal inquiries of yesterday the following is a copy of telegram sent to assayer in charge of mint at Denver:

"Are the gold bars deposited by Omaha and Grant refined at Denver or Omaha? Answer immediately."

Here is the answer:

Omaha and Grant bars are refined at Omaha, and expressed from there to Denver.

There are reduction works at Omaha; the ores are shipped in and there reduced. Omaha is a long part of the distance from Denver to Philadelphia. But what happens? The very moment that the gold is refined it is put into the hands of the express company and shipped from Omaha to Denver, there being no assay office at Omaha.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The gentleman does not mean to say that the Government pays the transportation on that?

Mr. CANNON. It pays 54 cents. But to ship the bullion from Omaha to Philadelphia would cost you 77 cents more than from Omaha to Denver.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Not that much.

Mr. CANNON. Well, that is what the Secretary of the Treasury says. This document I have been reading is signed "L. J. Gage."

Mr. SHAFROTH. The figures are not right; the amount is a little less.

Mr. CANNON. Well, it is 77 cents difference. In other words, the smelting works at Omaha ship the gold to Denver and save 77 cents more than if shipped along the line of trade to the Philadelphia Mint, where it goes finally for coinage. And then the United States, paying the Philadelphia Mint price for the product of the Omaha smelting works, 600 miles farther west of Omaha, pays $2 a thousand for the transportation of the gold to Philadelphia. My proposition cuts out all of that by the roots. It says to the Omaha smelting works, If you want the coin price for your gold, you must deposit at the mint yourself, and not expect the United States to pay the cost of the transportation.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does not the amendment of the gentleman absolutely permit that very same thing?

Mr. CANNON. No, sir; not by any means.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think it does, because in the amendment you have substituted mints, and therefore shipments can be made to the mints at Omaha or Denver——

Mr. CANNON. Not at all. There is no mint now at Denver for coinage. You will have one there in time; but it is not now in existence. When you do, then the United States can proceed to coin the gold at mint prices for the gold, the same as that paid for it at other mints in the country under a fixed law. But until that mint is established there is nothing more than an assay office there. Gentlemen must remember the distinction.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what are the facts? This is a representative Government. I do not complain at and I do not find fault with my friend from Colorado, or both of my friends from Colorado; I do not fault the gentleman from Nevada; I do not fault the gentleman from Nebraska. I do not fault anybody who represents his constituents. But let us be fair and honest and frank about this matter. You insist that my amendment is wrong, because you want the Government to continue to pay such a bonus on the gold—more than it is worth at any market on earth—at Denver, which will make the Omaha smelting works ship it to Denver rather than to Philadelphia, and thereby get 77 cents a thousand more for it after paying transportation from Omaha to Denver. Now, I am tired of that sort of thing. It is all right for gentlemen representing their constituents. But from my standpoint it is not right as representing the whole people of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It is not a question of constituency, but a question of policy.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman talks of "policy." There is no policy in paying bounties to a favored few, under special legislation, in such matters as this.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. How about sugar? [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman asks about sugar. That stood on entirely different grounds and has no pertinency whatever to the question which is now under discussion. It was bad policy, and did not meet the approval of the country. It is an entirely different subject, and stands on an entirely different footing.

Now, let me show you for a moment the expenses which are incident to these assay offices. St. Louis has an assay office. Do you not know as a matter of fact that there is not $100,000 on an average per annum assayed at St. Louis? And yet that office is kept up. They have a full force of salaried officers, and we pay all of the expenses incident to an assay office. Why? Because somebody wants to deposit all the gold bullion he may have at the assay office there and save its transportation charges. Chicago will want one in time, or wants one now—the greatest city, the second in the United States to New York—and Chicago will want an assay office, possibly a mint, too, to keep on as we are now going. Deadwood is to have one in a short time, and if the law remains as it is we pay for every ounce of gold turned in there $2 a thousand more than the gold bullion is worth at the market rates.

Why do you want one there? It is worth from 5 to 10 per cent to transport gold from the Yukon mining regions down to San Francisco, and they will want one there in a short time. It is a matter of transportation largely.

Why, my friend from Washington [Mr. LEWIS] agonizes for one at Seattle; my other friend from Oregon [Mr. ELLIS] wants one at Portland. There are now throughout the country private people entirely competent to make these assays as well as the Government, and private enterprise can furnish assay offices that will do the work even cheaper than the Government can possibly do it. But you still want the assay office, and you dot them here and there throughout the country. Why? Because the idea is that under such circumstances you may be able to get, at these assay offices, wherever they may be, the mint price for the bullion.

Now, my amendment, which I hope may be adopted, will cut up that whole thing by the roots. I do not believe it to be right. I do not think the Government ought to be made to pay these expenses where private enterprise can accomplish the same results, and where private enterprise alone is benefited. "Oh, but," says my friend—and he proceeds to throw the patient into a fit—"you must take into consideration these questions because gold is going abroad; it is going to New York, to the great centers." Yes, and it will go there without reference to the conditions you may apply to it, if it is profitable to send it there.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Whenever the premium in New York is higher.

Mr. CANNON. Whenever there is one-eighth of 1 per cent profit or one-tenth of 1 per cent profit in shipping gold to Europe or anywhere else, it goes abroad. They will take the very gold that was bought at Deadwood and transported to Denver at $2 a thousand, paid out of the Government Treasury.

Mr. KNOWLES. One dollar and sixty cents.

Mr. CANNON. One dollar and eighty-eight cents, I think it is, to be accurate.

Mr. KNOWLES. One dollar and sixty cents.

Mr. CANNON. Well, whatever it is, they will take that very gold that is coined by the Government free, and if they can get one-tenth of 1 per cent profit they will load it right aboard a steamer and ship it to Europe without regard to the fact that the Government paid this nearly $2 premium on a thousand more than it was worth.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Has the Government offered to turn in any of the profit that it makes on these same gold bars?

Mr. CANNON. I am glad the gentleman spoke of that. The Government does not make any considerable profit on gold bars. I looked into that. At the assay offices they put gold into the shape of bars. It costs almost one-tenth of 1 per cent. Now, the Government gets one-tenth of 1 per cent premium or thereabouts for the gold in bars, because it is more convenient to ship it abroad in that form. One hand washes the other on that, and that is substantially all there is of it. The gentleman can not find that profit with a search warrant.

Now, while he is representing his constituents and trying to hoodoo here in the name of this delicate question of money, I want to strip from this man of straw the mask that he has made and show just where the little joker comes in. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Where did the gentleman get that expression? [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am ready for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman send up his amendment?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. BLAND. I desire two or three minutes.

Mr. BELL. I have two minutes remaining, and I will yield it to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. KNOWLES].

Mr. KNOWLES. Mr. Chairman, I notice that it makes a great deal of difference who it is that asks protection or benefit from this Government. According to the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, this Government last year paid $81,000 for the transportation of coin from the different depositories to the banks. When the banks ask anything it is all right, and this Government can pay $81,000 for the benefit of the poor banks; but when the miner or the producer asks anything, it is quite different.

The entire cost of transporting bullion from the assay offices to the mints last year was less than $40,000, and $36,000 of that was returned to the Government in profit upon gold bars. According to the statement of the gentleman who had the appropriation bill in charge [Mr. BINGHAM], the profit of the mint at Philadelphia last year was $1,600,000. In other words, after all the costs of all assay offices of the United States had been paid, and the cost of transportation upon every ounce of bullion to the mints had been paid, the mints covered into the Treasury of the United States more than $1,000,000 profit. The entire cost of transportation upon the bullion to the mints last year was just $4,000 net.

For more than one hundred years it has been the policy of this nation, as it has been that of every other nation since the dawn of history, to encourage the production of the precious metals. Why, Mr. Chairman, only a short time ago we voted an appropriation of $200,000 to send relief to the Klondike miners. Why? Because, as was argued upon this floor by some of the very gentlemen who are trying to discourage the production of gold in this country, those miners had gone to Alaska for a laudable purpose—that of increasing the stock of the world's gold, and to that extent they were public benefactors. But some of these same gentlemen now seek to discourage the production of gold in our own country by taking away this very small encouragement offered by paying the mint price for gold at the assay office.

Mr. Chairman, the question reaches much deeper than the mere saving of a pittance in transportation charges. It changes the laws of one hundred years without due consideration. It reverses the policy of every civilized government since the dawn of history, and that, too, without due consideration and without the report of any committee having charge of this branch of our governmental policy. If this law is to be changed, a bill shou'd be referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, to whom such matters belong, and not be passed upon the whim of the Committee on Appropriations for the purpose of saving a mere bagatelle in transportation charges.

Mr. Chairman, it is supposed to be the policy of the gold-standard people to keep a large stock of gold on reserve in the Treasury. What better way is opened up to accomplish this end than for the Treasury to take the gold at the mines, issuing its drafts for the same, which drafts are payable in greenbacks, Treasury notes, or silver certificates, while the gold thus taken at the assay office is turned into the Treasury? Is not this a better way to obtain a gold reserve than to issue interest-bearing bonds every few months?

Mr. Chairman, this section was smuggled into the appropriation bill, and nobody knew its contents in time to raise the point of order against it. I charge that it is only a part of the general conspiracy to corner and limit the basis of all money, that it may be the easier controlled by those who profit by its scarcity.

Under the present law less than one-half our output of gold ever reaches our mint. The balance is bought up and hoarded by the gold gamblers. This section was smuggled into this bill for the express purpose of making the cornering process just that much easier, by the Government practically withdrawing from the field and allowing the agents of the Rothschilds to get our gold that much cheaper.

Mr. Chairman, having stolen a bill through Congress demonetizing silver, thus destroying one-half our money supply, and doubling the value of every debt in the country, the money monopolists now seek to discourage and retard the output of gold which they now fear will become so great that they can not corner and control it. They well know that James A. Garfield spoke the truth upon this very floor when he declared that "they who control the currency of any country are absolute masters of all industry and commerce."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has four minutes remaining.

Mr. CANNON. I am ready for a vote.

Mr. BLAND. I should like about three minutes.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman's friends have had an hour, and I have had a little over twenty minutes.

Mr. BLAND. I will not occupy more than three minutes.

Mr. CANNON. How much time have I left, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has four minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I will give three minutes to my friend from Missouri.

Mr. BLAND. I have an hour, if I want it.

Mr. CANNON. No; the debate is closed upon this proposition by unanimous consent.

Mr. BLAND. I misunderstood it.

The CHAIRMAN. Only four minutes remain for debate.

Mr. CANNON. I will give three of them to my friend.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, just why the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] insists upon a change of existing law with reference to this I do not understand. There was a purpose in the enactment of the law which provides that upon the deposit of gold bullion at any of the mints of the United States the owner of the bullion had a right to receive a certificate for the bullion at its money value, that certificate to be receivable for customs dues. It is money. The idea was to utilize the bullion immediately in the way of a circulating medium, and there was the further idea of having bullion deposited at these mints that it might become the property of the Government. The same law, as I understand it, applies to the assay offices.

Now, what is the effect of it? The owners of the gold bullion deposited it at a Government depository, and received a certificate such as I have described. The bullion then became the property of the Government and not the man who had deposited it, the Government paying its own expenses; and if the receiver of the certificate loses it the next day he loses the whole of that bullion, because he has parted with the title; and how much the Government has gained by the loss of these certificates I do not know, but probably something considerable. Now, the idea of the law was to accumulate gold in the Government depositories, in maintaining the gold reserve and gold resumption.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we are very favorable to national banks. We permit them to become depositories of public money and to use it without interest. The policy of that is to keep money in circulation. Why does the gentleman from Illinois wish to discriminate against the mining industry of this country, when we hear nothing and no complaint as to Government favoritism in depositing its money with the national banks and permitting them to loan it out to the people? I do not know what the great mining industry of this country has done to offend the gentleman from Illinois, and why this law, on a mere appropriation bill, should be changed without due consideration and knowledge.

I understand the gentleman's own party made this law, not as a part of the resumption act itself, but afterwards, as an aid to it. The idea was to accumulate gold for a certain purpose, a Government purpose, and this was one of the policies instituted for that purpose; and when this bullion is deposited at a Government depository, and the certificate taken for it, and that certificate is lost, the bullion belongs to the Government, when the certificate goes into circulation as money and belongs to the people and is thoroughly utilized without waiting for the coining of the bullion, so that the people as well as the Government are interested in the accumulation of gold in the depositories.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado moves to concur in the Senate amendment, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] moves to concur with the following amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the House agree to amendment numbered 5 with an amendment as follows:

"In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following paragraph:

"That hereafter, in addition to the charges now imposed upon deposits of gold bullion at any assay office, the cost of transporting such bullion to the nearest mint authorized by appropriations by Congress in operation as a coinage mint shall be collected from the depositor of the same."

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask whether the gentleman's motion is to concur or nonconcur?

Mr. CANNON. You move to concur, and I offer as an amendment that this concurrence be with this amendment which has just been read.

The CHAIRMAN. And the vote will come on the amendment first.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I submit, as a matter of parliamentary practice, that the motion must be taken on the question of concurrence first.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Chair will hear me, I will state——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado moves to concur in the Senate amendment, and the gentleman from Illinois moves to concur with an amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. I have a very distinct recollection that the question has been decided, but I have a feeling of delicacy about citing the decision, because I happened to be in the chair when it was rendered. I remember that we were considering an appropriation bill that carried with it a provision for the payment of certain claims held by a citizen of Louisiana. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ROBERTSON] moved to concur and the gentleman from Maine, the present chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, moved to concur with an amendment; and the question being on the precedence of these two motions, I, as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, held that the motion to concur had precedence, because a motion to concur removed all differences between the two Houses, while a motion to concur with an amendment still left a difference between them, and the two Houses might be as far from an agreement after a motion to concur with an amendment had been agreed to as they were over the original question.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question in that connection. If the vote should be on concurrence, and the committee should refuse to concur——

Mr. BAILEY. This is a motion to concur with an amendment.

Mr. LACEY. Would not that be equivalent to nonconcurrence, and thus leave the proposed amendment clear out?

Mr. BAILEY. It is, if no other motion is made. The gentleman undoubtedly has a right to submit his motion, but this is now a question as to the precedence of the two motions.

Mr. LACEY. Then your position is, that after you have voted on a proposition you can immediately afterwards vote upon the proposition voted down?

Mr. BAILEY. The books are full of decisions that, after a motion to concur is voted down, the House may then concur with an amendment. The whole theory upon which a motion to concur takes precedence over a motion to nonconcur is that concurrence removes the difference between the two Houses. The whole purpose of a conference is to remove the differences between the two Houses, and it is upon that theory that a conference report takes precedence over all other business.

It is on that theory that a conference report can take a member off the floor, it being considered so necessary to remove the disagreement between the two Houses that everything yields to a conference report. It is a matter of the very highest privilege, even taking precedence over questions affecting the membership of the House itself. Now, following out that theory, all the authorities hold that the motion that most completely removes the disagreement is the motion to be first submitted to the House, because if that motion prevails it is an end to the controversy between the two Houses. Not only has it the authority of recent rulings, but it is consistent with all the authorities on the subject; and I respectfully submit the decision of the Chair is improper.

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Chairman, I think upon this very point, when we had the armor-plate bill up, the motion to concur was ruled to take precedence over every other motion, and was put first by the Speaker, in extra session.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think, if the Chair will examine the rules, that the unbroken custom is to give priority to the motion to concur.

The CHAIRMAN. It is true, as the gentleman from Texas says, where the motion was to recede and an amendment was offered, that the motion to recede must be acted on first. It is also true that on the 16th of July last a similar question arose in the House, and the present Speaker of the House ruled that the vote must first be taken on the motion to concur with the amendment. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order, and the vote will be taken first on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. BAILEY. In view of the fact that we are anxious to dispose of this matter without further delay, I shall not appeal, but I want it distinctly understood that I do not assent to the decision of the Chair. But, to save time, I will refrain from appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CANNON) there were—ayes 85, noes 105.

Mr. CANNON. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL] will act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 98, noes 130.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that in the decision just made the Chair based it upon what seemed to be a precedent, by a hasty reading of the Digest, on a ruling made in July, 1897. On that occasion the original motion was to further insist, and the amendment was to concur with the amendment, in which it was held that the motion to concur with the amendment took precedence. The case cited by the gentleman from Texas was where the motion was to recede and then to recede with amendment. It was then held by the Chair that the motion to recede took precedence.

The Chair still thinks that the ruling was right, although a wrong reason was given for it; and for this reason: A motion to concur, if decided in the negative, is equivalent to a vote to nonconcur, and if this motion had been put on the original motion to concur and had been decided in the negative, the committee would have risen and reported that the committee recommended nonconcurrence, and then the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois could not be voted upon in the committee.

Mr. BAILEY. The Manual expressly declares that—

If the House refuses to recede and agree absolutely, either the motion to insist or the motion to recede and agree with an amendment would still be in order.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the Chair to a direct statement. On page 353 of the Manual it is said:

The House may concur in some of the Senate amendments and disagree in others, or it may concur in an amendment with an amendment thereto. In the latter event the vote must first be taken on concurring in the amendment with the proposed amendment thereto, for if the vote be first taken on concurrence, however the question be decided, the action would be final, and the vote on the proposed amendment to the amendment would be precluded.

Mr. BAILEY. The statement that it would preclude any other vote is a misstatement of parliamentary law.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I give notice I shall call for a yea-and-nay vote in the House upon agreeing to this amendment. I move that the committee rise and report the bill, with amendments, to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 6251) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for prior years, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report it back to the House with a recommendation that amendments 2, 3, 5, 6, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15 be concurred in, that amendments 1, 4, 7, 8, and 10 be nonconcurred in, and that amendment numbered 9 be concurred in with an amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I ask that all these amendments except amendment numbered 5 be read merely by numbers, and that the action of the Committee of the Whole be concurred in upon all the amendments except No. 5, on which I desire a separate vote.

The SPEAKER. Is there a demand for any other separate vote? The Chair hears none.

The question being taken on agreeing to the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to concur in amendments numbered 2, 3, 6, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15, it was decided in the affirmative.

The question being then taken on nonconcurring, as recommended by the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, in amendments 1, 4, 7, 8, and 10, it was determined in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. On amendment numbered 9 the Committee of the Whole recommends concurrence with an amendment which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the matter proposed by said Senate amendment the following: "National cemetery: For the repair and improvement of the national cemetery at the city of Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas, and for rebuilding and furnishing the lodge and other buildings in said cemetery and restoring and repairing the monuments of the dead therein, $15,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in amendment numbered 9, with the amendment just read.

The question was decided in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. A separate vote being demanded upon amendment numbered 5, the Clerk will report it for the action of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4, beginning with line 7, strike out the following:

"That hereafter, in addition to the charges now imposed upon deposits of gold bullion at any of the assay offices or mints, the cost of transporting such bullion to the mints where the same is to be coined shall be collected from the depositor of the same."

Mr. CANNON. Upon concurring with the Committee of the Whole on this amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 62 voting in favor thereof.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. BLAND. There seems to be some misunderstanding as to the effect of this vote. My understanding is that the vote is now on concurring with the action of the Committee of the Whole upon this amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring. An affirmative vote is a vote for concurrence.

Mr. CANNON. And a negative vote sends the matter to conference.

The SPEAKER. If the majority should be in the negative, the decision of the House will be to nonconcur, and it will be so announced.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 144, nays 112, answered "present" 1, not voting 99, as follows:

Mr. HICKS with Mr. BANKHEAD.

Mr. KETCHAM with Mr. MCMILLIN.

For this day:

Mr. MCCLEARY with Mr. ALLEN.

Mr. HARMER with Mr. CATCHINGS.

Mr. DAVIDSON of Wisconsin with Mr. BENNER of Pennsylvania.

Mr. SIMPKINS of Massachusetts with Mr. CARMACK.

Mr. KULP with Mr. BREWER.

Mr. BINGHAM with Mr. LANHAM.

Mr. BROMWELL with Mr. STOKES.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts with Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH with Mr. SWANSON.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. MCCLEARY. If not paired, I should have voted in the affirmative on this question.

Mr. LANHAM. I would ask, Mr. Speaker, if a pair has been announced for the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BINGHAM?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has not voted.

Mr. LANHAM. Has a pair been announced?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that it has not been announced.

Mr. LANHAM. Then I desire to withdraw my vote and announce a pair with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BINGHAM. I should have voted in the affirmative.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, we desire to move to reconsider the vote and lay that motion on the table.

Mr. CANNON. I ask for a further committee of conference on the remaining disagreeing votes between the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. CANNON, Mr. NORTHWAY, and Mr. SAYERS as conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this Senate amendment.

There was no objection.

Mr. KNOWLES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make the request to extend in the RECORD some remarks that I had designed to submit in connection with the belligerency resolution for the Island of Cuba on yesterday, but the opportunity was denied me, because of the time being consumed by other gentlemen.

There was no objection.

HOMESTEAD AND RIGHT OF WAY LAWS IN ALASKA.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I will now call up the unfinished business coming over from yesterday, the bill H. R. 5975. I think it will take but a very few moments to dispose of the matter.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman will not call this up to-day. If necessary, I shall make the point that it was passed over on yesterday without any distinct understanding that to-day should be devoted to its consideration. I do not think, if the Chair will consult the RECORD, that there was a positive understanding that this measure should be taken up to-day, and I make that point. I beg the gentleman to allow us to go on with the Private Calendar, and this can come up to morrow. He can call it up, in fact, at any time, whereas we can not call up the Private Calendar and have it considered except on to-day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the Journal shows this matter was to be called up to-day; and that, the Chair understands, was the agreement.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But, Mr. Speaker, is it too late to object to its consideration?

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes the gentleman can raise the question of consideration.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman will not call it up to-day. We ought to have the Private Calendar considered. We ought to have at least one private-bill day, because the gentleman knows that later in the session the appropriation bills will consume practically all the time.

Mr. LACEY. I think it will not occupy very much time, and can be disposed of in a few moments; and if not, certainly an arrangement can be made to pass it over without losing its right of way.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I was hoping that we could make some arrangement now to let it go over.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order. The unfinished business on the Private Calendar should be taken up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania demands the regular order. The Chair thinks the regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Iowa, which has been stated.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, there was an amendment pending yesterday, which I ask to have reported.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas.

Amend by striking out, in line 15, page 2, the words "160 acres" and inserting in lieu thereof "20 acres."

Also by striking out, in line 18, page 2, the words "three hundred" after the word "include;" so that it will read "20 acres" in each place.

Mr. HOPKINS. What is the object of this bill? It has not been read from the desk.

Mr. LACEY. I have stated it. It is a bill we had under consideration yesterday with reference to the homestead laws and the right of way of railroads in Alaska. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kansas reduces the terminal stations to 20 acres and also the intermediate stations to 20 acres.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. The bill calls for 320 acres for terminal stations, and this makes it 20 acres at each station instead of 320. It simply reduces the amount of the grant.

Mr. LACEY. I would be glad if the gentleman would submit these propositions separately.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Let us have a vote on them together.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments proposed by the gentleman from Kansas.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out the word "five," in line 16, page 2, and insert the word "ten."

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, this amendment changes the original bill where it provides that the railroad shall put stations every 5 miles, making the distance 10 miles apart. I believe this has been the practice in passing bills for the different Territories, to fix the distance at 10 miles between stations. It seems to me in a country like Alaska, which must be sparsely settled always, stations 10 miles apart are plenty near enough together.

Mr. LACEY. Undoubtedly, except in the mountainous regions, where they will need to be nearer. The amount of land for station purposes is cut down to 20 acres anyway, so it is immaterial whether the stations are 5 or 10 miles apart, as far as the land is concerned. The 5-mile stations will be necessary in going up through the mountains.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Inasmuch as this bill provides for a right of way 200 feet wide, they can easily make all the arrangements for stopping in going up the mountains, without having 20 acres for town sites at each point.

Mr. LACEY. I call for a vote.

The amendment of Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows.

"Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as impairing in any degree the title of any State that may hereafter be erected out of said Territory, or any part thereof, to the shores and beds of any of its navigable waters, or the right of such State to the possession thereof, or of any structures erected thereon. The term 'navigable waters,' as herein used, shall be held to include all tidal waters up to the line of ordinary high tide and all non-tidal waters navigable in fact up to the line of ordinary high-water mark."

Mr. LACEY. I see no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon the committee amendments, which the Clerk will report.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

1. In line 7, section 2, strike out "two hundred and fifty" and insert "one hundred."

2. In line 11, section 2, after the word "also," insert "reserving all minerals therein contained."

3. In line 16, section 2, after the word "terminals," insert "and junction points."

4. Amend section 2 by adding, at the end of line 22:

"Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as depriving Congress of the right to regulate the charges for freight, passengers, and wharfage."

5. Amend section 4 by adding, at the end of line 12, the following:

"Provided further, That any such company, by filing a preliminary actual survey and plat of its proposed route, shall have the right at any time within one year thereafter to file the profile and permanent location hereinbefore provided for, and such preliminary survey and plat shall, during the said period of one year from the time of filing the same, have the effect to render all the lands on which said preliminary survey and plat shall pass subject to such right of way."

6. Amend by inserting in line 6, section 5, before the words "its road," the following: "of such section of."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the unfinished business of last Friday.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering private bills.

The SPEAKER. That would not be in order until the unfinished business of last Friday is disposed of. There are two bills which have been favorably reported to the House by the committee.

THOMAS B. REED.

The first unfinished business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 852) for the relief of Thomas B. Reed.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of Thomas B. Reed, who served as sergeant, first sergeant, and first lieutenant, Fifth Pennsylvania Reserve Corps, and captain, Two hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, of the United States Army, in the late war of the rebellion, for a balance of wages earned by him in the suppression of said rebellion, and during his entire time of service in the said Army, and not paid to him, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for due investigation; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said court to render a judgment, irrespective of the lapse of time, for the amount, if any, found due by it of the United States upon the said claim.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM S. GRANT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 357) for the relief of William S. Grant.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $77,989.38 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid to William S. Grant, in full satisfaction of his claims against the United States arising out of his contract to supply military posts in Arizona in the years 1860 and 1861, said sum to be paid under the direction of the Secretary of War, who shall take proper releases and receipts from the said William S. Grant.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MAHON, a motion to reconsider the votes by which the last two bills were passed was laid on the table.

BOOK AGENTS OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH.

On motion of Mr. MAHON, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar, with Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar. The Clerk will report the title of the bill which was pending at the time the committee rose.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 629) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims in the case of The Book Agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South against The United States.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment was pending, to which a point of order was raised.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I want to state that I had intended to make some observations upon this question, controverting the position taken by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] who made the point of order; but for the reason that I do not want to take the time in assigning the reason I think the point of order should not be sustained, I will ask the Clerk to read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the proceedings of 1896 what I have marked, in order to show that the position taken by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not well taken.

The Clerk read as follows:

WIDOW OF THOMAS L. YOUNG.

Mr. BROMWELL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk. If its consideration be agreed to, I propose to offer an amendment in the form of a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

"A bill (H. R. 1743) for the relief of the legal representatives of Thomas L. Young.

"Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the widow, heirs, or legal representatives of the late Thomas L. Young, who served as captain of Benton Cadets, Missouri Volunteers, and as major, lieutenant-colonel, and colonel of the One hundred and eighteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, in the late war of the rebellion, for a balance or balances of wages earned by him as said officer in the suppression of said rebellion and not yet paid to him or to his widow, heirs, or legal representatives, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for due investigation according to law, and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said court to render a judgment for the amount, if any, found due from the United States upon the said claim."

Mr. BROMWELL. I ask the Clerk to read the substitute which I propose to offer.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert the following:

"'That the claim of the widow of the late Thomas L. Young, who served as an enlisted man and officer of the Regular Army of the United States and afterwards as captain of Benton Cadets, Missouri Volunteers, and as major, lieutenant-colonel, and colonel of the One hundred and eighteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry in the war of the rebellion, for the sum not exceeding $478 as the balance or balances of wages earned by him as said officer in the suppression of said rebellion, but not heretofore paid to him or to his legal representatives, be, and the same is hereby, allowed; and a sufficient sum to pay the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.'"

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, this bill proposes simply to give to the widow of General Young, lately a member of this House, $478.

Mr. BROMWELL. That is exactly what my amendment provides for.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The substitute proposed by Mr. BROMWELL was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BROMWELL. I ask that the title of the bill be amended by striking out "legal representatives" and inserting "widow."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be so amended.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. BROMWELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call my friend's attention to the fact that the RECORD shows that this was done by unanimous consent, and there was no point of order made.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. The substitute was not offered by unanimous consent. The bill was taken up and the substitute was offered.

Mr. DALZELL. But no point of order was made on it; and the Speaker expressly said "without objection." That is not an authority for the gentleman's position.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule upon this question.

Prior to the adoption of any rules upon the subject it was in order to offer any amendment to the bill, whether it was germane or not, by way of substituting another bill or by way of an amendment. In March, 1789, the House made a rule which changed general parliamentary law upon the subject, and that rule was in these words:

No new motion or proposition shall be admitted under color of amendment as a substitute for the question or proposition under debate until it has been postponed or disagreed to.

That simply went to the substitute, and not to the amendment of the proposition; and I suppose that under that, until the adoption of a new rule by the House of Representatives, an amendment which was not in the nature of a substitute would have been in order. In 1822 the House adopted this rule:

No motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment.

And that rule has been the rule of the House of Representatives from that day to this, and is now clause 7 of Rule XVI, under which this point of order is raised.

The bill before the House is an act to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims in the case of The Book Agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South against The United States; and the act provides not only to confer jurisdiction, but gives the court authority to render judgment for any amount, and further provides that either party may appeal from the judgment that is so rendered. That is the whole scope of the bill which is now before the committee. The substitute offered is, briefly, an appropriation of some $288,000—the Chair does not recollect the precise amount—to be paid to the Book Agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. That is the whole scope of the substitute that is offered as an amendment. The question is whether, under the language of the rule, this is a proposition on a subject different from that under consideration. If it is, it can not be admitted as an amendment. If it is not, of course it would be in order as an amendment.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. COOPER] this morning cites as a precedent something that occurred in the House not long ago, where a bill was called up by unanimous consent, with a notice on the part of the gentleman from Ohio that when it was before the House he should move a substitute for the bill which would be similar in terms to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Texas. But no point of order was made upon that motion or amendment of the gentleman from Ohio. The amendment was offered after unanimous consent had been obtained from the House to take up the bill, with the distinct understanding that when it was before the House he should move a substitute. It is a question whether, if the point of order had been raised, it would not have been fully met and answered by the statement that the bill and substitute were both before the House by unanimous consent. So that that can not be taken as a precedent in this case.

When the matter was under debate last Friday, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEWIS] quoted from the present Speaker of the House of Representatives, who was then a member from the State of Maine, in the course of debate upon a point of order that was raised, I think, in the Forty-eighth or Forty-ninth Congress, when Mr. Carlisle was Speaker. That bill was one which came back from the Senate with a Senate amendment, and the bill proceeded to consideration in the House, no member having made the point of order that the Senate amendment to that appropriation bill should first be considered in Committee of the Whole, as the rule required. While the bill was under consideration, an amendment was offered and the point of order made that that amendment was not germane.

The Speaker decided that question at once, without any argument, and held that the amendment was germane. Then a further point of order was raised by the gentleman from Indiana, the late Mr. Holman, I think, that the amendment offered in the House must first be considered in Committee of the Whole under the rule, and the question debated by the gentleman from Maine, now the Speaker of the House, was whether that amendment must first be considered in Committee of the Whole and whether it was subject to the point of order in the House, the House having passed that point at which the objection of a point of order could send the bill to the Committee of the Whole. That was the question that was debated by the gentleman from Maine, and no other question.

Now, the Chair has read the whole debate upon that subject, and the Speaker of the House was finally persuaded by the gentleman from Maine and others to hold that the point of order would not hold against an amendment sending it to Committee of the Whole, because the House had entered upon the consideration of the bill. So that that furnishes no precedent for the question now before the committee. It has been stated, and of course it is in the recollection of many members of the House, that bills are frequently brought before the House appropriating money for private claims, and when a bill is brought up unanimous consent is often obtained upon the condition that the member bringing up the bill shall move an amendment to the bill when it is before the House referring the matter to the Court of Claims.

Of course this has often been done, but that furnishes no precedent. It is no decision upon the rule. The rule is not considered in this. The question is whether, as a condition precedent to bringing up the bill, a member is obliged to state that he will offer an amendment in the House. It is done by unanimous consent. There is one precedent that seems to bear almost exactly upon the case before the committee, and that was the precedent cited the other day by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] in the Forty-eighth Congress. A bill was before the House restoring General Pleasonton to the Army and putting him on the retired list, in order that he might draw the pay of a retired officer. It might have been a bill entitled "For the relief of General Pleasonton," but it was entitled a bill to restore him to the Army and place his name on the retired list.

When that bill was before the Committee of the Whole House the gentleman from New York, the late Mr. Cox, an able parliamentarian, was in the chair. During the progress of the bill the gentleman from Indiana, the late Mr. Browne, offered an amendment striking out all after the enacting clause and authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to place his name on the pension list and pay him a pension at the rate of $100 a month. That question was debated somewhat in Committee of the Whole, and the Chairman of the committee [Mr. Cox], the point of order having been raised by the late Mr. Bayne, of Pennsylvania—and the House will observe the controversy was between two Republicans, Mr. Browne and Mr. Bayne, while the Chairman was of opposite politics, so that it would seem that no politics could enter into that question at that time—the Chair stated that he felt compelled to sustain the point of order, as it changed the whole character of the bill.

That, of course, defeated the amendment in Committee of the Whole. The bill was finally reported to the House, and the gentleman from Indiana again obtained the floor and moved to recommit the bill with directions to report back the bill with the same amendments that he had submitted. It was again debated in the House, and Mr. Carlisle in the chair held that it was obnoxious to clause 7 of Rule XVI and not germane to the original bill, and he sustained the point of order.

Now, what is the proposition before the committee? The title to the bill is to give the Court of Claims jurisdiction for the trial of this claim, with the further provision that an appeal may be taken by either party to the Supreme Court. The offer is to substitute for this a bill appropriating money to the Methodist Book Concern. It changes the whole character of the bill, and as was well said by Mr. Cox of the bill before the committee at that time, it is an entirely different bill, and to hold that it was germane and could be offered as an amendment to this bill, in the opinion of the Chair, would almost if not entirely abrogate clause 7 of Rule XVI. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I now move that the Senate bill be temporarily laid aside without prejudice as unfinished business and that the committee take up House bill 4829, the bill for the relief of the Book Agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

The CHAIRMAN. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, before considering that proposition, I want to say, with reference to the decision of the Chair, there is a rule of parliamentary procedure that a decision made by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole or by the Speaker of the House, appealed from and decided in favor of the opinion of the Chair or the Speaker, becomes a rule of the House, and to a certain extent a ruling such as has been made here and not appealed from has an effect in the same direction. I am not in charge of this bill, but I want simply to reserve my right to totally dissent from the ruling of the Chair without making any appeal to the committee to overrule it.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I wish to raise a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas made a motion which the Chair has not stated to the committee. The gentleman from Texas moves to lay aside the bill now before the Committee of the Whole and to substitute therefor House bill 4829.

Mr. DALZELL. I make the point of order that it can not be done. This is unfinished business on the Calendar under consideration by the House, and this bill must be disposed of, and can not be laid aside except by unanimous consent, and I object.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. This was not the regular order, because the House agreed to pass other bills and took up this bill, which occupied a lower place on the Calendar. This is a similar motion to lay aside this bill and take up another bill for consideration. If it was proper on last Friday to make that motion, it is in order to make this motion now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hardly thinks the rule goes to that extent. The Committee of the Whole may undoubtedly take up any bill, or change the order, but on Friday it voted to take up this particular bill and enter upon consideration of it. Now, the Committee of the Whole can not reconsider its order. A motion to reconsider is not in order. It can not change the order until the order is executed. The Chair thinks there is no power to do it except by unanimous consent of the committee. The Chair must sustain the point of order.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. COX. I rise to make an inquiry. Does this appeal lie from the decision of the Chair? It was decided a moment ago that it was not proper to substitute a bill that made an appropriation for a bill that referred a claim to the Court of Claims. Is that the object of the appeal now?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the Chair decided that that was not in order and no appeal was taken. Now, the gentleman from Texas moves to lay aside the bill under consideration for another bill, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania raises the point of order, and the Chair sustains the point of order. The gentleman from Texas appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to say one word, Mr. Chairman. It seems to me, it being conceded that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having under consideration the Private Calendar may decide before entering upon the consideration of any measure that it will not take up a bill regularly reached, but some other measure lower down on the Calendar, it would certainly have the right to lay aside a bill partly considered and take up another measure. Why should it require unanimous consent?

The Chair will remember, under the rule which obtained in the Fifty-third and Fifty-second Congresses, and, indeed, all the Congresses over which Democratic Speakers have presided for many years, that bills must be considered in their order when in Committee of the Whole. If there was objection to passing over one to take up some other bill, the committee had to rise and report that fact to the House and let the House decide the order and the course of business for the Committee of the Whole to pursue. But this rule is totally different. I ask the attention of the Chair (and I will occupy only a moment) to the language of clause 4, Rule XXIII:

In Committees of the Whole House, business on their Calendars may be taken up in regular order or in such order as the committee may determine, unless the bill to be considered was determined by the House at the time of going into committee. But bills for raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors shall have precedence.

The language is that "business on their Calendars may be taken up in regular order or in such order as the committee may determine." Now, I can not see where the Chair gets the distinction between determining the order of business now and determining it at the time when we entered upon the consideration of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole has already ordered that this bill be taken up, and is now engaged in its consideration.

Mr. RICHARDSON. By a majority vote.

The CHAIRMAN. If the parliamentary practice were as the gentleman from Tennessee states, then in the consideration of every bill before the Committee of the Whole every member who could obtain the floor might move to substitute any other bill on the Calendar, and thus the whole business of the committee might be stopped.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No; I beg pardon of the Chair. This is not a motion to substitute some other bill, but a motion to lay this bill aside. Now, we can lay a bill aside at any stage of the proceeding.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman's position were correct, every member of the committee, as frequently as he could obtain the floor, might make a motion to lay aside the pending bill and substitute some other bill, and thus the whole business of the Committee of the Whole might be stopped.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think the Chair goes too far in making two motions of this proposition. The motion is to lay the bill aside informally. Now, how can any one object to that motion or insist that it must be carried by unanimous consent? We can lay a bill aside for favorable consideration in the House. That is exactly what we do with every bill in Committee of the Whole after we perfect it, unless the committee immediately rises. Suppose this bill were perfected and a motion should be made to lay it aside informally or with favorable recommendation, that would not require unanimous consent. That being done, the gentleman might make a motion to take up the bill which he has indicated.

The CHAIRMAN. A motion to lay the bill aside with a favorable or unfavorable recommendation would present a different question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I understand a bill can be laid aside without recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. A motion to lay the bill aside with either a favorable or an unfavorable recommendation would, if agreed to, dispose of the bill. Of course that motion would be in order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Accepting the force of that point, what is the difference between laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation, or laying it aside with an unfavorable recommendation, or laying it aside with a recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed in the House (the Committee of the Whole not being able to postpone a bill indefinitely), or laying it aside with the recommendation that it be laid on the table (which the Committee of the Whole itself can not do, but which requires the action of the House), or laying it aside without prejudice?

The CHAIRMAN. There is this difference: The Committee of the Whole has voted to take up and consider this bill, and is now engaged in its consideration. It must go on under that order until the bill is fully considered or until a motion to lay it aside with a favorable or unfavorable recommendation disposes of the bill. This is a motion to lay it aside without any disposition of it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly the Chair would not hold that the further consideration of this bill might not be postponed until next Friday.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think that could be done.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Does the Chair hold that that motion would not be in order?

Mr. DINGLEY. In order that we may understand this question, I ask that the motion of the gentleman from Texas be read. I think it is a broader proposition than that stated by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON]. I believe it is a double motion—to lay the bill aside and take up another measure.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the motion.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I concede that without the motion being read. But I am arguing the effect of the motion of the gentleman from Texas, which, as the gentleman from Maine understands, the gentleman from Texas can modify if he sees fit to do so. Now, I submit, Mr. Chairman, that it would be in order to move that the bill be reported to the House with recommendation to postpone its further consideration until next Friday. I can not see how the Chair can get away from that motion. The Committee of the Whole having entered upon the consideration of the bill, having considered it for half a day, having heard half a dozen arguments for and against the bill, the motion is now made to postpone its further consideration until a subsequent day. I submit, it has never been held that that motion would not be in order.

Mr. DINGLEY. Without any reference to the point suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee, the motion now before the committee is evidently out of order. It is a motion to lay aside one bill and take up another. No such motion as that is allowable under the rules of the House.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I will modify my motion——

Mr. DINGLEY. But the point of order is made against the motion as now pending.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Very well; let the point of order be sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has sustained the point of order; the gentleman from Texas has appealed, and the Chair has stated the appeal.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I withdraw the appeal, and now make the motion to postpone the consideration of this bill until next Friday.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the appeal will be considered as withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to postpone the consideration of this bill until Friday next.

Mr. DALZELL. I make the point of order against that motion. Such motion can not be made in Committee of the Whole; and I call the attention of the Chair to the Digest on that point, which provides that—

It is not in order to move, in the House, to postpone the consideration of a bill pending in Committee of the Whole before it has been reported to the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. Of course; everybody agrees to that. But this motion does not contemplate any such proceeding.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman moves that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation——

Mr. DALZELL. No; the gentleman made no such motion.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then I will make the motion. I will move that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be postponed until Friday next.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I accept the language of the motion proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee, and modify my motion accordingly.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman, as the Chair understands it now, is that the committee report the bill to the House with the recommendation that its consideration be postponed until next Friday.

Mr. DALZELL. Let us have the motion restated, Mr. Chairman. The gentleman from Texas did not make that motion. I make the point of order against it. My point of order is that you can not make a motion in the Committee of the Whole making a special order in the House for next Friday in the Committee of the Whole. That must be done by the House itself. This is a recommendation to the House that you make a special order for the Committee of the Whole on Friday, and that is not competent under the rules.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman is entirely correct in that. But there is no such motion pending. There is no motion that the committee refer the bill or postpone it until Friday. But the proposition is that the Committee of the Whole now report this bill to the House with the recommendation that it be postponed until Friday. Certainly that is competent. The gentleman will scarcely undertake to say that such a motion is not competent. There can be no criticism on that motion. It is competent for the committee to adopt that course. It can report it with any recommendation it sees proper, that it shall lie on the table, that it shall be indefinitely postponed, that it shall have the enacting clause stricken out, or that it shall be passed, or any other question may be considered with reference to final action upon it, and all of this is warranted by the rules of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the motion to be that the committee report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it be postponed until Friday next; and on that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] raises the point of order that the motion is not admissible.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I ask for a ruling of the Chair on the point of order. Did the Chair make a decision? I have not been able to hear in the confusion in the Hall.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not yet made a ruling.

Mr. DOCKERY. If the Chair will permit me, I desire to be heard for a moment.

As I understand the motion of the gentleman from Texas, it is to lay aside the bill with the recommendation to the House that its further consideration be postponed until next Friday. Now, if there is any precedent anywhere in any rule, or in any work on parliamentary law, so far as it relates to this body, that will sustain the point of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania against that motion, I would like for him to show it. It can not be done.

The citation he made refers exclusively to proceedings in the House, and has no reference to the Committee of the Whole. We are now in Committee of the Whole, and we have a right, under clause 4 of Rule XVI, to postpone this matter to a day certain, to refer, to amend, or to postpone indefinitely—that is, the bill may be laid aside with the recommendation that it be reported to the House for whatever action is contemplated, by clause 4 of Rule XVI.

The motion is certainly in order, and I do not suppose the gentleman from Pennsylvania will controvert that. The gentleman concedes it, I understand.

Mr. DALZELL. No; I do not concede it.

Mr. DOCKERY. Well, the gentleman will not deny it.

Mr. DALZELL. I do. I deny that position.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then I am very sorry the gentleman exhibits such a lack of familiarity with the parliamentary practice of the House. He is unable, I am sure, to state any authority on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks, without further discussion, that the motion is in order.

Mr. DALZELL. Then I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation when the committee rises.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Does the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania come as an amendment or as a substitute to the pending motion?

Mr. DALZELL. It comes as a preferential motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. There is a motion pending by the gentleman from Texas. Does the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania come as an amendment, or a substitute, or an independent motion?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is undoubtedly in order at this stage of the proceedings. The only question in the mind of the Chair now is as to which motion should take precedence and should be first submitted to the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That is the very point I make. There is a motion pending.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly. The Chair thinks, without any doubt, that the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] is in order. The only question is whether it takes precedence of the other question.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think, under clause 4 of Rule XV, the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COOPER] would seem to have priority. I am not quite sure, but that is my impression.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I should like to suggest to the Chair that this is clearly a preferential motion and entitled to be put first, for the reason that it makes a disposition of the entire matter, does away with the whole business, closes it up; whereas the other motion is a motion simply to defer, until some future time, action on this bill. Clearly, to my mind, my motion is a preferential one and entitled to be put first.

Mr. GAINES. Has the Chair ruled?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is about to rule. The Chair thinks the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] is entitled to preference, for the reason that if adopted it would dispose of the bill finally as far as the Committee of the Whole is concerned.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have not risen to take issue with the Chair, though I think the Chair is in error; but I shall not undertake to convince the Chair of that fact, because we have a motion with which we will follow this one.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman has any authorities, the Chair would like to hear them.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask for a vote on the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] that the committee report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. DALZELL) there were—ayes 53, noes 117.

Mr. DALZELL demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. DALZELL and Mr. COOPER of Texas.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 37, noes 137.

Accordingly, the motion of Mr. DALZELL was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COOPER], that the committee report the bill to the House with the recommendation that further consideration of it be postponed until next Friday.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I move that the House now take up for consideration the bill H. R. 4829.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and required to pay to the Book Agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, a corporation chartered under the laws of Tennessee, $288,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as full compensation for the property of said corporation, including the buildings and ground, and all machinery, and all materials of every kind, used, taken away, injured, consumed, or destroyed by the United States or its Army, or for its benefit in any way, connected with the publishing house of said corporation in Nashville, Tenn., during the years 1864 and 1865, or at any other time; said sum to be in full discharge of all claims of said corporation against the United States; such payment to be made to the duly authorized agent or attorney in fact of said corporation.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, twenty-five years ago the claim that is presented to the House to-day was presented to the House of Representatives and received very careful consideration. The proposition now is that we shall put our hands into the Federal Treasury and pay out $288,000 upon the report of the Committee on War Claims, made upon ex parte statements. I have here on my desk a report of the Committee on War Claims, made twenty-five years ago, when that committee numbered amongst its members some of the ablest of our public men upon either side of this Chamber.

I have a report here signed, amongst others, by the present Secretary of Agriculture, then recognized as a power in this House, and signed also by that distinguished Democratic leader who, for many years, was potent in this House, afterwards appointed to the Interstate Commerce Commission, Mr. Morrison, and by that other great Democrat, the late William S. Holman. That report, one of the most careful, exhaustive, and learned reports that it has ever been my fortune to read, throws this claim out as unworthy of the attention of patriotic citizens who are sent here not to loot, but to guard the Federal Treasury. I am perfectly satisfied that if gentlemen will give to the reading of this report an unbiased and impartial hearing, and will then vote conscientiously, this claim can not be carried.

Now, what is the proposition? The proposition is that with a report from one Committee on War Claims upon one side and a report of another Committee on War Claims upon the other side, one directly in the teeth of the other, this House, instead of sending the claim to a tribunal where, if it be a worthy claim, judgment can be entered for it, is forthwith, without any investigation upon the part of individual members, with these two reports in opposite directions staring them in the face, to put their hands into the Federal Treasury, which is now in need of money, and pay this $288,000 to these claimants.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will my friend yield for a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Did you vote to pay the claim which passed the House a few moments ago—the claim of William S. Grant.

Mr. DALZELL. I did not.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Did you vote against it?

Mr. DALZELL. I voted against it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now, does the gentleman know that that claim had been reported adversely by the very forum to which he asks that this claim be referred?

Mr. DALZELL. I know that when I read the report on that case I made up my mind that it was not a claim that I could vote for.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Did the gentleman oppose it on the floor?

Mr. DALZELL. I opposed it as far as I could in the committee.

Mr. GAINES. Did you get up and make a speech against it, as you were doing in this case?

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read in my time this report.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him one question? I want the thing done fairly.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. COX. Is your objection to this claim opposed to the justice of it, or what is the point of the objection?

Mr. DALZELL. The point of objection is that it ought to go to a tribunal to be adjudicated, so that we would know whether it is a good claim or not.

Mr. COX. Why?

Mr. DALZELL. Because two committees of this House that have examined it have reported, one one way and the other the other.

Mr. COX. Well, will the gentleman permit me to ask him this. I am not speaking of these reports. Have you any doubt that the troops of the United States——

Mr. DALZELL. I am not going into the merits of the claim at all.

Mr. COX. Have you any idea that this claim is not just?

Mr. DALZELL. I have a very decided idea.

Mr. GAINES. Did you not say a little while ago that it was just?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman——

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. DALZELL. I can not yield to further questions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman refuses to yield any further, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. FLEMING. I rise to a point of order. I should like to ask how long that report is. Can the gentleman give us some idea?

Mr. DALZELL. I can not tell the gentleman.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Chairman, I understand it will take about an hour. Now I make the point of order: I object to the gentleman having that report read from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. DALZELL. Why, I think I can have the report read in my time. It is the universal custom of the House.

Mr. FLEMING. I wish to be heard on my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's point of order is that the report can not be read in the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FLEMING. In the last session of this House that question was raised when the gentleman——

Mr. DALZELL. This does not come out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly not; this is a point of order.

Mr. FLEMING. I am making a point of order. At the extra session the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] was in the chair, and a great many of these requests to take up the time of the House by having articles and documents read had been sent to the desk. I raised the point of order then that a member had no right under the rules of the House or under general parliamentary law to have the Clerk read anything to the House, except by sufferance of the House.

Wherever any one member objects to a reading of that kind, you have no right to trifle with the House by consuming its time through the Clerk, unless you first by a vote of the House get consent of the House that it shall be done. That point of order was distinctly ruled upon and sustained by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], then in the chair, and I understand the ruling was made after consultation with the Speaker, but I am not sure about that. Still, I know what the ruling was. It is established. It is a well-known principle of parliamentary law that no member can take the floor and have the time of the House occupied in such a useless procedure as you have here.

That document is not a report of this House. It is not an official document immediately before us. The gentleman has the right in his hour to go on and talk for that hour, but he has no right to relieve himself by having the House listen to the Clerk read a dry report for the purpose of delaying the consideration of this bill. Now, Mr. Chairman, there is nothing in the rules of the House that can possibly permit such a thing. Every writer on parliamentary law lays it down as an undisputed proposition that you have no right to have any document read before a parliamentary body unless with the consent of that body, expressed or implied. Besides, Rule XXXI of the House itself touches upon it; and it was upon this rule that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] made the decision last session. Now, I would not have raised such a question here if I had thought the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] wanted this report read in good faith for the information of the House.

Mr. DALZELL. I do want it read in good faith. I say to the gentleman from Georgia that I do want it read in good faith; and I want you gentlemen to listen to it.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Will you agree to have a vote after the reading of the report?

Mr. DALZELL. I will make no such agreement as that.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. You must make an agreement for a vote after it has been read.

Mr. FLEMING. Rule XXXI is in this language:

When the reading of a paper other than one upon which the House is called to give a final vote is demanded, and the same is objected to by any member, it shall be determined without debate by a vote of the House.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if this body is willing to sit here and take up its time with the reading of that report, why it can do so. But unless the members consent to it, the gentleman has no right to consume the time of the House in that manner. The question has already been ruled on in this Congress. It is not a new question at all, and there is not a single writer on parliamentary law that ever held to the contrary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that several rulings have been made in the direction stated by the gentleman from Georgia, generally at Friday night sessions. Rule XXXI reads as follows:

When the reading of a paper other than one upon which the House is called to give a final vote is demanded, and the same is objected to by any member, it shall be determined without debate by a vote of the House.

Now, when these rules were revised in the Forty-sixth Congress, the report states as follows:

Rule CXLI—

has been retained, with an amendment making it applicable only to papers "other than one upon which the House is called to give a final vote," thus reaffirming or recognizing the right of a member to demand the reading of a paper on which he is called to vote. This is the long-established rule and practice of the English Parliament, and the committee quote as pertinent what is said on the subject by one of the most distinguished English writers on parliamentary law, Mr. Hatsel. He says:

"Where papers are laid before the House or referred to a committee, every member has a right to have them once read at the table before he can be compelled to vote on them, but it is a great though common error to suppose that he has a right, toties quoties, to have acts, journals, accounts, or papers on the table read independently of the will of the House. The delay and interruption which this might be made to produce evince the impossibility of the existence of such a right. There is, indeed, so manifest a propriety of permitting every member to have as much information as possible on every question on which he is to vote that when he desires the reading, if it be seen that it is really for information and not for delay, the Speaker directs it to be read without putting a question, if no one objects; but if objected to, a question must be put."

It appears in the revision as Rule XXXI.

That was the report of the committee revising the rules. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CANNON. Before the gentleman from Pennsylvania proceeds, I want to ask a single question. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is now on the floor and is entitled to an hour to talk. As I understand it, he may call the Clerk to his assistance in reading anything he may desire to have read upon the question before the House that does not transgress another rule during his hour. It is a part and parcel of the debate.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The rule simply says that he can not do it.

Mr. DALZELL. Well, I think I am able to read the report myself.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, the gentleman can read the report himself. It has been the practice of the House to allow the Clerk to read it; but under the strict construction of the rule and the interpretation given it by the Committee on Rules the Chair feels constrained to follow this precedent, although he is very much in doubt whether Rule XXXI ever contemplated any such proceeding.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] has the floor.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman is to read a paper for the information of the committee, I think we ought to be able to hear it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point of order that the committee is not in order so that the report can be heard. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman has no right to read that paper when there is an objection by a member on the floor. I refer to page 459 of the Manual, which says:

A member has not a right to read a paper in his place, if it be objected to, without leave of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. That decision was made before the present rules were adopted. The Chair overrules that point of order.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as it is now getting near the time for adjournment, and he has an hour, if he will not yield to me to move that the committee rise?

Mr. DALZELL. That depends upon what my rights will be after the committee has passed on that question.

Mr. CANNON. When the committee sits again the gentleman will be entitled to his time.

Mr. DALZELL. And if the committee should refuse to rise, would I then be entitled to the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have no doubt about that.

Mr. CANNON. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 629) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims in the case of The Book Agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South against The United States, had directed him to report the same back with the recommendation that its further consideration be postponed to Friday of next week, and that the committee had also had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4829) for the relief of the Book Agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I move that the House take a recess until to-morrow at 10 o'clock.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. DALZELL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that two motions are now pending.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman's motion is not in order, because under the rules the House must take a recess to-night until 8 o'clock. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the gentleman withdraw that motion for one moment?

Mr. DALZELL. I will withdraw it for the purpose of letting the gentleman from Texas go on.

Mr. BAILEY. I am not going to consume the time between now and 5 o'clock. The matter will take but a few minutes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I object and I have made a point of order, and now the gentleman from Pennsylvania has made a motion to adjourn. If that is in order, it is in order because the House has a right to take a recess until 8 o'clock. I do not object to it, because it is undoubtedly in order.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House adjourn.

The question was taken; and upon a division (demanded by Mr. DALZELL) there were—ayes 69, noes 143.

Mr. DALZELL. I call for tellers.

Mr. BAILEY. I make the point that the demand for tellers is dilatory—plainly so.

The SPEAKER. As many as are in favor of taking this question by tellers will rise and stand until counted.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the Chair overrule the point of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does.

Tellers were ordered (44 voting in favor thereof); and Mr. DALZELL and Mr. COOPER were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 62, noes 106.

Mr. DALZELL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BAILEY. I make the point that the demand for the yeas and nays is plainly dilatory.

Mr. DALZELL. But the right to have yeas and nays is a constitutional right.

The SPEAKER. Under the Constitution of the United States, one-fifth of the members present have always the right to order the yeas and nays.

Mr. BAILEY. They have that right; and yet I have seen it denied in this House.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being—ayes 49, noes 149; more than one-fifth voting in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. BAILEY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the hour of 5 o'clock should arrive during the roll call, will the roll call be completed or will the House, under the rule, take a recess until 8 o'clock?

The SPEAKER. The roll call will be completed; and unless the House should by this vote determine to adjourn, a recess will be taken upon the completion of the roll call until 8 o'clock this evening.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MAHON (before the roll call was concluded). Mr. Speaker, it is very evident that the completion of this roll call will carry us past 5 o'clock. I ask unanimous consent that the further call of the roll be dispensed with and the House now adjourn.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I object. Let us have a recess.

Mr. MAHON. Then I ask that the House take the recess now.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The roll call will be resumed.

Mr. GROSVENOR (before the roll call was concluded). Mr. Speaker, as I understand, if this motion to adjourn should be voted down, the House will at once go into recess until 8 o'clock. I therefore withdraw my objection to waiving the further call of the roll. There is nothing to be gained by it. We do not want any night session, for I understand there is nothing to be done. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the yeas and nays be vacated, and that the House now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ELLIOTT, for three days, on account of public business.

To Mr. WHITE of North Carolina, for one week, on account of sickness.

The SPEAKER (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.). According to the order of the House, adopted by unanimous consent, the House stands adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

Your memorialist, the Seattle Chamber of Commerce, respectfully states that the largest island connected with the Territory of Alaska is called Prince of Wales Island. Its location is in the southern part, its lower extremity being the historic fifty-four-forty of sixty years ago. It is also the starting point in treaty descriptions of Alaska, which begin at Cape Chacon and go thence to Portland Canal and on to the north and west. It is 140 miles long and from 20 to 50 miles wide; has upon it mountains 3,000 feet high; its shores are indented with numerous and excellent harbors, and there is an abundance of timber for every reasonable want. Taken altogether, it is an interesting locality, with untold possibilities in the way of fishing, mining, and commerce generally. Its climate and resources are similar to those of densely populated portions of the British Isles. There is but one thing against the island, and that is its name. It is long, it is inexpressive, it is un-American, it is merely a European title. This chamber asks that it be changed, and that the new name given be that of Seward, in honor of that great and distinguished citizen, William H. Seward, who, as Secretary of State, negotiated the treaty by which Russia parted with and the United States acquired Alaska. There is no other region so appropriate for the payment of such a tribute as Alaska and no part of Alaska where it can more fittingly be made than on the island referred to. The change suggested would be received gratefully in that Territory and with favor throughout the entire Union. And for this your memorialist will ever pray.

EDWARD O. GRAVES,
President Chamber of Commerce.
THOS. W. PROSCH,
Acting Secretary.

Mr. DANIEL introduced a bill (S. 3361) for the relief of the Seaboard and Roanoke Railroad Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3362) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Portsmouth, in the State of Virginia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3363) for the relief of Adel Virginia Spangler, of Frederick County, Va.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. THURSTON introduced a bill (S. 3364) granting a pension to Benjamin F. Trapp; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed to the pension appropriation bill, which I ask be printed and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it be read, so that it may go into the RECORD.

The amendment was read, and referred to the Committee on Pensions and ordered to be printed, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed to the pension appropriation bill.

Add after the word "separately," in line 7, the following:

"Provided further, That hereafter no pensions shall be paid upon power of attorney from pensioners residing in foreign countries."

Mr. FAIRBANKS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PROCTOR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ELKINS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

STENOGRAPHER FOR COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. PETTIGREW submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be, and is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer for said committee during the remainder of this session of Congress, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, at a compensation of $100 per month.

DISTRICT WATER SUPPLY.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to transmit to the Senate any information which may be in possession of the Marine-Hospital Service covering the results of bacteriological or other investigations relating to the pollution of the water supply of the city of Washington.

Mr. GALLINGER. In connection with the resolution, I desire to have printed in the RECORD a memorandum from the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORANDUM.

The Marine-Hospital Service has for the past four years paid particular attention to the investigation of the pollution of the water supply, and in particular with reference to the Potomac River. On July 1 of last year there was begun in the hygienic laboratory of the service a systematic bacteriological investigation of the drinking water. Special attention has also been paid in collecting data bearing upon the morbidity and mortality statistics of drinking water. A report embodying the results of the investigations since July 1 can be furnished within about ten days.

W. WYMAN,
Supervising Surgeon-General.

MARSHAL OF EASTERN DISTRICT OF ARKANSAS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution, coming over from yesterday, submitted by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. The resolution will be read.

The resolution was read, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be directed to inform the Senate at what time Hon. Henry M. Cooper entered upon the discharge of the duties of marshal of the eastern district of Arkansas; how many deputies and other employees he found were employed in the office at that time, and how many have been discharged, when and upon what grounds; whether vacancies made by the discharge or resignation of old employees have been filled under the civil-service rules and regulations.

WESTERN PAVING AND SUPPLY COMPANY.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1055) appropriating money to pay the claim of the Western Paving and Supply Company.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate $4,006.73 for the payment of the claim of the Western Paving and Supply Company for improving with vulcanite asphaltic pavement the roadways of Pennsylvania and Court streets, in front of the United States court-house and post-office building, and Market street, from Pennsylvania to Alabama street, alongside that building, in the city of Indianapolis.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OUACHITA RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. MCENERY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5516) to amend and reenact section 5 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the mayor and city council of Monroe and the police jury of the parish of Ouachita, La., to construct a traffic bridge across the Ouachita River, opposite said city," approved February 8, 1897.

Mr. STEWART. After this bill is disposed of I desire to take the floor. I do not want to object invidiously to proceeding in this way, but I gave notice that I would address the Senate this morning, and I shall insist upon going on with my remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill indicated by the Senator from Louisiana?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. H. L. OVERSTREET, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 852) for the relief of Thomas B. Reed;

A bill (H. R. 4760) authorizing the construction of two bridges across the Choctawhatchee River, a navigable stream in Dale County, Ala.; and

A bill (H. R. 5975) extending the homestead laws and providing for right of way for railroads in the District of Alaska.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 357) for the relief of William S. Grant; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Nevada permit me to make a request before he proceeds?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. There are on the Calendar four general pension bills that have passed the Senate heretofore, bills very simple in their nature, one other bill that I reported two or three days ago, which I think the Senate will favorably consider, and six private pension bills. I wish to ask unanimous consent that after the Senator from Nevada concludes his remarks, the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of those bills, subject to objection. I understand that the Senators who are to discuss the Hawaiian treaty are not quite prepared to go on to-day, and I think there will be no objection to this order. It will take but a few minutes at any rate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection made to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire to take up the Private Pension Calendar and four general bills——

Mr. GALLINGER. Four general bills, subject to objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Immediately after the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Nevada? The Chair hears no objection, and that will be the order.

PAYMENT OF GOVERNMENT BONDS.

Mr. STEWART. I ask that the Senate concurrent resolution which is the regular order at 2 o'clock be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the concurrent resolution offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], resolution No. 22. Does the Senator from Nevada desire to have it read?

Mr. STEWART. After a little while I shall call for its reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution is before the Senate, and the Senator from Nevada will proceed.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, the resolution which has just been laid before the Senate was declaratory of the law as it existed twenty years ago and as it still exists. The disregard of the principles declared in that resolution is the most unfortunate, disastrous, and perhaps lamentable page in American history. The utter disregard by the executive department of the statute law of the land has brought many calamities upon this country. The panic of 1893 and the distress since that time are the direct offspring of the violation of the principles of that resolution. I am glad that the Senator from Iowa near me [Mr. ALLISON] voted for it, because he is the leader, when it comes to sound propositions, of the Republican side of the Senate. I am glad that the President of the United States voted for it, because he has power to correct in future the errors of his predecessors and refrain from like usurpations himself.

I will now ask the Secretary to read the resolution.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution reported by Mr. VEST from the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Whereas by the act entitled "An act to strengthen the public credit," approved March 18, 1869, it was provided and declared that the faith of the United States was thereby solemnly pledged to the payment, in coin or its equivalent, of all the interest-bearing obligations of the United States, except in cases where the law authorizing the issue of such obligations had expressly provided that the same might be paid in lawful money or other currency than gold and silver; and

Whereas all the bonds of the United States authorized to be issued by the act entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," approved July 14, 1870, by the terms of said act were declared to be redeemable in coin of the then present standard value, bearing interest payable semi-annually in such coin; and

Whereas all bonds of the United States authorized to be issued under the act entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," approved January 14, 1875, are required to be of the description of bonds of the United States described in the said act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt;" and

Whereas at the date of the passage of said act of Congress last aforesaid, to wit, the 14th day of July, 1870, the coin of the United States of standard value of that date included silver dollars of the weight of 412½ grains each, declared by the act approved January 18, 1837, entitled "An act supplementary to the act entitled 'An act establishing a mint and regulating the coins of the United States,'" to be a legal tender of payment, according to their nominal value, for any sums whatever: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That all the bonds of the United States issued, or authorized to be issued, under the said acts of Congress hereinbefore recited, are payable, principal and interest, at the option of the Government of the United States, in silver dollars of the coinage of the United States containing 412½ grains each of standard silver; and that to restore to its coinage such silver coins as a legal tender in payment of said bonds, principal and interest, is not in violation of the public faith nor in derogation of the rights of the public creditor.

RESUMPTION ACT.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, the resumption act referred to in the resolution has been used as a cloak for much wickedness. The resolution, it will be observed, does not refer in its conclusion to the redemption of greenbacks, because that question does not appear to have agitated the country at that time. The resolution was offered, discussed, and adopted in answer to a suggestion, and a very wicked one. Although the bonds of the United States were issued under the act of July 14, 1870, which declared that they were payable in the then standard coin of the United States, and this was printed on the bonds, some wicked people proposed to change by construction, by the will of somebody outside of Congress, those contracts so as to make them payable in gold. That demand was answered by Congress in the most emphatic manner through this resolution. Since that time those same persons have demanded the payment of the greenbacks in gold without the slightest foundation for such a demand.

Now, in order that this other demand through which the Treasury has been raided for years may be understood and appreciated, I will have read that portion of the resumption act of 1895 which provides for the redemption of greenbacks, prescribing how it shall be done, and under what conditions bonds may be issued. I shall, in the course of my remarks, show that under this law there has been no authority whatever to issue a bond, and that the contention that it was necessary to issue bonds for any purpose of that act, under the conditions which existed, is false. I shall show by the ex-President, Mr. Cleveland himself, that the conditions did not arise under which bonds could be issued. I will now have the provision read relating to the redemption of Treasury notes, commonly called greenbacks.

The Secretary read as follows:

And on and after the 1st day of January, A. D. 1879, the Secretary of the Treasury shall redeem, in coin, the United States legal-tender notes then outstanding, on their presentation for redemption at the office of the assistant treasurer of the United States in the city of New York, in sums of not less than $50. And to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare and provide for the redemption in this act authorized or required he is authorized to use any surplus revenues, from time to time, in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and to issue, sell, and dispose of, at not less than par, in coin, either of the descriptions of bonds of the United States described in the act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled, "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," with like qualities, privileges, and exemptions to the extent necessary to carry this act into full effect, and to use the proceeds thereof for the purposes aforesaid.

Mr. STEWART. It will be observed that the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized by this law to use any surplus money in the Treasury for the redemption of Treasury notes. He is also authorized to sell bonds of the description of the act of July 14, 1870, to the extent necessary to procure coin for that purpose—not gold coin—and he is only authorized to sell bonds to the extent necessary. If he has the coin in the Treasury, he has no more right to issue bonds than I have. I shall show before I get through, by Mr. Cleveland's testimony himself, that he had the coin, and that his purpose was to get a particular kind of coin, and that the coin of the contract, the coin that he had and was authorized to procure by the sale of these bonds, was not the kind of coin that he wanted for gold gamblers.

ACT OF 1890.

Since the passage of this resolution, known as the Matthews resolution, twenty years ago, of which the one under consideration is an exact copy, there has been no law passed with regard to this question except the act of 1890, which increased the purchase of silver bullion from the minimum of $2,000,000 worth a month, which had been the practice before, to 4,500,000 ounces a month and the issuance of legal-tender Treasury notes for the purchase of such bullion. That act provides:

That upon demand of the holder of any of the Treasury notes herein provided for the Secretary of the Treasury shall, under such regulations as he may prescribe, redeem such notes in gold or silver coin, at his discretion.

There can be no doubt, then, that the Treasury notes issued under this act may be redeemed in gold or silver coin at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Section 3 of the act shows most conclusively that Congress contemplated the redemption of these Treasury notes in silver, for it reads thus:

That the Secretary of the Treasury shall each month coin 2,000,000 ounces of the silver bullion purchased under the provisions of this act into standard silver dollars until the 1st day of July, 1891, and after that time he shall coin of the silver bullion purchased under the provisions of this act as much as may be necessary to provide for the redemption of the Treasury notes herein provided for.

The act not only gave the Secretary of the Treasury the option to pay in either gold or silver, but it provided the silver, and there is no provision anywhere for obtaining gold except what comes in in the ordinary course of revenue. It provided in express terms the silver to redeem the notes issued under the act. Notwithstanding that provision the President of the United States disregarded that law, and the Secretary of the Treasury disregarded it. In fact, the provision of the law was mandatory if there was no gold on hand or not sufficient gold on hand, for it is a well-settled principle of law that providing a thing shall be done in one way excludes all other ways. By providing that money should be got for the purpose of redeeming these notes by coinage, and no method being provided for getting it in any other way, it was a command to the Executive to redeem them in silver coin.

The expression of one mode excludes the other. There can be no doubt that if he had the gold there, he could use it; he has that discretion. But as he did not have it, and there was no special way provided to get gold and there was a special way provided for obtaining silver coin, he had to use silver or wholly violate the law.

PARITY RECITALS.

Perhaps it will be as well in this place, before I proceed further with my speech, to call attention to the only argument against payment in silver which has been put forth by the public press or the apologists for the usurpation of the Administration. These apologists for the usurpation of the Administration contend that a clause thrown in reciting the policy of the Government repealed the whole system of law and established the gold standard. The clause reads:

It being the established policy of the United States to maintain the two metals on a parity with each other upon the present legal ratio, or such ratio as may be provided by law.

In what connection was that general declaration made? It was made in a law which more than doubled the purchase of silver, and gave the reason for purchasing more silver. Congress declared, in effect, that more silver was to be purchased in order to restore the parity between the two metals. That was the reason given why Congress provided for purchasing more silver, and it was a sensible reason.

Apologists for the usurpation of the Administration say that in order to comply with the principle of this recital they must cut off the demand for silver, refuse to pay it out to the creditors of the Government, limit its use. Do they not know that it was a limitation upon the use of silver which produced the disparity between it and gold? Do they not know that there was a parity between the two metals for thousands of years at the ratio established by law, and that it was not until the mints of the United States, France, and Germany were closed to silver, thus cutting off the demand, that this disparity was made to appear? It is demand that enhances the price of an article, and these people have the effrontery to say, "We cut off the demand to enhance the price of silver and maintain the parity." The reason they give is an insult to the common sense of the American people.

Besides, the clause which I have read is only a recital and not a law directing anything to be done. The law which directs something to be done gives a discretion to the Secretary of the Treasury to pay in either metal, and then, right in this act, makes it his duty to coin silver for that purpose; and because Congress saw fit to give a reason for the increased purchase of silver, which was a rational one, they take this clause, give it an utterly absurd construction, and say that the only way to make a parity between the two metals is to use one and not the other; to make a demand for one and not for the other—that is the way they are creating a parity! There is not a tyro in all the land who would think about the matter for one moment who would not feel insulted that the Administration of a great country should make such a proposition to him; and it can only be made on the presumption that the American people are imbeciles.

CLEVELAND KNOWINGLY VIOLATED THE LAW.

Mr. Cleveland knew the Government owed no gold obligations. He made many statements to that effect in his messages. On the 3d day of December, 1895, referring to the contract which was made with Pierpont Morgan & Co. in the preceding January, Mr. Cleveland states:

On the day this contract [the Morgan contract] was made its terms were communicated to Congress by a special Executive message, in which it was stated that more than $16,000,000 would be saved to the Government if gold bonds bearing 3 per cent interest were authorized to be substituted for those mentioned in the contract.

This proves that not only the President and the Secretary of the Treasury, but the Morgan syndicate knew perfectly well that those were not gold bonds, and knew perfectly well that the Government was not compelled to redeem them in gold; that they were silver-coin bonds, and they were willing to give $16,000,000 more for sixty-two millions of bonds if Congress would authorize the issue of gold bonds. Is not this proof conclusive, and does it not put to shame the pretense that those bonds were gold obligations when the President of the United States and Pierpont Morgan & Co. tell Congress that there is $16,000,000 difference in value between these bonds, payable, as they are, in silver or gold. When the President asked the privilege of issuing gold bonds, did he not know that the bonds he was issuing were not gold bonds? Did he not know that there was no authority to buy gold when he had silver to pay the interest on them? Most certainly he did.

Mr. Carlisle, the Secretary of the Treasury at that time, knew full well that they were not gold bonds, for he had voted for the Matthews resolution, identically the same as this, while he represented Kentucky, and before he represented Wall street. Mr. Carlisle never pretended that the United States owed any gold obligations during his term of office. He simply proclaimed that the Treasury would pay gold when it pleased, without regard to the statute. In his bulletin issued July 1, 1896, known as Bulletin 123, he stated:

United States notes are redeemable in coin, in sums not less than $50, by the assistant treasurers in New York and San Francisco.

Treasury notes of 1890 are redeemable in coin, in sums not less than $50, by the Treasurer and all assistant treasurers of the United States.

He did not contend that the bonds were redeemable in gold, but in coin of either metal; but he goes on to say what the Treasury would do. He does not undertake to state that it is the law, but stated what the Treasury would do with coin obligations, and what it does do. He admits the usurpation. He says that—

Coin obligations of the Government are redeemed in gold coin when gold is demanded and in silver when silver is demanded.

Mr. Carlisle seemed proud of the infamous breach of trust. That is to say, the option to pay in either gold or silver is given to the creditors of the Government—an option worth hundreds of millions of dollars; and I say that the giving away of that valuable option, which Congress had reserved to the Government, was a fraud upon the Government, and if it had been done in private dealings it would have been punished as criminal.

Let me illustrate. Suppose my friend from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] has a farm. He makes a contract with a merchant to deliver to him a thousand bushels of oats or a thousand bushels of barley. He leaves me as his agent with full power of attorney to act for him, to till the farm and fill the contract, and make other contracts I might think proper in regard to the farm. I sow oats and barley. The oat crop in the whole country fails; there are no oats produced; there are none even for seed. Oats go up to a dollar a bushel. The barley crop is abundant.

The merchant comes to me and demands oats. I tell him the contract calls for barley as well as oats, and that I have got plenty of barley, and that I propose to pay him in barley. "Ah," says he, "the honor of your principal is involved in paying oats. Will you sacrifice his honor?" In some way or other—I will not say the honor argument convinces me; I do not know that that argument would convince anybody, but they have a way of convincing people to do wrong sometimes—he convinces me that I must pay oats. I have no way of getting oats except by mortgaging the farm; and I put a mortgage of a thousand dollars on the farm and buy a thousand bushels of oats to deliver to the merchant.

My friend from Arkansas returns. He looks in the bins and sees them overflowing with barley and says to me: "Have you got all this barley left after having filled that contract with the merchant and given him a thousand bushels?" I say "No, I did not pay him in barley." "Why did you not do that?" "Oh, I could not sacrifice your honor." "In what did you pay him?" "I paid him in oats." "I did not have any oats; and where did you get the oats?" "I mortgaged the farm and bought the oats for a thousand dollars." Do you think he would regard me as a trusty agent?

That is precisely the same condition that was presented to the Cleveland Administration. When it had plenty of silver, as I will show by the testimony of Mr. Cleveland himself, it mortgaged the United States for $262,000,000 to buy gold to pay a debt contracted to be paid in silver, and which the people of the United States had the right to discharge according to the contract. It is said the honor of the United States is saved by this absurd excuse for violating the law. No plainer violation of law can be suggested than that of which the executive department has been guilty for the last twenty years.

GOLD COMMISSION KNOWS BONDS ARE PAYABLE IN SILVER.

Even the Indianapolis commission, which probably knows less than any other commission ever organized in this country, if we may judge by what it says about the money question, or any other question, admits that these obligations are payable in silver as well as in gold. That fact has even got down to the comprehension of the gold commission of Indianapolis. They say, on the 21st page of their report, that—

The uncertainty of this situation is increased by the fact that the issue of bonds rests with the executive department, and whether it shall be resorted to or not will depend upon the personal views and discretion of the official at the head of the department.

Of course that is not quite true, because that matter is strictly regulated by law. The Treasury Department can only sell bonds when there is no coin in the Treasury with which to redeem greenbacks. It is not in the discretion of the Department, but it is within the usurpation of the Department. This learned or unlearned commission go on to say:

More serious still is the fact that it is in the power of the executive department, as the law now stands, to decide absolutely whether the Government notes shall be paid in gold or in silver.

That is their position. They say, as the law now stands, the executive department can pay in either gold or in silver. Of course it can pay in whichever it has; but if it has not a supply of one of the metals and Congress provides a way to get the other, the Secretary of the Treasury must use the one provided by Congress, but he has no right to usurp the powers of the Government to provide a better coin than is required by the contract. If Congress provides one of the metals for the payment of the contract, he must use that metal. This proposition is so plain that it has got down to the comprehension of the commission, who believe that gold bullion without coinage is money.

CLEVELAND KNEW HE HAD NO AUTHORITY TO ISSUE BONDS.

We say that Mr. Cleveland knew that he had no authority to issue bonds. How do we know that? He states it in his message. In his message of January 28, 1895, in notifying Congress of the Morgan contract, he says:

There need be no fear that we can pay our current expenses with such money as we have. There is now in the Treasury a comfortable surplus of more than sixty-three millions, but it is not gold, and therefore does not meet our difficulty.

There is plenty of money, but not gold, and therefore it does not meet our difficulty! His difficulty was to give the gold exporters gold. He appears to have had no thought of executing the law. He further says in his annual message of December 3, 1895:

> At no time when bonds have been issued has there been any consideration of the question of paying the expenses of Government with their proceeds. There was no necessity to consider that question. At the time of each bond issue we had a safe surplus in the Treasury for ordinary operations, exclusive of the gold in our reserve. In February, 1894, when the first issue of bonds was made, such surplus amounted to eighteen millions. In November, when the second issue was made, it amounted to more than forty-two millions, and in February, 1895, when the bonds for the third time were issued, such surplus amounted to more than one hundred millions. It now amounts to $98,072,428.30.

And with that surplus he went on immediately afterwards and sold another hundred million of bonds. If it be suggested that the President did not state the kind of money which was in the Treasury, and that it might have been paper, we respond that more than half of the revenue, as shown by the books of the Treasury Department, has come in during the last five years in silver certificates, which can be exchanged in that Department for silver dollars. Besides, we say that there was lying in the Treasury a large amount of silver bullion, the seigniorage on which, if it had been coined, as was required by law, would have amounted to more than $50,000,000.

There was no pretense that the Treasury did not have plenty of silver coin. Then by what authority did the President issue bonds at all? Not by the authority of the resumption act, for that act provides that he shall only issue bonds to an extent necessary to procure coin. He had coin confessedly, and in violation of that statute he has saddled the country—for no other purpose than to buy gold when we owed no gold—with a debt of two hundred and sixty-odd million dollars.

CORRUPT BOND DEAL.

There are some things connected with this bond deal which might as well be alluded to now. At the time the contract of January, 1895, was made there was outstanding quite a large amount of 4 per cent bonds. They were of the 4–30 issue. They drew 4 per cent interest and were payable in thirty years after their issue, the interest being payable semiannually. Such bonds in the preceding twenty years had not sold in the market at any time for less than 1 per cent premium for each year they had to run. They had gone above that; they had sold in 1889, when they had about eighteen years to run, as high as 127. The bonds that were out at the time this contract was made in January, 1895, had about twelve years to run, and they were selling for a little over 12 per cent premium in the market on the day the Morgan contract was made.

So, according to the market price of these bonds for twenty years, they were worth when they were issued 130. Cleveland sold sixty-two and one-half millions for 104½, and he proposed to sell another hundred million for the same price, but other syndicates got jealous of the Morgan syndicate, and he was compelled to divide the bonds among the syndicates. The pretext that it was a popular loan was false. If it had been a popular loan, it would have been made in such denominations as that it could have been secured by people of small means, as was done in France, where 10 Francs, or $2, would buy a bond.

Instead of this being done, the bonds were sold to syndicates for 111; these bonds were worth 130 at that time, if the market had not been rigged, and everybody knew it; and although $62,000,000 have run nearly three years and the $100,000,000 about two years, they are selling to-day in the market at from 128½ to 129¼. They have gone right back to the old price which everybody knew they would obtain. On the real market price of these bonds and the price at which they were sold there was a clean margin of at least $30,000,000 of profit.

The House of Representatives did not investigate this shady transaction at all; they never took any notice of it. There was a weak attempt to take notice of it in the Senate, and the Finance Committee were authorized to inquire who was interested in this deal and how the money was divided. They went to New York and asked Pierpont Morgan and Belmont some pertinent questions, who were interested with them, who were their associates, how much money they had made, etc. They declined to answer, treating the committee with contempt, and they never yet have been required to answer.

It is outrageous that there should be a thirty-million steal perpetrated here in the capital by the connivance of the executive department, and that there should be no investigation of it. Is there not cause for discontent? Is there not a want of confidence? If there is not a want of confidence in the executive department, the people are fools. Can you inspire confidence by such transactions as that?

Mr. MASON. Has the country gone to ruin yet?

Mr. STEWART. Not quite, but we are on the road. We have escaped utter ruin this year by the famine in other countries. I do not know whether or not the Administration claims credit for the increase in the price of wheat which has been occasioned by the starvation of millions in India.

Mr. MASON. Nobody is starving here.

Mr. STEWART. Is the Senator sure that there are no people suffering from the want of bread in this country?

Mr. MASON. There are not so many starving now as there were during the last Administration.

Mr. STEWART. Not quite so many, perhaps, but there has been no general improvement. There has been a little rise in the price of wheat in consequence of famine in other lands, but the iron hand of contraction is upon us and has been grasping our resources and paralyzing them for twenty years, and there is no let-up under this Administration.

There has been, I will admit, some very strong temptations to violate the law to which I have referred and to give away the option which was secured to the Government because it is worth hundreds of millions of dollars and would have saved this country from the panic of 1893.

AUSTRIAN BOND DEAL.

Now, let us return to history a little. The act of 1890, as you will observe, required the coinage of 2,000,000 ounces of silver a month until the 1st day of July, 1891. Then came the question, which was immediately discussed, what the Secretary of the Treasury would do after that; whether he would coin money and redeem the notes, as contemplated by the act, or whether he would violate the law. There was a tremendous speculation dependent upon his action, in which the fate of one of the great European powers was involved. Austria owed a debt of twenty-four hundred millions, payable in silver, and the Rothschilds combination had been discussing for ten years as to ways and means to convert that debt into gold obligations.

The proceeding of the Rothschilds to convert the Austrian silver debt into a gold obligation was suspended on account of the Baring failure and then on account of the peculiar wording of the act of 1890, which required the coinage of two millions a month until the 1st day of July, 1891. After that time they commenced their operations.

The subtreasurer at Boston proposed to pay in silver the Sherman notes, as they were called; the holder of the notes objected, and appealed to Secretary Foster, and Foster decided that they should be paid in gold. Then, in order to make the matter certain, on the 17th of November, 1891, the exporters of gold, the manipulators of the Rothschilds deal, had a bankers' dinner at Delmonico's, and they called Mr. Foster there and inquired of him whether he would obey that law and coin sufficient silver to provide for the redemption of those notes or whether he would pay in gold. He stated to them that he would pay in gold under any and all circumstances, if anybody wanted gold, and that that was the established policy of the Administration.

Following that, in December, the President of the United States, Mr. Harrison, in his annual message alluded to this promise of the Secretary, which was in defiance of law, and said the assurance of the Secretary had done much to sustain the business of the country. Following right on, in January, 1892, a contract was made between the Austrian Government and the Rothschilds syndicate to convert the Austrian silver bonds into gold bonds, and providing that twenty-four hundred millions of indebtedness should be funded into gold bonds drawing 4 per cent interest, payable semiannually, and that the bonds should run perpetually.

Nothing was done immediately, because there was still some uncertainty in the United States. The whole scheme depended upon the action of the United States, because it was necessary to have a reserve in gold in order to float the Austrian bonds. One hundred and fifty million was the least amount named as necessary to have, and it was necessary to get it somewhere. There was no place on earth to get it except here. Germany and France had the same option to pay in either gold or silver that the United States had. The officers of both of those Governments refused to pay gold, when there was a demand for gold for shipment, but informed those making the demand that they would pay silver, and thus there was no raid on those countries.

They did as Daniel Manning, when he was Secretary of the Treasury, is reported to have done. When it was proposed to make a like raid upon the Treasury in 1885, and draw out the gold, and the speculators had in view at that time the same Austrian speculation which was then under discussion, Mr. Manning went to New York and called on a few of the leaders, and said to them, "If you undertake this game, the first day I will pay 10 per cent in silver, the next day 50 per cent in silver, and after that all silver." There was not a word said. He would not allow the Treasury to be raided, and no one attempted to raid it. There was not a word said against the credit of France because she stood on her option, or against the credit of Germany because she stood on her option. There were no cries of repudiation and anarchy.

France, Germany, and this country were the only ones where a large amount of gold could be had under any circumstances, because the English Government would not allow the country to be robbed of gold, but would raise the rate of interest, and besides that, the syndicate was really the English Government. It is the financial dictator of England.

Secretary Foster assured them on the 17th of November that they should have gold, and President Harrison assured them on the 3d of December following that they should have it. They waited, however, until both of the nominations were made, because it was a Presidential year. Cleveland and Harrison were both nominated.

Their views were well known, but, in order to make assurance doubly sure, the Rothschilds syndicate took a million of Sherman notes to the subtreasury in New York in July, 1892, after the nominations were made, and demanded gold. They not only got the gold, but they got an interview from the subtreasurer, Mr. Jordan, that it was the established policy of the Government to pay gold to everybody who demanded gold. Then they put their Austrian gold bonds upon the market and sold them from ninety-six and a fraction up to 98. They funded the debt with these gold bonds; they procured a hundred and fifty millions of gold. Something over one hundred millions of it bore our eagle, as reported by the Austrian Government. Then there were bars, mostly from here, and gold coin of other countries to a trifling amount, but mostly bullion that they bought in different parts of the world, making up their one hundred and fifty millions.

What did the change cost Austria? It would have taken probably one hundred and sixty millions, perhaps one hundred and seventy millions, to stand the discount on the sale of the gold bonds, to pay commissions, and buy the one hundred and fifty millions of gold. But when they closed up the transaction they had added four hundred millions to the debt of Austria. Instead of being twenty-four hundred millions of silver obligations, they converted it into twenty-eight hundred millions of gold obligations, since which time they have added another hundred million. It is now twenty-nine hundred million, and they have not yet resumed specie payments. I saw in the dispatches the other day that they would be driven to sell their gold; that the exchange between Vienna, Paris, and London was so great that it was likely a panic might come on, and they would have to sell their gold. They have not resumed specie payments, but they have converted their obligations into gold obligations.

Now, the four hundred millions used to pay commissions and buy one hundred and fifty millions of gold must have furnished some corruption money. I suppose two hundred millions would be a very moderate estimate of what they had left to put where it would do the most good. I do not say any of it came across the ocean, because I do not know, but it was freely said in European circles that a good deal had to be used in Vienna to convince the officials there that it was good to double their debt without consideration. But what followed here immediately afterwards throws a suspicion upon the good faith of the rulers of this country.

It is true that the reserve was drawn down during Harrison's Administration to a hundred million, and Cleveland's Administration came face to face with an encroachment upon what they called the gold reserve. Mr. Carlisle, not having been informed for what he was appointed, being ignorant of his duty, not knowing but that the statute had nothing to do in prescribing his duties, proposed to pay in silver. This was on Saturday. His chief repudiated it. On Monday a proclamation came from the White House, in the shape of an interview, that all obligations should be paid in gold when gold was demanded.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator from Nevada permit me?

Mr. STEWART. I will yield for a question, not for an argument.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Senator makes a very distinct statement that Mr. Carlisle proposed to pay in silver. What is the evidence upon which the statement is based?

Mr. STEWART. Not being prosecuting attorney and not having the power to call witnesses, perhaps I can not give all the evidence, but it is abundant. There were public utterances, and rumor says that he gave instructions to that effect.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Did not Mr. Carlisle, as Secretary of the Treasury, deny that he had made any such statement?

Mr. STEWART. I have said that I have no means to get all the evidence. I think I could get proof of the fact right here in the Senate, if I could swear some Senators. But it is immaterial. Whether he knew his duty or not, he was informed on Monday following what his duty was, and he followed it most studiously.

Mr. SPOONER. The very suggestion created a panic.

Mr. STEWART. There is no doubt that if you suggest that the gold robbers shall not despoil the country they will have a panic. They say always, "We will have a panic unless you let us put our hands into the Treasury of the United States without authority of law." We hear that all the time. There is and has been a panic since 1893.

SHADOW OF AUSTRIAN SWINDLE.

Then what followed immediately after that? The war on the purchasing clause in the act of 1890. This syndicate demanded the repeal of the only law that recognized silver as a money metal, which was the purchasing clause of the Sherman Act; and the history of that conspiracy ought to be written in full. It was exposed to some extent in the debate. Mr. Carlisle advised the banks to squeeze. The banks commenced drawing in their money, drawing in their loans, and said there was going to be a panic. The President said there was going to be a panic. Everybody in authority said so; and that made the panic.

Then they told us that nothing could save the country from utter destruction but the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman Act. We told them then that the people were not suffering on account of bad money; that the Treasury notes issued under the Sherman Act were just as good as any; that it was want of money; that all payments were suspended in New York; that there was no money. To cure the disease of want of money, which was making the panic rage, they demanded that all supply of new money should be cut off, and by means which it would be tedious and unprofitable to explain, they secured the passage of that law. It will always stand as the monument of a misguided Congress and a dictatorial Administration, under the command of the gold syndicate.

Since that time we have had no new money. Population has increased, but there is no new money, and the Administration in making its statements is forced to make a false showing as to the money in circulation and to pretend that it is not shrinking. If I had the time, I could take up the tables and show you that it is. There is no more new money, but population is increasing.

Mr. GALLINGER. We are getting some money out of the coinage of the seigniorage.

Mr. STEWART. That is not enough to compensate for what goes out in the pockets of immigrants returning home every month. No new money and the population is increasing; and then we are told forsooth that the money is congested in the money centers, and we are given that as a reason why we have money enough. We hear that all the while. The evidence that there is too much money, they say, is because it can not be used. If there ever was an idiotic absurdity, that is one, because everybody knows that when prices are falling and securities are being destroyed money goes to the money centers and can not be loaned.

There has been a destruction of securities to an enormous amount during the last few years. I have heard it estimated, by people who pretend to have investigated the matter, as high as six thousand millions since 1890 of stock, bonds, and other securities that have gone to the bad, and the people who had invested their honest money in them lost. The object lesson makes people cautious. Consequently they are seeking Government bonds, they are seeking United States Government bonds, and are willing to take a nominal interest. The natural instinct of man is to invest in those things which are going up. Money is going up. Its purchasing power is increasing. Consequently the whole trend of public investment and private investments is in gilt-edge securities, money futures, not property, but drawn from property.

There is not half—I do not believe there is one-third—of the productive force of the United States employed to-day. We were a great nation because we have great productive power, but you have millions of laborers who are forced to be idle. You have on half pay nearly all the balance. The farms of your farmers, who have been struggling against fate for the last twenty years, are not worth 50 cents on the dollar of what they were at that time. You have commercial gloom in this country because you have cut off the money supply. Why have you done it? You have done it at the behest of an alien syndicate.

See to what condition the United States is reduced. The productive power being destroyed, our country is humiliated among the nations of the earth. If we had a volume of money that would maintain the stability of prices, we would be the richest country on earth. The resources of all Europe can not be compared to ours. Our hands are tied. We can not build navies. We can not pay the current expenses of the Government. We are relegated to the position of a third-rate power. What is Europe doing? England has already enslaved 350,000,000 human beings and got them in a more degraded, abject condition than anybody ever contended was the fate of the slaves of the South. There are over 300,000,000 of them who would gladly change places with the worst-treated colored slave ever found in the South.

What are the gold powers doing? They propose to divide up China. England says it is for the benefit of the commerce of the world. Why does she not let the world into the commerce of India and Egypt? Her trade relations keeps them all out. We have no trade there, and we will have none in Asia when it is divided up among the gold powers. When Europe has a thousand million slaves from whom to draw resources, to build navies, what becomes of the Monroe doctrine; what becomes of the great Republic? It will be a republic no more, unless we can achieve our financial independence. We can not exist as a republic. Free government can only exist with free men. Men can not be free unless they have opportunities for independence. With your millions out of employment, with poverty everywhere, with debts increasing, you can not have prosperity, and without it you can not have free institutions.

Our Government is becoming the most despotic on earth. The merchants tell us privately that they dare not talk about this question. Business men tell us that. The gold men have them in their power, and a monopoly of money means a monopoly of all things. No reform or progress is possible unless you have individual opportunity, which does not exist in this or any other country to-day. The only people who have opportunities are those who deal in money and control the money of the world. The great wreckers alone make money; the ordinary investor is destroyed with the rest of the people.

Look at the way they treat the railroads. They call it reorganization. They reorganize out all the honest owners and stockholders. Then a few take the road and stock it and bond it, sell the stocks and bonds, and then reorganize it and repeat the operation. It is the great wreckers who want the gold standard, because they want to control the money of the world; because they want to wreck the fortunes of the people and throw them into bankruptcy, where they can divide the plunder. No other part of the community is benefited by this terrible policy.

Why this policy should be carried forward, promulgated, vindicated, and upheld by bald usurpation let some Senator inform us. The sale of bonds, without authority, to buy gold with which to pay debts, when we owe no gold obligations, is outrageous. Everybody knows that the option which was reserved to the Government was very valuable; that it was worth hundreds of millions of dollars. I do not know whether it has been given away or sold. If it has been given away, the executive department has been grossly ignorant. If it has been sold, who has received the proceeds? I do not say that the proceeds of the bond deals went to executive officers, but the prosperity of the friends of the late Administration may and does create suspicion.

I do not say that any portion of the proceeds of the great Austrian deal in 1893 found its way this side of the Atlantic or that it aided to stampede Congress and make our Government take that infamous step in 1893 in favor of fastening the gold standard upon this country. But everything points in that direction. A system of usurpation, under which it is possible to steal millions, is dangerous. I thank God it was not established by Congress. But it was the system inaugurated in the Treasury Department by men who betrayed their trust. We demand the execution of the laws of the United States according to contract. The idea that gold men are not bound by their contracts as well as anybody is preposterous. The idea that they have any special privileges is degrading.

MUST GAGE BE SACRIFICED FOR TELLING THE TRUTH?

Greenbacks were good enough for the soldier; good enough for the Government. They are good enough now for the people. The people have not besieged the Treasury Department for gold. Business men have not done it. It has been done by gold syndicates to export it on speculation. Why should the law be trampled upon by these alien syndicates? I hope this Administration will wake up in time, and take a bold stand against carrying this usurpation further. The President of the United States is committed by his solemn vote against the idea that coin obligations are payable in gold alone.

I do not fully sympathize with the raid on the Secretary of the Treasury. I think he needs some defense. People do not understand how he is situated. It must be remembered that he is a banker. He has certainly observed one principle which is pretty well blended into human nature—that there ought to be honor among thieves. You never heard of Mr. Gage stealing from one of his fellow-bankers. There is another thing in his favor. He has no idea that anybody has any rights in this country but bankers, and when he robs others for the benefit of bankers he thinks he is doing right. If he does justice by them his conscience is clear.

For twenty-five years the gold powers have carried the elections by false pretenses—by telling what, in common parlance, are called lies. Every President who has been elected—well, since 1876, has been elected as a bimetallist, and each claimed to be a better bimetallist than his opponent. The people naturally have clung to their party, believing their party would not tell them lies. Cleveland was first elected as a bimetallist.

We heard it proclaimed all over the land that he would restore silver, and they pointed to their platform, which was bimetallic. Harrison was elected in 1888 as a bimetallist. The Democratic platform was silent on that subject in 1888. I had the honor to draw the plank in the Republican platform of 1888, which declared that "the Republican party is in favor of the use of both gold and silver as money and condemns the action of the Democratic Administration for its efforts to demonetize silver." That resolution had special reference to paying the debts of the Government in coin, as provided by law. Harrison's Administration was pledged to treat silver as money, according to the letter of the law. Instead of that he indorsed the action of his Secretary of the Treasury in giving away that option to pay silver to gold gamblers.

In 1892 both platforms claimed to be bimetallic. There might be some quibbling about it, but the country so understood it, and both parties claimed that it was so. But Harrison had the advantage. Cleveland's offenses against the laws were four years old, while Harrison was in high place, and everybody could see what he was doing, and that gave the election to Cleveland.

In 1896 the Republican party declared that they were in favor of international bimetallism. They contended on the stump and everywhere else that international bimetallism was the only way of obtaining relief; and with all their money, their coercion, their press, and power of all the corporations, they could not have carried the election in 1896 if they had not made honest voters believe that the Republican party was in good faith for bimetallism. Hundreds, yes, hundreds of thousands of men remained with their party believing that that was the best way to get bimetallism. No President has ever been elected except when the people understood that he was a bimetallist.

They claimed that McKinley was a better bimetallist than Bryan; that he represented the only scheme by which bimetallism could be secured. The next time the issue will be whether bimetallism shall be brought about by the only mode which is possible, by independent action on the part of the United States. The issue will be made whether the United States is big enough and strong enough to legislate for the people of this country. The utter failure of the scheme of the petitioners whom we sent over to Europe to beg the despots and usurers of the Old World to give us better laws, and the position of the present Administration have presented the question to the Republican party in a way which will require them to face the music.

As I have said, the success of the gold party has been gained by misrepresentations. Mr. Gage, who was made a Republican and Secretary of the Treasury the same day, as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] told us, is not an expert liar. Maybe he has not learned all the ways of politicians. He knew that the Republican party had been working to maintain the gold standard for many years. He knew that the gold standard had been established and maintained by the Republican party, aided by Cleveland Democracy.

He knew that he was a banker and belonged to the side that wanted the gold standard established and the money put into the hands of a few and the Government turned over to his fraternity. He understood all that, and he thought the people ought to know it. He did not suppose that there were any people but bankers, and perhaps inadvertently told the truth. He is criticised by the Republicans and denounced by them for having told the truth. He is the first Secretary of the Treasury who ever truthfully announced the policy of a gold Administration.

When he said all his bills, interviews, and proceedings had for their object "the more thoroughly committing the United States to the single gold standard," he told what had been the object of Sherman Republicanism and Cleveland Democracy for twenty-five years.

It is stated that the view of Mr. Gage is not the view of the President. That statement raises a very serious question. Who is at the head of the Administration? Is the Secretary of the Treasury the chief? Has he the right to announce the policy? If he has the power to fix the status of this question for his party, he is bigger than the President, and there may be danger of his dismissing the President altogether. The President is not of much use unless he has some influence with his Administration.

The pretense that the President is the best bimetallist in the world, and that his Secretary of the Treasury is the best monometallist, and that they are working in harmony, is ridiculous. If Gage is put out of the Administration for telling the truth—for that is his only crime—it will not do the party any good, because the people may believe in Mr. Gage when he becomes a martyr for the truth. If he has committed any other offense against the Republican party than telling the truth, it has not been made public.

Is Mr. Gage to be sacrificed? I hope not. I want him to stay in his place. I admire his courage, his pluck, for standing up to his principles, the principles of Cleveland Democracy and Sherman Republicanism. They have brought the country to ruin by getting the votes of the people through misrepresentation and using the power so acquired to destroy one of the precious metals.

It may do no good to pass the pending resolution, because it may not go through the two Houses. Probably it will not be considered anywhere else. It may do no good; but it is a satisfaction to know that twenty years ago it received more than a two-thirds vote in each House of Congress, and that all the best and strongest men of the day voted for it. It is some satisfaction to know that there is a majority still in the Senate which respects the law, which believes that the people of the United States have a right to have contracts executed as they are enacted by Congress. It is a satisfaction to know that the majority in the Senate concur with the people at large, and that they will have the support of the country.

The Committee on Appropriations tell us at every session that the revenues are so low that we can not pay our honest debts. There are more than $15,000,000 of honest private claims which have been tied up here for years because the revenues were insufficient. It is rank repudiation, and every man knows it. It has become proverbial throughout the country that a claim against the United States is worthless, because the Government will not pay its honest debts.

It is a shame that honest debts can not be paid, while options belonging to the Government and worth hundreds of millions are given away. I would like to hear some excuse, however feeble, for the robberies I have described. The "parity" excuse is too absurd for repetition. Demonetizing silver to create a parity between gold and silver is like cutting a man's head off to save his life. Besides, parity between dollars is nonessential.

The all-important question is the maintenance of parity between property and money, because they reciprocally measure each other, and the stability of that measure is the only means whereby justice can be done and prosperity secured. I hope some Senator has sufficient ingenuity to frame some excuse for the usurpations of the executive department. While no honest reason for the wholesale plunder of the Government by gold gamblers and stock jobbers, with the consent of the President and Secretary of the Treasury, can be given, we hope the opposition will be able to frame some gauze of sophistry to hide the naked corruption of the degenerate Administrations which have made gold gamblers rich at the expense of the people.

Mr. NELSON. I submit an amendment to the resolution under discussion for the purpose of having it printed. I shall offer it at the proper time as an amendment thereto.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that it may be read.

Mr. TELLER. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KYLE in the chair). The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

The Secretary read as follows:

Amend concurrent resolution 22 by adding at the end thereof the following:

"; and that it is the duty of the Government of the United States, under existing laws, to maintain the parity in value of its gold and silver money, so that the dollar of the one metal shall for all monetary purposes always be equal in value to the dollar of the other metal."

Mr. SPOONER subsequently said: I send to the desk, in order that it may be printed, a substitute which, when the time comes, I intend to offer to concurrent resolution No. 22, reported from the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CULLOM and Mr. GORMAN. Let it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend concurrent resolution No. 22 by striking out all after the resolving clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

That it is declared to be the financial policy of the United States that until there shall have been obtained an international agreement with the leading commercial nations of the world for the free coinage of silver, which agreement the United States is hereby further pledged to promote, the faith, honor, and credit of the United States are solemnly pledged to preserve the existing gold standard; and all silver and paper currency shall be maintained at a parity with gold, and all obligations of the United States shall be maintained inviolably at the present standard.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 852) for the relief of Thomas B. Reed was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 4760) authorizing the construction of two bridges across the Choctawhatchee River, a navigable stream in Dale County, Ala., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 5975) extending the homestead laws and providing for right of way for railroads in the District of Alaska was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the order of pension bills be now proceeded with.

Mr. CHANDLER. What is the order?

Mr. GALLINGER. That we shall consider eight or ten pension bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KYLE in the chair). Unanimous consent has been given for the consideration of pension bills on the Calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was understood that under the order we were to consider, subject to objection, four general bills that are on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the first general pension bill on the Calendar. The first is Senate bill 488.

PROOF IN CERTAIN PENSION CASES.

The bill (S. 488) defining and regulating proof in certain pension cases was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that upon the consideration of any application for a pension under any law of the United States the fact that the applicant was accepted and mustered into the military or naval service of the United States shall be taken and held as prima facie proof that such applicant was of sound body and mind at the time he was so accepted and mustered.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case. It is not long.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. GALLINGER June 29, 1897, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 488) defining and regulating proof in certain pension cases, have examined the same, and report:

A similar bill passed the Senate during the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress, and was sent over to the House, and no action was taken thereon. The Senate report is as follows, which we adopt, and recommend the passage of the bill:

"Under the present ruling of the Pension Bureau it is competent, in the consideration of a pension claim, to raise the question of physical and mental soundness at the date of enlistment, and testimony is sought and admitted on this point. It will readily be seen that this practice opens a wide field for prejudiced and false testimony on the part of the soldier's enemies, and beyond a doubt many entirely meritorious claims are rejected in consequence. Indeed, this committee is called upon to review many such cases, and experience in the committee room in the consideration of such cases prompted the preparation of this bill.

"It occurs to your committee that the Government was abundantly protected through its medical officers, who made careful physical examination of all who presented themselves for service in the Army. Very likely a man not physically sound occasionally escaped the scrutiny of the medical corps, but these cases were not numerous enough to warrant the continuance of a practice which brings annoyance, if not injustice, to many worthy soldiers. And again, it is a serious question whether the cases where unsound men gave honorable military service should not be looked upon as evidences of high and honorable patriotism rather than the reverse.

"Your committee recommend the passage of the bill."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WAIVER OF HONORABLE DISCHARGE.

The bill (S. 494) to supplement the act of June 27, 1890, as to pensions, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in any application for a pension under the act of Congress approved June 27, 1890, where it is shown that the soldier or sailor on account of whose service such pension is asked dies or has died without having received an honorable discharge from such service, and without having by his own misconduct forfeited his right to receive an honorable discharge, such want of an honorable discharge shall not debar the applicant from receiving the benefits of the law upon complying with the other requirements thereof. But it is provided that no charge of desertion shall be standing against such soldier or sailor upon the records of the War or Navy Department.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. GALLINGER June 29, 1897, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 494) to supplement the act of June 27, 1890, as to pensions, have examined the same and report:

A bill identical in form was introduced in the House of Representatives in the third session of the Fifty-third Congress, acted on favorably, and passed; sent to the Senate and referred to this committee and a favorable report was made. A similar bill was reported favorably during the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress, but failed to pass. Your committee recommend the passage of the bill, adopting the report to the Fifty-fourth Congress, which report is as follows:

"The Committee on Invalid Pensions have considered the bill (H. R. 233) to supplement the act of June 27, 1890, as to pensions, and submit the following report:

"The object of this bill is to correct an inequality in the act of June 27, 1890, arising from a limitation in the wording of that act and wholly unanticipated at the time of its passage. Under that act, if a soldier served ninety days in the war of the rebellion and was honorably discharged, his widow is pensionable without reference to the cause of his death. Moreover, where a soldier died in service and in line of duty, the widow is pensionable under the general laws prior to the act of June 27, 1890. There are cases, however, where the soldier died in the service, but from causes such as do not justify the pensioning of his widow under the general law, such as death by accident while absent from his command on personal business, etc.; neither is the widow pensionable in this case under the act of June 27, 1890, because the soldier did not receive an honorable discharge.

"This state of facts gives rise to the anomaly of pensioning without question the widow of a soldier who served for ninety days or more, was discharged, and subsequently died an ignominious death, while the widow of a soldier, no matter how long or meritorious his service, who was killed by the cars through no fault of his own while absent on furlough, is denied a pension altogether.

"The point involved is clearly defined, and the purposes of this bill are clearly in the direction of equalization and uniformity in the provisions of the act of June 27, 1890. The Fifty-second and the present Congress have frequently been called on to consider private bills to correct this obvious injustice growing out of the wording of that act, and such bills have uniformly received favorable consideration.

"It is clearly proper that such inequalities should be remedied where it is possible by general enactment rather than by individual and private acts; your committee therefore recommend that this bill do pass."

Herewith submitted also is a communication of the Commissioner of Pensions in reference to said bill:

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
"Washington, December 22, 1894.

"DEAR SIR: I have examined House bill 233, recently handed me, which passed the House of Representatives July 25, 1894, and am inclined to favor its passage.

"The act of June 27, 1890, required an honorable discharge to give a pensionable status, and Assistant Secretary Bussey held in one case that where a soldier had died in the service his widow was not entitled to pension under that act, for the reason that the soldier had not obtained an honorable discharge. The decision has always seemed to me to be incorrect, and I have not followed it fully, believing that death is to all intents an honorable discharge. This, I think, however, will do away with any question of this kind. The words "or Navy" should be inserted after the word "War" in the fourteenth line of the act, as the records of the War Department would not show desertions from the Navy Department.

"Yours, very truly,
"WM. LOCHREN, Commissioner.

"W. H. H. JOHNSTON, Esq.,
"Clerk Committee on Pensions, United States Senate."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS TO PAYMASTERS' CLERKS.

The bill (S. 2385) to amend the act entitled "An act granting pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war, and for other purposes," approved January 29, 1887, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the provisions of the act entitled "An act granting pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war, and for other purposes," approved January 29, 1887, shall be so construed as to include the surviving paymasters' clerks in the Army as of the same relative rank and grade as pursers' clerks in the Navy, and that the surviving paymasters' clerks of the Army, and the widows of those who have died, shall be entitled to all the rights and benefits given by the act of January 29, 1887, to pursers' clerks of the Navy.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. GALLINGER. That no misapprehension may go out to the country concerning this bill, I will state that it is the opinion of the committee that the purpose of the act of January 29, 1887, was to make clerks to paymasters in the Army pensionable as pursers in the Navy were made pensionable, but by some technicality that is denied. A diligent search reveals the fact that only four such persons are probably in the country who will be pensionable under the bill. So that it is not a very serious matter, and it is simply an exact justice that it should be passed.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS OF CERTAIN WIDOWS.

The bill (S. 2647) regulating pensions to widows of a certain class was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That hereafter no pension under any law of the United States shall be granted, allowed, or paid to the widow of a soldier, sailor, officer, naval or military, marine, marine officer, or any other male person entitled to a pension under any law of the United States or to the minor child or children of a widow, unless it shall be proved and established that the marriage of such widow to the soldier, sailor, officer, marine, or other person on account of whose service the pension is asked was duly and legally solemnized prior to the passage of this act, or unless the marriage shall take place hereafter and prior to or during the military or naval service of the soldier, sailor, officer, marine, or other person on account of whose service the pension is asked or claimed.

SEC. 2. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the report in this case be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is what I rose to ask. Let the report be printed in the RECORD.

The report submitted by Mr. GALLINGER January 14, 1898, is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2647) regulating pensions to widows of a certain class, have examined the same, and report:

This bill has for its object the same purpose that was enacted into law in the act of June 27, 1890, which statute provides that widows of soldiers drawing pensions under that law shall not be pensionable if their marriage took place subsequent to the passage of the act. It is a fact that at the present time there are a few widows of Revolutionary soldiers on the pension roll and a considerable number of widows of soldiers of the war of 1812. It thus appears that widows of Revolutionary soldiers are being pensioned one hundred and fifteen years after the close of that war; and if this is repeated, this country will be paying pensions to widows of the war of the rebellion in the year 1980.

The theory upon which pensions are granted to widows is that they in some way shared the hardships of their husbands during the period of hostilities, or that they lost their husbands by death on the battlefield. That is right and proper. The wife who cared for the home and children while her husband was fighting the battles of his country contributed to save the Government, and is deserving of generous recognition; but no such argument can be advanced in behalf of the woman who married the soldier long subsequent to the close of the war, and who was not in any way connected with the conflict.

For this reason there seems to be no injustice in the proposed legislation, which, so far as your committee has been able to ascertain, meets the approval of the soldiers of the country, the only opposition thus far shown to it being on the part of a few pension attorneys.

Your committee is of opinion that the proposed legislation is wise and in the line of just and true economy. We therefore report back a substitute for the original bill and recommend its passage.

PENSIONS TO CERTAIN WIDOWS AND HELPLESS CHILDREN.

Mr. GALLINGER. Senate bill 503 was overlooked. I ask that it be taken up.

The bill (S. 503) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act granting pensions to soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to widows, minor children, and dependent parents," approved June 27, 1890, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend the act of June 27, 1890, so as to make it read:

SEC. 3. That if any officer or enlisted man who served ninety days or more in the Army or Navy of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, and who was honorably discharged, has died, or shall hereafter die, leaving a widow without other means of support than her daily labor, or minor children under the age of 16 years, or a child or children who then are, or shall subsequently, prior to attaining the age of 16, become insane, idiotic, or otherwise permanently helpless, such widow shall, upon due proof of her husband's death, without proving his death to be the result of his military or naval service, be placed upon the pension roll from the date of the application therefor under this act, at the rate of $8 per month during her widowhood, and shall also be paid $2 per month for each child of such officer or enlisted man under 16 years of age, and also for each insane, idiotic, or otherwise permanently helpless child of such officer or enlisted man, of whom she has the care and custody, irrespective of age; and in case of the death or remarriage of the widow, leaving a child or children as above described, or if such soldier or sailor left no widow, such pension shall be paid to such child or children until the age of 16, and to such insane, idiotic, or otherwise permanently helpless child or children the pension, whether heretofore granted or hereafter to be granted, either under this or any former statute, shall continue during the life of such child or children, or during the period of such disability: Provided, That such condition of insanity, idiocy, or permanent helplessness shall have originated and existed prior to the arrival of such child or children at the age of 16 years: And provided further, That said widow shall have married said soldier or sailor prior to the 27th day of June, 1890: And provided further, That in case of the death of a soldier or sailor herein described from causes not chargeable to his service in the Army or Navy, leaving a widow to whom he was married subsequent to the 27th day of June, 1890, and leaving, by former marriage, a child or children under the age of 16 years, or insane, idiotic, or otherwise permanently helpless, such child or children shall be pensioned in like form and manner as if no widow had survived. All pensions under this section shall commence from the date of filing the application therefor.

Mr. COCKRELL. What change does the bill propose to make in the existing law?

Mr. GALLINGER. Simply this, that if a child has become insane, idiotic, or permanently helpless, prior to reaching the age of 16 years, that child is to be put upon the pension roll at $2 per month. As it is now we are getting a great many private pension bills asking us to place that class of children on the pension roll at $12 per month; which we have done in several instances. If this bill should pass—and I will say that it received the sanction of a former Commissioner of Pensions—it will take care of those permanently helpless and idiotic children of soldiers, and will probably not incur any greater charge upon the Treasury than is now being incurred by the passage of special bills at a higher rate of pension. It is not a serious matter; and yet it will make the enforcement of the act of June 27, 1890, more clear, and, I think, in the direction of justice to such children.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the report accompanying the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made, in the absence of objection.

The report submitted by Mr. GALLINGER June 29, 1897, is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 503) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act granting pensions to soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to widows, minor children, and dependent parents," approved June 27, 1890, have examined the same, and report:

A bill identical in form was introduced in the House of Representatives in the third session of the Fifty-third Congress, acted on favorably, and passed; sent to the Senate and referred to this committee and a favorable report was made.

A similar bill was reported favorably to the Senate in the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress, but failed to pass. The report is as follows, which we adopt, and recommend passage of the bill:

"The act of June 27, 1890, provides in section 3 for pensions for the widows and minor children of soldiers who served ninety days and were honorably discharged from service in the late war. That section also provides that 'in case a minor child is insane, idiotic, or otherwise permanently helpless, the pension shall continue during the life of said child, or during the period of such disability, and this proviso shall apply to all pensions heretofore granted or hereafter to be granted under this or any former statute.'

"The construction of this proviso has been the source of much contention in the Pension Bureau and Interior Department. It will be observed that the proviso does not authorize the placing on the rolls of the name of an idiotic, insane, or permanently helpless child, but simply provides that in case a minor child is insane, etc., the pension shall 'continue.' The construction placed on this clause by Assistant Secretary Bussey was that it could apply only to those who were under the age of 16 years at the date of the passage of the act.

"In a comparatively recent decision, Assistant Secretary Reynolds holds that it can apply to those under 16 years of age at the date of application under that act, and also to those who have once been admitted to the pension rolls as minors in their own right, or through increase to the widow on their account, but that it does not operate to place independently on the pension roll those permanently helpless, who have never been pensioned as minors, and who are at date of application over 16 years of age.

"Whatever may have been the intent of the framers of the act of June 27, 1890, it will be conceded, no doubt, that this construction is as wide as the words employed in the proviso quoted admit of. This limited operation of that proviso, however, gives rise to distinctions which have no foundation in the essential status of the applicant, and which, therefore, appear invidious. If a soldier dies leaving an insane child 15 years of age, that child is pensionable for life under this law. If the child, in every respect as helpless, be 17 years of age, he is not pensionable for any period, although the proviso is founded clearly on the idea that an idiotic or insane child is to all intents and purposes always a minor. The consequence is that numerous private bills are introduced from year to year to pension those who are not pensionable under the provisions of that act as construed, and yet who come within the alleged intent of the framers of that act.

"There have been introduced in the present Congress and referred to this committee up to the 6th day of July, 1894, 64 such bills, and a very considerable number of them have been favorably reported where the circumstances were such as to meet certain well-defined requirements. The requirements insisted upon by the committee in reporting private bills have been incorporated in the general bill herewith reported. It is clearly desirable that relief in matters of this kind should be given by general enactment rather than by private legislation, because the facilities of the Pension Bureau to determine whether each case meets the requirements imposed are much better than those of a Congressional committee, and especially because it is impossible for Congress to take cognizance of each individual case which may be deserving.

"The new legislation involved in the bill herewith is as follows:

"First. If a soldier leave a widow and a child, who, prior to attaining the age of 16 years, had become, or shall become, insane, idiotic, or otherwise permanently helpless, the widow shall receive $2 per month on account of such child so long as he may be dependent on her, without regard to his age.

"Second. If the soldier leave no widow, or if the widow die or remarry, such helpless child as above described shall be entitled to pension without regard to his age.

"Third. If a soldier leave a widow who is not pensionable under any law because the soldier's death was not due to his service, and because she married him subsequent to June 27, 1890, any children he may leave by a former marriage may be pensioned as if he had left no widow.

"The proviso that such condition of idiocy, insanity, or permanent helplessness must have arisen prior to the beneficiary's having attained the age of 16 years is an important one. Since 1866 the law has pensioned minor children of certain soldiers, and, as already suggested, this more recent enactment proceeds on the theory that in certain cases this essential minority has never ceased. The case of a soldier's son who has attained the age of manhood in health and vigor and then by some misfortune becomes helpless is an entirely different matter, and to omit the proviso referred to would result in the anomaly of paying a pension for life to the son or daughter of a soldier when at some remote period such son or daughter may have become 'permanently helpless' by reason of old age or some other cause equally unrelated to the father's military service.

"The purposes of the bill herewith seem to be such as to deserve the support of all who desire system, uniformity, and equity in the pension laws. Several bills tending to the same end have been introduced, but the one now reported seems to be by far the most symmetrical, and to be admirably adapted, both in form and verbiage, to meet the object aimed at.

"Your committee therefore recommend that the bill do pass."

GEORGE L. DURBIN.

The bill (S. 853) granting an increase of pension to George L. Durbin was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of George L. Durbin, late a private in Company I, One hundred and thirty-fourth Regiment Indiana Infantry, and Company G, One hundred and forty-sixth Indiana Infantry, and to pay him $30 a month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report describing the disabilities of this claimant be read, commencing with the words "On the 8th of January, 1875;" so as to show what are the disabilities of the claimant.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read from the report submitted by Mr. SHOUP, from the Committee on Pensions, January 18, 1898, as follows:

On the 8th of January, 1875, the beneficiary of the bill was caught in a terrible blizzard in Wyoming and was badly frozen, which resulted in the amputation of both feet. Immediately after the passage of the act of June 27, 1890, he made application for pension, alleging loss of both feet, rheumatism, and fainting spells.

He was examined by the board of examining surgeons in Cheyenne, Wyo., April 3, 1891, who reported, in addition to the loss of both feet, "marked valvular disease of the heart," and gave him a rating of $72 per month under the general pension laws. Pension was allowed at $12 per month, the maximum rate under the act of June 27, 1890.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN, United States Senator from Wyoming, has filed a written statement in the case, in which he states as follows:

"Referring to S. 853, in favor of George L. Durbin, I beseech your committee to report it liberally and favorably at the earliest possible date, in order to relieve the wants of a very needy man.

"I know Mr. Durbin personally. Financially he is without means, and is not in physical condition to support himself."

From the foregoing statements it would appear that this man is utterly helpless and without any means of support but the pension he is now enjoying, and this is wholly insufficient to supply him with the requirements that his condition calls for.

After giving due consideration to the foregoing facts, your committee is of the opinion that the bill is a meritorious one, and recommend its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2904) for the investigation of leprosy.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to inquire of the Senator who reported the bill why the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service can not make the investigation now? Is it because he is not authorized to pay for it out of the fund?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that is correct. It is necessary to pass the bill to give him that authority.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether it would not be wiser to insert some amount to be taken from the general fund?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think it might be wise to limit it. The thought had not occurred to me before. Not to exceed what sum, would the Senator from Maryland suggest?

Mr. GORMAN. I would leave that to the Senator's judgment. It is a very large fund, and I think there ought to be some limitation of the amount.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest that $5,000 would be enough. Suppose we say "not to exceed the sum of $5,000."

Mr. COCKRELL. The limitation has always been in the discretion of the President. He apportions it.

Mr. GORMAN. This is a special examination.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is to go out of the general appropriation that exists for this general purpose, and the President always attends to the amount that shall be allotted. Still, there is no objection to a limitation.

Mr. GALLINGER. If that sum proves to be insufficient the bill can be amended in the other House. I think it is well enough to amend it in that way.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 9, after the word "investigation," it is proposed to insert "not to exceed the sum of $5,000."

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the bill may be read as proposed to be amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall appoint a commission of medical officers of the Marine-Hospital Service to investigate the origin and prevalence of leprosy in the United States, and to report upon what legislation is necessary for the prevention of the spread of this disease; the expenses of this investigation not to exceed the sum of $5,000, to be paid from the fund for preventing the spread of epidemic diseases.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FEDERAL COURTS AT BUTTE, MONT.

Mr. CLARK. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 162) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for holding terms of court in the district of Montana," approved July 20, 1892.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That hereafter, and until otherwise provided by law, regular terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the district of Montana shall be held at Butte, Mont., on the first Tuesday in February and on the first Tuesday in September in each year.

SEC. 2. That an act entitled "An act to provide for holding terms of court in the district of Montana," approved July 20, 1892, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for holding terms of the United States circuit and district courts at Butte, Mont."

REIMBURSEMENT OF MARINES FOR LOSSES BY FIRES.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2771) for the relief of certain enlisted men of the Marine Corps.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to reimburse the enlisted men of the United States Marine Corps who incurred loss of clothing by the fires which occurred at the navy-yard, Washington, D. C., on the 22d and 29th days of April, 1897.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator who reported the bill whether losses of this kind are not covered by the general law which authorizes the Department to adjust the losses?

Mr. McMILLAN. I believe not. I will say to the Senator that the bill is recommended by the Secretary, and I understand there is no law to cover the losses. For some reason the marines can not be paid. The Secretary recommends that the bill be passed. A similar bill passed once before.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is a law which authorizes the payment of losses in the Army.

Mr. McMILLAN. This measure applies to the Navy.

Mr. COCKRELL. I was under the impression that the law to which I refer had been extended to the Navy, but perhaps it has not been.

Mr. McMILLAN. It has not been.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WASHINGTON AND GLEN ECHO RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 924) to authorize the Washington and Glen Echo Railroad Company to obtain a right of way and construct tracks into the District of Columbia 600 feet.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 2. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEVI STOLTZ.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2455) for the relief of Levi Stoltz.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to consider and adjust the claim of Levi Stoltz, of Greenville, Ohio, for excess of taxes and assessments charged by the United States against him prior to January 1, 1874, on the Greenville Distillery, the whole sum allowed not to exceed $1,153.56.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OREGON AND WASHINGTON BRIDGE COMPANY.

Mr. McBRIDE. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 1905) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Oregon and Washington Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Columbia River, between the State of Oregon and the State of Washington, and to establish it as a post-road."

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WARREN HALL.

Mr. STEWART. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 663) for the relief of Warren Hall.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It confers upon the Court of Claims original jurisdiction to hear and adjudicate the case of Warren Hall, known as "Hall and Roche's Case," notwithstanding the former trial, and if it shall appear that Hall was in fact freeborn, he shall be deemed to be entitled to all such rights as he would have been entitled to if he had continued a free man, notwithstanding he may have been reduced to a state of slavery de facto wrongfully or by operation of the laws of any State.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to have a short explanation of the bill. It seems a remarkable case that a man should have been denied his rights on the ground that he was a slave, when he was freeborn.

Mr. STEWART. That is the very thing we think is wrong.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I say that it seems remarkable. How could it have happened?

Mr. STEWART. Because, although he was freeborn, he was taken and reduced to slavery. We think it unjust. The committee have examined it for two or three years past, and think the bill ought to be passed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and fifty-two minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 24, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 22, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE TALLAHATCHIE RIVER, MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5982) to amend an act entitled "An act declaring a certain bridge across the Tallahatchie River, in Tallahatchie County, State of Mississippi, a lawful structure, and for other purposes," approved May 28, 1896.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to the right of objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time fixed by section 7 of an act entitled "An act declaring a certain bridge across the Tallahatchie River, in Tallahatchie County, State of Mississippi, a lawful structure, and for other purposes," approved May 28, 1896, within which the bridge authorized by that act to be constructed across the Tallahatchie River, in the State of Mississippi, was required to be completed, be, and the same is hereby, extended until the 1st day of November, 1898; and if said bridge shall be completed by that date all of the provisions of the act aforesaid shall be and remain in full force and effect, notwithstanding the failure to complete the said bridge within the time therein fixed.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I ask the reading of the report accompanying the bill, which fully explains the legislation proposed.

The report (by Mr. FLETCHER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5982) entitled "A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act declaring a certain bridge across the Tallahatchie River, in Tallahatchie County, State of Mississippi, a lawful structure, and for other purposes,' approved May 28, 1896," beg to submit the following report:

The committee, upon investigation, have learned that the work of constructing the bridge authorized by the act which the bill proposes to amend was begun in good faith, and that the same would have been completed within the time prescribed by said act but for the unavoidable interruption caused by the floods of the Mississippi River which prevailed in the spring and summer of 1897, and the epidemic of yellow fever, with accompanying quarantine regulations, which suspended all business practically in the fall of that year.

The committee therefore recommend that the bill pass.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, and was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CATCHINGS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DREDGE BOAT, SABINE PASS, TEX.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4581) to make available $30,000 heretofore appropriated for the expense of operating a dredge boat at Sabine Pass, Tex., which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to the right of objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $30,000 appropriated by the act of June 4, 1897, for the expense of operating, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, a dredge boat to be purchased for use in the harbor improvement at Sabine Pass, Tex., shall be immediately available, and shall be applied and used to operate the dredge boat or boats now in use or to be used at Sabine Pass, Tex., and for dredging and improving said harbor.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. HOOKER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors, to whom was referred House bill 4581, submit the following report:

This bill provides for making immediately available $30,000 heretofore appropriated for the expenses of operating a dredge boat to be bought by the Government, for use at Sabine Pass, Texas. The Secretary of War has not been able, up to date, to purchase the dredge boat, and hence the $30,000 can not be used without authority of Congress.

The Chief of Engineers, as well as the engineer in immediate charge of the work at Sabine Pass, recommends the passage of this bill and says the legislation is desirable and needed. The money will be applied as contemplated by Congress in its former appropriation, except that it will be expended to operate another dredge boat instead of the boat to be bought by the Secretary of War.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of this bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is this report from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. It is reported by the committee unanimously. I have also a letter here from the Chief of Engineers, stating the necessity for the work and recommending its prosecution, which I would like to ask to have read in this connection.

The letter was read, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, January 19, 1898.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of January 18, 1898, inclosing House bill 4581, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, which has been favorably reported upon by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and upon which my opinion is requested.

The sundry civil act approved June 4, 1897, appropriated $100,000 for the construction of a dredge boat for use at Sabine Pass, and $30,000 for operating the same during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898.

A suitable dredge for this work can not be found, and one must be built, and arrangements for having it so constructed under contract are being pushed forward as rapidly as possible, but at best some time must yet elapse before such dredge will be available. Until this dredge is ready for use, dependence for such dredging as is required at Sabine Pass must be placed on private dredges; but there are now no funds available for such work, the $30,000 being applicable only to operating the dredge which is to be built.

I think it most desirable that such legislation as you have proposed in H. R. 4581, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, should have favorable consideration by Congress, and should the bill be referred to this office for remark, such favorable opinion would be expressed by me.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN M. WILSON,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

Hon. S. B. COOPER,
United States House of Representatives.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question before consent is given for the consideration of this bill.

This appropriation in the river and harbor bill seems to have been for the operation of a dredge boat, to be purchased for $100,000, for this fiscal year. Now, as I gather from the reading of the report, it seems to me that they have been unable to purchase a dredge boat, and yet nearly seven months of the fiscal year have already passed by. For the remainder of the fiscal year, therefore, I can not see how $30,000 would be required, and I suggest to the gentleman that if they be required to hire a boat for this purpose, the amount should be less than $15,000 for the remainder of the year on the basis of the original calculation.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. The former proposition, I will state to the gentleman, was for a dredge boat to be owned and controlled by the Government. Now they have to hire one belonging to private individuals. The Chief of Engineers and the engineer in charge of this work appeared before the committee in connection with this matter and reported that they find such an amount necessary.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. MAGUIRE. My understanding is that this is not an appropriation of money, but to make a former appropriation available for this purpose.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. That is the effect of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Still that does not answer my question. The gentleman did not conclude his answer. Thirty thousand dollars was enough to operate a dredge boat for a whole year, as we were informed. It is contemplated that the Government is to pay that sum for the operation of a boat during the entire year. Now, it has not been used during that time, and seven months have passed away of the year, and yet it is proposed here to give the whole $30,000 for five months' service, instead of during that entire fiscal year. My point is this, that the amount should be reduced under such a condition to about $15,000.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. The gentleman from Illinois will understand that if this money is not used, if it is not necessary, it will be covered back into the Treasury.

Mr. CANNON. And so that argument would justify double the amount of current appropriations. Yet, I want to say it kindly, we have got to have some little regard to the aggregate of the appropriations, and not appropriate money unless it is necessary. Now, in my judgement, $15,000 would more than cover the operation of a dredge boat for the remaining five months, and I will suggest to the gentleman that he make $15,000 available.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I will say to the gentleman, in order to get this bill passed and the appropriation immediately available, I will accept an amendment of, say, $20,000.

Mr. CANNON. Well, $15,000 is quite enough, and because that is more than enough for a half year, and it will be some time before they can commence work, I suggest to the gentleman that he make it $15,000. I believe that to be ample.

Mr. RIDGELY. Before the gentleman from Texas makes this concession, I wish to say to the gentleman from Illinois that the $30,000 was intended to operate a boat owned by the Government.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely.

Mr. RIDGELY. Now, we have got to pay for the use of the boat, which necessarily makes the expenses a great deal more than $30,000, in order to get the same amount done.

Mr. CANNON. I do not think so at all. I think private enterprise will hire a dredge boat for less money than the Government can run one of its own, when you resort to contract. That is the experience.

Mr. RIDGELY. Then why buy the boat?

Mr. CANNON. That is the experience of the Engineer Department.

Mr. RIDGELY. We certainly shall have to pay the owner of the boat something for the use of his boat.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely, and that $15,000 is more than enough to do it for the four months remaining.

Mr. RIDGELY. Then we certainly made a mistake in buying a new boat.

Mr. CANNON. I think $15,000 is enough. I want to have enough appropriated, but why more than enough?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I am held up, and therefore I will have to consent. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman amends his bill by substituting $15,000 for $30,000. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill as amended?

There was no objection.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The title ought to be amended to conform to the change in the bill.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I move to amend the title by inserting $15,000 instead of $30,000.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended as indicated.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. COOPER of Texas, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXECUTION OF COLONEL RUIZ.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] rises to a privileged motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred House resolution 163, as follows—

"Resolved, That the Secretary of State be directed, if in his opinion compatible with the public interest, to send to the House the reports made to the Department by Consul-General Lee, and any other report made to the Department by consuls or commercial agents of the United States, on the subject of the execution of Colonel Ruiz by the Cuban military authorities"— report the same back and recommend its adoption.

Mr. HITT. I move the adoption of the resolution. It is unanimously reported.

The resolution was agreed to.

HAWAIIAN TREATY.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present another privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois presents another privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred House resolution 162, as follows—

"Resolved, That the President is requested, if in his opinion it is not incompatible with the public interest, to transmit to the House, at his earliest convenience, the draft of treaty of annexation negotiated and executed by and between the United States Government and the Government of Hawaii; also, to transmit therewith information stating upon what constitutional authority the President has contracted to pay out of the Treasury of the United States $4,000,000 to the creditors of Hawaii without submitting the same for consideration and legislative action of Congress previous to such negotiation"— report the same back and recommend that it lie upon the table.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, the document called for is a public document, already printed, and I hold it in my hand. The committee thought it unnecessary to print it again. I move to lay the resolution on the table, and on that I move the previous question.

Mr. BAILEY. Is it intended to have no debate?

Mr. HITT. It is by the assent of the whole committee. I do not see the necessity for any debate. I move the previous question. I have the document in my hand.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to inquire if the recommendation that this resolution lie upon the table was concurred in by the whole committee?

Mr. HITT. There was no dissent. The document is already printed. There is no occasion to print it again.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the House has a right to know why the Government undertakes to pay the public money in the manner indicated.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HITT. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 94, noes 99.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to——

Several MEMBERS (on the Republican side). Tellers.

Mr. BAILEY. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that under the practice of the House the control of the question——

Mr. HITT. The question of order that I submit is, the previous question was not strictly necessary after a motion to lay on the table at this stage, and therefore not debatable. I call for the question upon the motion that was pending.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I have been unable to hear anything distinctly that the gentleman has said.

The SPEAKER. That is a difficulty the Chair has been laboring under. The Chair has not been able to hear some portion of what was said.

Mr. HITT. I say that the motion I made—to lay the resolution on the table—was not debatable, and after it had been made a motion for the previous question was an unnecessary motion, and has no effect now. Therefore the question is upon the motion to lay upon the table.

Mr. BAILEY. That is not the first useless thing that I have known the gentleman to do lately—making unnecessary motions. [Laughter.] But, Mr. Speaker, that motion, whether necessary or not, being voted down, the control has been passed to the other side.

The SPEAKER. Tellers have been demanded.

Mr. BAILEY. The gentleman from Illinois did not demand tellers.

Mr. DALZELL. A half a dozen others demanded tellers.

The question was taken; and tellers were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] will please take their places as tellers.

The House proceeded to divide.

Mr. HANDY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not answer now.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 130, noes 116.

So the previous question was ordered.

Mr. HITT. The question comes now on laying the resolution on the table. That is the recommendation of the committee.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Chair will put it that way. The question is on laying the resolution on the table.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HITT. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 116, noes 108.

Mr. BAILEY. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] will take their places as tellers.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. DINSMORE. I rise for the purpose of asking unanimous consent of the House to make a brief statement of a minute with reference to this matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DINGLEY. Regular order.

Mr. DINSMORE. Then I shall vote against the committee.

Mr. HITT. I hope the gentleman from Maine will withdraw his objection. He is not, perhaps, aware that the gentleman from Arkansas represents the minority, and we are unanimous. This is a mere proposed reprint of a treaty.

Mr. DINGLEY. I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection?

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Speaker, this is what I wish to say.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DINSMORE. The resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and the principal purpose seeming to be to obtain from the executive department a copy or draft of a treaty which had been made between the United States and Hawaii, and incidentally calling upon the President for the authority which has been spoken of, the constitutional authority, to undertake for the people of the United States a debt of the Hawaiian Government—the principal purpose, as it appeared to the committee, being to obtain a draft of the treaty, and that having been published as a public document and being accessible to members, we thought the attention of the gentleman from Washington probably had not been called to that publication, and unanimously agreed that the resolution should be reported with the recommendation that it be laid on the table. There was no objection to the motion in committee. That is all I have to say in reference to it.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, so far as this printing of the treaty is concerned, we are not inclined to have any objection? We could readily consent to that, for the information is before the House; but we are not willing to lay upon the table a resolution which demands of the President his authority for contracting to pay $4,000,000 of the public money; and I insist on the vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen will take their places as tellers.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 124, noes 105.

So the resolution was ordered to lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. HITT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was ordered to lie on the table was laid on the table.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas will allow the Chair to recognize a gentleman on the other side.

Mr. BAILEY. I have no desire to interrupt requests for unanimous consent.

AMENDING SECTION 2139 OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 6085.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6085) amending section 2139 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the date hereof section 2139 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the act of July 23, 1892 (27 Stat. L., 260), shall not be applicable to any Indian reservation within the limits of the State of New York or to any Indian under the charge of any Indian superintendent or agent within the limits of said State.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. HULL. Reserving the right to object, I would like to know what this is. That seems to be a broad provision.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Read the report. That will state it.

Mr. HULL. Can not the gentleman explain it?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The report is very brief and will explain it.

The report (by Mr. FISCHER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6085) amending section 2139 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, submit the following report:

Section 2139 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the act of July 23, 1892, is as follows:

"SEC. 2139. No ardent spirits, ale, beer, wine, or intoxicating liquor or liquors of whatever kind shall be introduced, under any pretense, into the Indian country. Every person who sells, exchanges, gives, barters, or disposes of any ardent spirits, ale, beer, wine, or intoxicating liquors of any kind to any Indian under charge of any Indian superintendent or agent, or introduces or attempts to introduce any ardent spirits, ale, wine, beer, or intoxicating liquor of any kind into the Indian country shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than two years, and by fine of not more than $300 for each offense. But it shall be a sufficient defense to any charge of introducing or attempting to introduce ardent spirits, ale, beer, wine, or intoxicating liquors into the Indian country that the acts charged were done under authority in writing from the War Department or any officer duly authorized thereunto by the War Department. All complaints for the arrest of any person or persons made for the violation of any of the provisions of this act shall be made in the county where the offense shall have been committed, or if committed upon or within any reservation not included in any county, then in any county adjoining such reservation, and if in the Indian Territory, before the United States court commissioner or commissioner of the circuit court of the United States residing nearest the place where the offense was committed, who is not for any reason disqualified; but in all cases such arrests shall be made before any United States court commissioner residing in such adjoining county, or before any magistrate or judicial officer authorized by the laws of the State in which such reservation is located to issue warrants for the arrest and examination of offenders by section 1014 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. And all persons so arrested shall, unless discharged upon examination, be held to answer and stand trial before the court of the United States having jurisdiction of the offense.

"Approved July 23, 1892."

There are six Indian reservations in the State of New York, as follows: Allegany, in Cattaraugus County; Cattaraugus, in Cattaraugus, Chautauqua, and Erie counties; Onondaga, in Onondaga County; St. Regis, in Franklin County; Tonawanda, in Erie, Genesee, and Niagara counties, and Tuscarora, in Niagara County.

It is the purpose of this bill simply to allow the violators of section 2139 of the Revised Statutes of the United States to be prosecuted and punished by the courts of the State of New York in accordance with existing laws in that State, which are sufficient.

Section 20 of the so-called "Raines law" (Laws of New York, 1896, page 72) provides that no person "shall sell or give away any liquors to any Indian." Paragraph 33 of section 56 of the Code of Criminal Procedure provides that such sale or gift is a misdemeanor and punishable "by imprisonment in a penitentiary or county jail for not more than one year or by a fine of not more than $500, or by both."

It is the practice in the northern district of New York, in which are located these six reservations, for a class of low people to give Indians liquor for the purpose of securing for themselves comfortable places in jail during the winter months, and of furnishing large fees and mileage to a few Indians who are needed for witnesses by the Government. Terms of the United States court are held at Auburn in November, Albany in January, and Utica in March. These cities are from 150 to 300 miles from the Allegany and Cattaraugus reservations, and in order to prosecute these trivial cases, most of which are made up for the reason indicated, it is necessary to transport such Indian witnesses to these cities. Hon. A. C. Coxe, judge of the United States district court, is authority for the statement that if this incubus can be gotten out of the way, it will save the United States $20,000 annually and relieve the United States court of an almost intolerable nuisance, which can not be eradicated so long as such cases must be prosecuted under section 2139 of the Revised Statutes of the United States instead of under the laws of the State of New York, which are ample.

There is no reason known to the committee why such cases should not be prosecuted under the laws of the State.

Your committee therefore report the bill back to the House with a recommendation for its passage.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not know but what this bill is all right. I should like to have an opportunity to examine it. As this bill will come up regularly under the call of committees, I would ask the gentleman to let it lie over, and thus give gentlemen a chance to examine it. Does it exempt the Indians of New York?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It simply exempts the Indians in New York.

Mr. DINGLEY. What the effect of that might be I do not know.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the gentleman will permit me, I will state that the bill is intended to remedy this state of affairs: At the present time deputy United States marshals, for violation of the liquor laws, may lug Indians from the Seneca Reservation, in Cattaraugus County, down to the city of Auburn, the residence of my friend Mr. PAYNE, when the courts are held there, or down to the city of Albany when the courts are sitting there, for disposition in United States courts, and the result has been that anywhere from $10,000 to $20,000 in fees have been collected year by year by these deputy marshals for taking care of these cases. If the section of the Revised Statutes should be repealed, those cases can be taken care of by the local police court. This is a saving of that amount.

Mr. DINGLEY. Does the law of New York prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors to Indians on reservations in the State of New York?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. DINGLEY. It will not have the effect of opening up the traffic in intoxicating liquors with the Indians?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no; it will simply save to the United States the needless expenditure in fees for these deputy marshals.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is the bill unanimously reported by the committee?

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill is reported unanimously.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. ALEXANDER] a question. There has been a good deal of confusion here and I could not catch what he said was the import of this measure. If I understand it, this is a proposition to suspend the laws of the United States upon the reservations and put them under the laws of the State of New York, which I suppose would open the liquor traffic. In connection with this, it occurs to me that the laws of the United States are better enforced than the State laws, because the United States marshal looks after the matter. Perhaps the purpose of the change of law is to open up the liquor traffic in the reservation.

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; this is simply to break up the practice that has been in existence a good many years, where a few low people give a pint of whisky to an Indian, then cause themselves to be arrested, a half dozen witnesses who are cognizant of the fact to be subpœnaed 300 miles, get their mileage and per diem pay, and then divide it up among themselves, thus taking out of the Treasury Department at least, as Judge Cox says, who has been on the bench fifteen years, $20,000 annually. This measure is for the purpose of breaking up that state of things and bringing it under the laws of the State of New York, which are more severe than the United States law. Under the State law it is a misdemeanor to give or sell liquors to an Indian anywhere within the State, whether on the reservation or not, and it is punished by a fine of $500 or imprisonment for a year or both.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Does this bill apply only to the State of New York?

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is all.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. All right, if the gentleman says that is the object of the bill, I have no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman from New York allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If there were a commissioner who should be paid a salary instead of fees and given final jurisdiction of these cases, it would not be necessary to have this legislation, would it?

Mr. ALEXANDER. We could not get it through as long as the marshal was paid by fees, because he had to have his fees to make up his compensation. Now the marshal is paid by a salary and there is no objection to it.

Mr. RIDGELY. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York one question. Is the minimum penalty for the sale of liquor to an Indian $500?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It is a misdemeanor, punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or imprisonment in the penitentiary not exceeding one year or both.

Mr. RIDGELY. Is the State law enforced in New York as rigidly as the United States statutes against selling liquor to Indians?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It is more rigid than the United States law. If the Indian comes down into the city of Auburn, for instance, and is given a glass of liquor or sold a glass of liquor, that party selling or giving it to him is immediately prosecuted.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman does not mean to say that all the violations of the liquor law are in the city of Auburn?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; but crowds of witnesses are brought there at every session of the United States court.

Mr. RIDGELY. Well, I think the Representative from that district ought to know about this, and I make no objection.

Mr. HANDY. Will the gentleman from New York permit an inquiry?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Certainly.

Mr. HANDY. I wish to make a preliminary inquiry. This is a request for unanimous consent, and I would like to ask the gentleman from New York, in case this bill passes, if the State laws of New York have jurisdiction of this matter on an Indian reservation?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Certainly.

Mr. HANDY. In case we pass this bill and the laws of the State of New York should be changed on the liquor question, then the only law governing the reservations would be the law of the State of New York?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I presume so; yes.

Mr. HANDY. And Congress would have given up its control over the reservation?

Mr. ALEXANDER. In a case of that kind you could quickly get control again by repealing this law. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ALEXANDER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DAM ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 4934, permitting the building of a dam between Coon Rapids and the north limits of the city of Minneapolis, Minn., across the Mississippi River.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I reserve the right to object, but I would like to hear some explanation of the matter.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not know as there is any need of explanation. It is a local bill, all within my own district; has been favorably reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce; has the indorsement of the Secretary of War, as the report will show, and I ask that the report of the Secretary may be read.

Mr. BARTLETT. I did not catch the reading of the bill. It provides for a dam across the Mississippi River, and gives privileges to a certain corporation, in the bill, to use it, does it not?

Mr. FLETCHER. What do they want to build a dam for, if they do not want to use it?

Mr. BARTLETT. As the gentleman is so curt about his answer, I think I will object. [Cries of "Oh, no!" "Oh, no!"] Yes; I will object.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, on last Thursday I submitted a motion to recommit the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill to the Committee on Foreign Relations with instructions to report it back with an amendment embodying the resolution of the Senate recognizing the fact that a state of war exists in the Island of Cuba.

Against my motion the gentleman from Illinois made a point of order. I protested that the point of order ought not to be made, and asserted that there had been an agreement to take a vote upon the direct proposition to recommit the bill with instructions.

The gentleman from Illinois controverted my statement, and the matter was left in that condition. I would not now revive it for the purpose of going outside of the record to confirm my own statement or to contradict his. I realize that at best such controversies do no good, and generally leave the partisans on each side to assert that their friend was right and his opponent was wrong. When they are carried to the further extreme of personal demands it does not improve the matter. But on examination of the record itself of the preceding day, I find a statement so distinct and so explicit that I feel it due to myself that I should call it to the attention of the House and of the country. On Wednesday, after the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule had been concluded, it was attempted to reach an agreement for limiting general debate. After some interchange of opinions I find this colloquy in the RECORD:

Mr. DINSMORE. I call attention of the gentleman from New York to the fact that that would not give sufficient time.

Mr. QUIGG. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is undoubtedly going to propose some sort of motion of which he has already given indication from time to time, which indicates that more or less time will be consumed in roll calls; and if at 4 o'clock we shall not get through with the discussion, we will be required to consider this matter until 6, 7, or possibly later.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The only motion I know of, Mr. Chairman, which will come up and involve a roll call will be a motion to recommit with instructions.

Mr. HITT. Is that the only vote that will be presented for a yea-and-nay vote?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That is all, as far as I am aware.

Mr. HITT. Then I will accept the time proposed by the gentleman from Arkansas, and say that the general debate shall close at 4 o'clock, and the vote be then taken.

Mr. DINSMORE. And in the meantime that nothing will be in order but the debate on this bill, which shall begin to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Immediately after the reading of the Journal?

Mr. HITT. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time between now and 4 o'clock to-morrow shall be used in general debate on this bill, the debate to be then closed, and the time to be equally divided between the two sides.

Mr. QUIGG. And that then the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That agreement does not cut off any right to move a reconsideration or recommitment of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. None whatever.

Mr. SWANSON. One moment, Mr. Chairman. What is the proposition?

The CHAIRMAN. That general debate on the bill shall be closed at 4 o'clock to-morrow, at which time the committee shall rise and report the bill.

Mr. SWANSON. How is the time divided?

The CHAIRMAN. Equally between the two sides.

Mr. HITT. And it is understood, Mr. Chairman, that at 4 o'clock to-morrow there will be but one yea-and-nay vote, that on a motion to recommit.

That was precisely my statement—that we were to have a yea-and-nay vote upon the motion to recommit.

I have no desire to insinuate, because it is not my habit to insinuate, the charge of falsehood or unfair dealing against any man, but there has either been a misunderstanding or there has been a misstatement.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. HENDERSON. As a lawyer, familiar with the rules, what would be the gentleman's construction of that statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT]? Would it not be that the motion referred to was a motion to commit not subject to a point of order, but in order?

Mr. BAILEY. Why, Mr. Speaker, I am very free to say that I understood both then and prior to that time that the Republican party was ready to take its stand with the President, who has said in his message that this resolution ought not to be adopted.

Mr. HENDERSON. No; but my friend——

Mr. BAILEY. I am going to answer the question——

Mr. HENDERSON. You have not answered it.

Mr. BAILEY. But I must be permitted to answer in my own way. I understood that the Republican party was ready to take its position with the gentleman from Illinois, who himself declared in the course of his speech that this matter ought to be left for the President to settle. If the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs was correct in assuming his position—if the President of the United States elected by the Republican party was correct in declaring that this resolution ought not to pass—then I believed that the Republican party had nerved itself to the point of taking a direct vote upon the proposition and to vote the resolution down. That was my construction of the matter, because your President and the chairman of your committee had said it ought to be voted down.

Mr. HENDERSON rose.

Mr. BAILEY. Let me finish my statement. You have asked me my construction——

Mr. HENDERSON. You have not answered my question.

Mr. BAILEY. My construction was that the Republican party had determined to face the direct question and thus get rid of it for the entire session, because if you did face it and vote down the resolution, that was an end of the controversy.

Mr. DALZELL. Does the gentleman make any distinction between a motion to recommit and a motion to recommit with instructions?

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, Mr. Speaker, that is a mere quibble over a technicality.

Mr. DALZELL. Oh, I think not. A motion to recommit would not be subject to a point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If the gentleman from Texas will permit me, I wish to say that there was no doubt at all in the mind of the gentleman from New York [Mr. QUIGG] or the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] or myself on this point; and the colloquy as read leaves no doubt that the motion contemplated was a motion to recommit with instructions. That was the language I used.

Mr. DALZELL and Mr. HENDERSON rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is occupying the floor on a personal explanation.

Mr. BAILEY. And I am entirely willing to be interrupted.

Mr. HENDERSON. But the gentleman has not answered my question.

Mr. BAILEY. I am going to do so.

Mr. HENDERSON. I want you to answer, not from your philosophy of the situation, not from any political purpose or theory that you may have upon that statement in the RECORD or any statement founded on those proceedings in the RECORD (because I have read the proceedings all through, before and after what the gentleman has read)—I want him to state here as a member of the House and as a member of the Committee on Rules, does that statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT], which he has just finished reading, imply anything else than a presumption that the motion referred to would be a motion made under the rules and not subject to a point of order?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly; because we did not need any agreement for that. I had the right under the rules of the House to submit such a motion as that. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HENDERSON. It was because of that right that the agreement seems to have been reached as to the matter of time——

Mr. BAILEY. We did not need any agreement for that.

Mr. HENDERSON. And that there was to be no other dilatory motion. The gentleman has answered my question; and I only want to add that no understanding on the part of the gentleman from Texas or anyone else could have cut out the right of myself or any member of the House to make any point of order upon any instructions which might not be proper under the rules of the House.

Mr. BAILEY. And it did not cut you off. Enough Republicans had professed a willingness before the country to vote for the adoption of that resolution; and it was to relieve these Republican members from embarrassment if they voted against the resolution, or to save the Republican party from defeat if they voted for it, that the agreement was violated. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HENDERSON. Allow me one word right there.

Mr. BAILEY. Let me finish my statement.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is absurd to suppose that we have to stand here and contract for our rights under the rules. There was no way to deny us the right under the rules to move to recommit that bill with instructions, subject to points of order.

Mr. LACEY. Was not the contract made for the benefit of gentlemen on the other side who wanted to go to a funeral; and did you not simply waive these other motions until the final stage, with the understanding that you were then to make such a motion in regard to commitment as would be in order under the rules?

Mr. BAILEY. Then you admit that there was a contract?

Mr. LACEY. No; the only contract was a contract made in order to enable myself and other members (and I availed myself of it) to go away that afternoon—that gentlemen might not be required to stay here to vote, but might go away to attend the funeral of Mr. Butterworth. You did not ask that at the end of that time there should be any waiver of the rules of the House or that the point should be withdrawn which had been contested for a day.

Mr. BAILEY. The gentleman from Iowa perfectly understands that any motion consistent with the Constitution can be entertained if no point of order is made against it.

And although it has been held repeatedly, both by Democratic and Republican Speakers—by the present occupant of the chair and his illustrious predecessors—that a motion to recommit with certain instructions is not in order unless the proposed instructions would be in order if offered as an amendment to the bill, that matter was perfectly understood. I perfectly understood it myself. But if both sides of the House agree that a motion to recommit with instructions might be made, it being plainly in the mind of both sides what the instructions would be, such a proposition, so assented to, is tantamount to an agreement that the point of order would be waived. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman allow the Chair to say that no agreement of that sort could have been made without the consent of the House—no agreement providing that its rules should be waived in any case?

Mr. BAILEY. If, Mr. Speaker, the question is made to turn on that point, I am willing to rest it, for I rose to-day simply to establish that there was an agreement made to vote on the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The question had never been submitted to the House, as a matter of fact.

Mr. BAILEY. It was stated here on the floor of the House, and there was no objection. It has been held, I presume, a hundred times that when an understanding is made in the presence of the House, and no objection is offered, it is tantamount to an agreement. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The chairman of the committee himself states it in the course of the running colloquy which I have read.

The SPEAKER. Well, the matter speaks for itself.

Mr. HITT. Will the gentleman from Texas allow an interruption?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas has the floor.

Mr. HITT. I will not interrupt the gentleman at present, but will ask to be heard hereafter.

Mr. BAILEY. The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, in accordance with the agreement which was known on both sides of the House and of which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] testifies that he took advantage by going to the funeral of the late Commissioner of Patents, promised that we would have a yea-and-nay vote on the motion to recommit. Now, I ask if we have had such a vote? If not—although we sought to obtain it—the agreement has been violated, and with that statement I leave the matter with the fair-minded men on this floor and people of this country. [Prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HITT. At the time of the discussion from which the gentleman has quoted, that appears in the RECORD as having taken place, there was an agreement or understanding made on the floor—made upon my repeated request—to fix a time for the conclusion of the consideration of the appropriation bill and closing general debate. If anyone reads the whole colloquy he will find that the point, the object and sole object of it, from first to last, on my part, was to secure a definite time for closing the general debate, the bill having been considered by paragraphs, and bring it to a vote before the House.

I proposed 1 o'clock; I proposed 2 o'clock, and 3 o'clock, and finally 4 o'clock. It was on the point of being assented to when the gentleman from New York [Mr. QUIGG] demurred, saying that there might be so many yeas and nays afterwards as to keep the House very late in session. Another gentleman said that there would be but one roll call, on a motion to recommit. But the question of yeas and nays to be taken was not the essential thing discussed or aimed at in the agreement sought, which was to fix an hour for closing general debate. As all know, any member was entitled to call for the yeas and nays upon at least three steps or three stages in the final progress of the bill to its passage.

When the discussion as to limiting the time had reached a point where we agreed on 4 o'clock, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] notified the House that he should move at the proper stage to recommit and ask for the yeas and nays on it. That was all there was of it.

I knew that he had the right, under the rules, to make that motion and call for the yeas and nays upon it, as also upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill, and upon the final passage of the bill. But if he moved to recommit with instructions it must be with instructions that were in order under the rules.

All of these roll calls could have been had, on demand by a sufficient number of members, under the rules, without the least departure from the understanding which was had. The only understanding was as to the time for closing the general debate, which debate, as gentlemen will remember, came after the bill had been considered by paragraphs. I then stated, and the agreement was, that we would close the debate at 4 o'clock—that that was to be the understanding—and afterwards the gentleman would have the right to have a vote by yeas and nays on recommittal.

But that motion to recommit was necessarily understood to be a legitimate and proper motion, and, if accompanied with instructions, they must be instructions which would have been in order in accordance with the rules of the House. No intimation was given of the instructions that would be proposed or what would be done beyond a motion to recommit, which is always in order at that stage of a bill, and the yeas and nays of course could be had on it. No gentleman on this side of the House knew at the time this agreement was made the tenor of the instructions which would be proposed to be given to the committee, and there was no thought on my part of agreeing to any instruction to be offered or agreeing to their consideration, for I did not know what they were to be. Even up to the time when we approached the final vote on the bill, no member had indicated what would be the tenor of any instructions he might offer with the motion to recommit.

It was competent for any member to raise a point of order on instructions proposed which were not in accordance with the rules of the House and not in order. Instructions in a motion to recommit must be strictly in accordance with the rules of the House, or the member in charge of a great appropriation bill must see that they are not grafted on the bill. He would be derelict in his duty if he did not undertake, by making the point of order at the proper time, to protect his bill at every stage from incorporation into it of provisions out of order or which have no relation to it.

It is an axiom in the code of the duty of a member in charge of a bill. It is the first step. It is the duty of the chairman to protect and care for his bill.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman allow me right there?

Mr. HITT. A motion to recommit with instructions for any wild or strange purpose could have been made, and if the understanding that the gentleman from Texas professes to have accepted had been correct, I would have been bound (and everybody else would have been bound) to not avail myself of the right that every member has, to exclude it on a point of order and see that the rules were carried out in legislation.

It was my duty to do it; if a motion to recommit had been made which was in order, I would have made no objection. If a motion to recommit with instructions which were in order had been offered, I could not have successfully objected to it, but when it was palpably in violation of the rules of the House, it was my duty, and was no departure from the statement I made on the floor and no departure from the agreement as to the hour of terminating debate, for me to protect the bill by making the point of order that the motion to recommit with such instructions violated the rules of the House. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman allow me right there?

Mr. HITT. Certainly.

Mr. BLAND. If the rules provided for motions for recommitting, under the gentleman's statement, the necessity for an agreement did not exist.

Mr. HITT. The agreement was only as to the time of closing general debate. That was the essence of all the discussion. No other point was being settled, nor were we thinking of the point now pretended to have been included. The record of the long colloquy shows that clearly.

Mr. BLAND. But the right to move to recommit requires no agreement, unless there is something else.

Mr. HITT. That was not discussed in the colloquy, which runs through two columns. The question was as to fixing time for closing general debate.

Mr. BLAND. But in order to be an agreement it must be extraordinary to the rules.

Mr. HITT. The fixing of that time was extraordinary to the rules—not provided for by them—and we provided it by the agreement. We also got rid of several other time-consuming votes by that assent, though you could have called for the yeas and nays on the third reading and engrossment as well as on the final passage without violating the agreement in spirit, for it was only as to the time of closing debate.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask, so that we may know for use hereafter, so that we may thoroughly understand it, whether a dialogue between any two members of the House, which seems to have been settled between them by an agreement, is binding on the House unless submitted by the Chair to the House and ratified by the House and appearing upon the record?

The SPEAKER. There are two difficulties about it—even if there was an arrangement, which does not seem to have taken place—if there was one, the Committee of the Whole has no right to waive the rules of the House, nor has anybody the right to waive the rules of the House except the House itself. Such an agreement as that would have to be submitted to the House at any time in order to be effectual.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. But this conversation and understanding between the two gentlemen was made while the House was in Committee of the Whole and was not even ratified by the committee.

The SPEAKER. Not even ratified by the committee.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. And not submitted to the House for ratification.

The SPEAKER. And not submitted to the House, which alone has the right to waive its rules. It would have taken the unanimous consent of the House, and the House never passed upon it in any way.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. HOPKINS. Let us have the regular order.

Mr. STEELE. On Thursday last I addressed an interrogatory to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], with his consent, and he answered it to my satisfaction and, I presume, to his satisfaction, yet the reporters or somebody else failed to put either the question or the answer in the RECORD. The reporters have generally been very careful, and I wondered how it occurred. I should like the Chair to inform me if he has any knowledge on the subject.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me ask what is the gentleman from Indiana talking about?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman rises to a question of personal privilege. He has stated what he is talking about.

Mr. STEELE. I addressed a question to the gentleman the other day, with his permission, and his answer was entirely satisfactory, but neither the question nor the answer appeared in the RECORD.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman permit me to tell him how that occurred?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The reporters are not to blame. Right at the end of my speech on Cuba, the last sentence in it, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] injected a question that had nothing on the face of the earth to do with the Cuban question. I stopped and answered it. It was about the armor-plate business. That alone is subject enough for a man to speak on for a week.

Mr. STEELE. The gentleman was going to war, and I wanted him to have ships.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Of course I like the gentleman from Indiana; otherwise I would not have taken any liberty with his question; but I say now and I thought then that his question had nothing to do with my speech. I stopped and answered it rather vigorously. Then I repeated the part of the sentence that I had uttered and finished it. In the meantime, however, as there are tricks in all trades except ours, and secrets in everything, I had given a copy of that speech to the reporters before I began. [Laughter.] After I had finished, one of the reporters of the House asked me if I wanted them to bring me the notes of that colloquy between the gentleman and myself.

Mr. GAINES. I have the notes here now. Will the gentleman put it all in?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I said to the reporter that I did not want the notes; that the question of the gentleman from Indiana was entirely irrelevant, and that I did not want the unity of my speech marred by putting that question in. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. So you ruled it out?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. So I cut it out. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. That is all right.

Mr. STEELE. The gentleman did not state anything to me about it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. In other words, I ruled it out of order. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests that when members interrupt a speaker against his will, it has been usually considered that he had entire right to expunge the question: but where he answered it, then if he leaves it out, he ought to leave it out with the consent of the other member. That seems to be the fairest way.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I suppose that is so.

Mr. STEELE. I accept its being left out now.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But if the Chair will permit me——

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Allow an interruption a moment.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering appropriation bills; and pending that motion, I desire to make some arrangement, if I can, with reference to closing general debate. I prefer to obtain it by unanimous agreement; but if not, I desire to make a motion as to the time when general debate shall close. I should like to ask my colleague, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE], what his wishes are with reference to the time for closing general debate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, I should like to know if all points of order have been reserved on this bill?

The SPEAKER. They have.

Mr. LITTLE. All points of order have been reserved.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will two hours be sufficient?

Mr. LITTLE. I desire to say to the gentleman from New York that I think there is no disposition on this side to unusually prolong the debate. I think we should proceed with the debate, so as to form some idea as to the wish of the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would like very much if my colleague would agree upon some time, or suggest some time that will be satisfactory.

Mr. LITTLE. I think the request of my friend is a little unusual. It is hardly in order to ask that until we have had some debate.

Mr. SHERMAN. It may be unusual, but a great time saver.

Mr. LITTLE. I know of no urgent necessity in regard to time particularly. A number of gentlemen on this side want to address the House on the state of the Union, and I do not see why there should not be some opportunity for them to do so. I want to be heard a short time myself on the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I want to suggest to the gentleman whether or not three hours would be satisfactory, he and I each to control one-half of the time?

Mr. LITTLE. Three hours!

Mr. SHERMAN. An hour and a half on each side.

Mr. LITTLE. I do not like to make any agreement at this time. I think before that time is passed we can make some arrangement.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me make this modification. I suggest that general debate be closed at 5 o'clock to-day; that one half of the time be controlled by the gentleman from Arkansas and the other half by myself.

Mr. LITTLE. I can not consent to limitation of debate at this time.

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, then, Mr. Speaker, I must move that general debate on the pending bill be closed at 5 o'clock to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill; and pending that, moves that all general debate be closed at 5 o'clock.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SHERMAN. On that I demand the previous question.

Mr. LITTLE (continuing). I move to amend the motion made by the gentleman that general debate close——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman calls for the previous question.

Mr. LITTLE. I had the ear of the Chair, and was going to state an amendment to the gentleman's motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is the custom of the House to recognize the gentleman in control of the bill if he desires to make such a motion.

Mr. LITTLE. When another member is on the floor?

The SPEAKER. The House can make disposition of it by voting down the previous question if it sees fit. The question is on ordering the previous question.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would like to hear the gentleman suggest his amendment.

Mr. LITTLE. I was going to offer an amendment to close general debate at 5 o'clock on Monday. [Cries of "Oh, no!" on the Republican side.]

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask if there has been any general debate on this bill?

The SPEAKER. There has not.

Mr. DOCKERY. I make the point of order that the gentleman's motion is not in order until general debate has been had in committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is right, if he had made the point at the proper time.

Mr. DOCKERY. I have just heard what the motion is. There has been so much confusion in the committee that I did not understand what the proposition was.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had moved the previous question, and the Chair had to put that question.

Mr. DOCKERY. Perhaps it is my fault about the matter, but clearly it is out of order under the rule.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. LITTLE. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 98, noes 102.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York, Mr. SHERMAN, and the gentleman from Arkansas, Mr. LITTLE, will please take their places as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 114, noes 105.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on closing general debate at 5 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. HEPBURN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. 6896) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I assume that the gentleman from Arkansas will control one half of the time and I will control the other half.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that will be the order.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, as the details of the ordinary appropriation bill are rather uninteresting, and as I have no mind to roast the Civil Service Commission, or to picture the horrors now existing in Cuba, or to elucidate any pet scheme in reference to the currency, I shall take the attention of the committee for a very brief period. The bill for this year, Mr. Chairman, carries appropriations aggregating, in round numbers, $100,000 more than last year. More than this entire amount is accounted for in the increase made necessary by reason of additional treaty stipulations.

While the bill as reported carries larger appropriations than the estimates submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury, it is perhaps proper to state that supplementary estimates have been submitted covering all but two or three items in the bill, and that these items, few in number, have been put in the bill upon the motion of Representatives from the locality affected, where they represented to the committee that such an item was beneficial for the service and for the Indian. The report, which gentlemen can investigate for all the details, is report No. 189; it gives in detail every addition and every subtraction from the bill of a year ago. It also shows that we have added to the bill several matters purely of a legislative character, which I assume possibly would be stricken out if anyone chose to raise a point of order in reference to them; but they were deemed essential on examination of the subject by the committee and have therefore been put in this bill without exception, or with two exceptions at least, involving no appropriation whatever.

The bill this year contains no provision ratifying a treaty. It follows out the declared policy of the Government in reference to the so-called contract schools and appropriates but 20 per cent of the amount carried by the bill of 1895 for that purpose.

The various provisions of the bill that are new, or those that are old, I think can be fully explained as they are reached under the five-minute rule when we get to them in their order, and I will not at the present time, Mr. Chairman, occupy any further time unless some gentleman should desire at the present time that I should give him information in reference to some specific item. I reserve the balance of my time, and I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON].

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, feeling a peculiar interest in the noble red man, I bespeak the attention of a few of the most intelligent members of the House while I indulge in a few reflections as to matters of interest to him and of much greater interest to the other people of this country. In short, Mr. Chairman, whatever may have been said in old statutes about Indians not taxed, they constitute one solitary class of all the charges on this Government that has done or given something to show for the paternalism resorted to to insure their support and happiness.

They have, in the course of time, quit-claimed to us quite valuable and extensive tracts of land, a reasonable ground rent on which would perhaps maintain them and all their cherished vices for all time, if the Government and the red man should last that long, even including operating expenses, Indian agents, stipends, etc.

While there may be some truth in the cruel remark that all good Indians are dead—

> Lo, the poor Indian! whose untutor'd mind
> Sees God in clouds, and hears him in the wind—

wakens the conviction that there may be worse people in life than Lo Jo. [Laughter.]

I have long wondered at the forbearance of the protectionists and the mongers of money in failing to attack and denounce the bounties to their red brethren as rank paternalism, and in not demanding that the Government give all that money to them, instead of to the Indians. While those classes charge it on others, as a blind to divert attention from themselves, they try to use all the paternalism in sight; they regard the Government as a "loving father"—which expression they use to signify that it supports and enriches them at the expense of every productive industry. What in reason would seem heresy has grown into a cardinal doctrine of economic and political faith and practice; their consciences having so far danced attendance to their interests that they would feel grieved if informed that the practice of taking from others by compulsion and giving to them was formerly considered robbery and looks that way yet to some old-fashioned people whom self-interest has not afflicted with obliquity of mental and moral vision.

These classes have charged our Populist brethren with infringing on their domain and making some paternalistic demands. But the Populists are mere amateurs in the practice of paternalism, their efforts in that line having been utterly insignificant in comparison with the shameless abandon with which the manufacturers and financial speculators have demanded and used the powers and privileges of this Government.

Now, while the mention of financial disturbers reminds me of the savages, the savages in turn remind me of the financial disturbers, who prey alike upon the substance of all men—red, white, and black—without regard to race, color, or previous condition of servitude, all of whom need an honest and stable currency—not what is called "sound" currency.

I would not attempt to deceive a poor Indian with such delusive and dishonest terms. Many poor white folks and negroes have, however, been deceived to their own hurt by the designing men who perpetually juggle with our currency to facilitate speculation in financial conditions, sapping the life current of commerce, subordinating all things, principles and policies, to their interests, and seeking to prostitute the functions of government to the sole work of promoting their private fortunes, even at the expense of stifling liberty and pauperizing and enslaving all the masses.

From William street and the offices of several shining lights among the speculators the President and Congress receive copious and frequent batches of information as to what is best for so-called commercial interests, and how to run the Government so as to frustrate the schemes of neither the bulls nor the bears, but ignoring all questions of right and progress as to the people, and relegating to the wastebasket all appeals for liberty and humanity, pressing the people beneath the yoke and whip of taskmasters, and promoting, under the broad ægis of Government, the business of stock speculating and gambling in futures. These speculators take all forms, the most common being that of "wiseacres" who hold a close monopoly of wisdom and honesty, and direct their energies to shaping the finances of the country and controlling the same.

Their time is all seasons. They own and operate no railroads, but they gamble in the stocks and bonds, wreck the companies, and reduce to beggary stockholders, widows, and orphans. They own and operate no farms. They engage in no productive industry. In fact, "they toil not, neither do they spin," but they are much sweeter and purer than "the lilies of the field," and "Solomon in all his glory" was never half so wise or honest as they. That must be true, for they say so themselves, and they admit that they are the most truthful people on earth. It is inconvenient for them to be troubled with any form of property besides money. If they are popular and influential with the Government, it is much easier to manipulate the money, and through that control the property and labor of other people, than it would be to trudge along, struggling with the other property, while allowing everybody else an equal chance at the money. The only currency they advocate is what they denominate "loanable capital."

Fair exchange, honest investment, and cash transactions among the masses are entirely foreign to their plans. They regard as superfluous all money except what they can lend on good interest and security. In fact, if they owned the other property, real and personal, its depreciation through legislative discrimination and the manipulation of speculators would not appear to them so honest as it now seems, and they are wise enough to know that, though it is now anarchy and repudiation for the people to complain who suffer thereby. The primitive idea was that money was intended, not as wealth itself, but as merely a representative of value and medium of exchange, conveniently used by people who produce something and have something—to exchange with one another their various products and commodities. It has so facilitated exchange and enlivened trade that it has been likened to the blood in the human system and called the blood of commerce.

If strangulation stops that current and paralyzes commerce, it is no reflection on the wisdom or honesty of the speculators who exercise the power—first, because they are too wise and honest to be reflected on; second, they profit by the partial or temporary paralysis of commerce which they produce, and thus justify their wisdom, and third, as they make the profit it establishes their honesty and benevolence, for "charity begins at home" and "he that fails to provide for his own household hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel."

Again, it has been likened to the tools with which coal and other valuable products are worked. If we limit the number and kind of tools which could be used and allow a monopoly of the production and furnishing of those tools, no matter how abundant and valuable the products might otherwise have been, the handful of tools originally designed as the mere instrument to develop wealth becomes more valuable than all the commodities which normally constituted the real wealth. The wiseacres are shrewd enough to know this and seek to bring about the situation, as it inures to their own profit and the other poor fellows, who, they say, ought not to discuss finance and participate in government because they are not millionaires, bear all the loss, and therefore it is perfectly honest.

It is a favorite practice of these financial experts to liken money to the bushel measure or the yardstick and talk about its correctness and unvarying accuracy and its soundness. They are wise enough to know that if the Government will give them a monopoly to furnish a limited number of bushel measures, and allow no grain used or sold except by their measures, with ample toll paid for the use thereof, a few measures would be more valuable than all the grain on earth and would be more durable and convenient to keep and preserve. They are wise and influential enough to satisfy the Government that they confer a great favor by undertaking to exercise this monopoly, actually inducing the Government to pay them a bounty therefor, together with many privileges and perquisites. And, of course, it is honest. Who would doubt it but an anarchist, who never had a million dollars and is entitled to no consideration? But suppose the Government, in addition to giving these experts a monopoly of the manufacture and use of yardsticks, should, after the similitude of their contention as to the dollar, allow them to select the material out of which to make yardsticks, and prohibit the use of any other material, and they should make the yardstick out of rubber that stretches every time there is tension put upon it, just like the gold standard for which these wise and honest patriots contend, meantime permitting them to buy every man's cloth with that elastic yardstick.

Suppose that to-day it is 36 inches long, but although it costs just as much to make a yard of cloth, and so many people had to make cloth for a living, that although there are enough people naked to buy and use all the cloth produced, yet, owing to manipulation of the yardstick, to-morrow the philanthropic manipulators thereof stretch it to 48 inches, and the next day to 60, and the next day to 100, until eventually they may get all the cloth they need for a yard, and yet wisely and innocently they wipe their mouths and say, "I have done no evil," persuading the people that there had been no depreciation in the prices of cloth, but an overproduction thereof, and if they would just bring it along a little faster and render more certain and permanent their right to stretch the yardstick—in other words, "restore confidence" in their permanent ability to continue that practice—their yardstick would be sufficient to measure all the cloth; and although all those who might otherwise consume go naked for lack of ability to secure the cloth, and all the producers starve through failure to realize the value of their cloth, yet statesmen and scholars are engaged by some means to go through the country proclaiming that it is best for both classes, making speeches and writing pamphlets, quoting one another, thus multiplying reliable authorities, while these paragons of wisdom and honesty, deprecating harsh names and epithets, and eschewing the "grievous words" that "stir up anger," but loving most tenderly the "soft answer" that "turneth away wrath," elegantly consign to infamy as anarchists, repudiators, thieves, and scoundrels all those of either class who dare murmur at their measurement or their privileges. Would it rectify the outrages if, under the noise of a judicious hue and cry about the corruption of the floating vote they piously "cast bread upon the waters" in such quarters as they think will enable them to gather up most of those selfsame floating votes, after the campaign and by wise and honest persuasion with voters and wise and honest agonizings with election managers, which they denominate "business methods," they sometimes secure what, on the face of the returns, appears to be a popular indorsement of their plan?

Of course it is no harm. It is wise and honest, for they say so. They keep the people's money and have a right to control the people as their wards, and that without accountability. They say so themselves. They say the people are ignorant and stubborn and incapable of intelligent action, and, not knowing what is best for them, have to be educated about election time, and then a campaign of education in the interest of the boss struggling for his political existence is very necessary to a discredited Administration by restoring local prosperity.

A single standard is no standard. All things having to be measured by it, and there being no coordinate medium to cooperate and alternate with it in popular use and demand, thus checking its fluctuations, it becomes immeasurable. Its value is arbitrary in the hands of its holder, and, stimulated by legislative and executive partiality, its purchasing and "loanable" power flies up without control or even restraint.

The consensus of human judgment has fixed the relative proportion between the property and the money in circulation to effect exchanges in trade at about 30 to 1. So that, regarding money as property, which was never intended and ought to be unlawful, if these speculators get possession of all the money, under normal conditions, they would own one thirty-first as much as all the balance of the people own, and with equal and fair consideration for all at the hands of the Government they would be entitled to one thirty-first part of the profits of business and the benefits of protection, provided they worked one thirty-first as much as all the rest of the people.

Now, is it right and proper for the Government to legislate all the time in behalf of this comparatively small interest to the detriment of all others, thus aggravating the mischievous tendency of greed and cupidity to make the "rich richer and the poor poorer?" Are not natural conditions such that Government partiality is unnecessary to enable that class to scuffle along and gather up a comfortable living, but that Government ought sometimes to watch and frustrate their machinations against the general welfare, especially all interference with the stability of the currency? But they are wise and honest and patriotic and benevolent. They love the poor, for they have often said so, and they are very anxious for the poor man to have a sound dollar to pay on what he owes them. Concern for the poor man has signalized that class through all history from Dives to his successors, whose wisdom and honesty take care of everything for us to-day.

Even the Saviour had frequent occasion to animadvert upon their unselfish characteristics. But "money makes the mare go," as they are wise enough to know, and being always willing to pay a quantum of its value for everything they get, they have endeavored to use it for every purpose under the sun since the days of Simon, who attempted to buy the Holy Ghost. They are "wiser in their generation than the children of light." But, then, they are patriotic. When the Government is in trouble they rush frantically to its relief and pay 40 cents in the dollar for its bonds drawing 7 per cent interest, with banking monopoly and indorsement of notes thrown in. And if they proceed immediately to secure legislation which enhances the bonds to 200 per cent, carping anarchists and repudiators ought to remember that wisdom and honesty and perfection are so rare that patriotism comes high.

For the honor of the Government they fear the validity of its paper money, but when 4 per cent interest is added they readily take all the paper they can get at a premium of 4 per cent, and by thrift, wisdom, and honesty, immediately sell at 123, and forthwith begin to use their patriotism to arrange for another issue of 4 per cent bonds by drawing gold from the Treasury and shipping it abroad. But when it looked like other people might help them precipitate the deal and share the benefits thereof, they could ship back the same gold without the packages ever having been opened and exchange it at the Treasury "even Stephen" for dishonest, unsound, old, rag-baby greenback money.

These experts terrify us with direful prophecies as to the shock to trade and ruin to their interests, which they confuse with the nation's honor, if legislation should cease to enlarge the value of their dollars as compared with commodities, but are unmoved by the disaster which, as the result of any single one of their artificial panics, diminishes the value of the people's property more than the amount of all the money in the world.

They demand the separation of the Government from the banking business, which, being interpreted, signifies "to separate the money from the people," so that the experts can control the supply and deal it out in such quantities and under such conditions as will insure the most profitable returns. They do not mean that they want the Government to quit supplying its credit to national banks and paying them to use it, or take the prohibitory discrimination off of State banks. They are wise and honest and patriotic, and not likely to advise anything to damage their interests.

Being unerring weather cocks, however, they are politic enough to ostensibly bend rather than break before a rising storm of popular indignation. So they sometimes seek to appease and deceive the people by talking about State banks under Federal control, that is, calling some of them State banks while all are really national banks, having already abandoned the specious clamor about wild-cat banks by the modern insistence that Federal banks may safely "issue circulation based on bank assets."

In their superior, though somewhat conflicting, wisdom, they ignore as fogyism the doctrine of our fathers, that the only thing that this Government was expected to do in the way of supplying a currency was to keep the mints open to the free and unlimited coinage of gold and silver on individual account, and that all it had the right and power to do in connection with the banks was to let them alone, Treasury notes or exchequer bills having proven an unfailing antidote for the ills inflicted by those who harass the people by tampering with the currency, except when those in authority were in league with the speculators. In that case only, an Administration sometimes sets at naught law and the people's rights, and at the demand of holders of paper discredits half our coin money, thus inviting embarrassment by the operation of what is called the endless chain. But according to the theory of the experts this endless chain creates the necessity of issuing more bonds, which they want, and therefore shows a "method in their madness." The people will yet get together, in spite of arts and money, overturn their enemies, and put their friends on guard.

These experts affect to worry about the endless chain which depletes the gold reserve, and assert that if the gold standard were adopted no more gold would be demanded on Government paper. At the same time they admit that every dollar of that paper is payable in silver at the option of the Government. Suppose in the next election we secure a President, which now appears as certain as the continued favors of heaven, strong enough, brave enough, honest enough to serve the people instead of the money changers, who, by pursuing the only wise and honest course which has been open to any President, pays silver dollars to all speculators who seek to embarrass the Treasury by presenting paper for redemption. Is it probable that a nabob in possession of a million dollars in silver would go forth denouncing it as depreciated, and offering to sell it at 50 cents on the dollar? He would either swear the silver was good or keep the paper and swear it was sound.

The effect would be the same as in the case of the goldsmiths, the chrysalis form of gold bug, who, before even England conceived the iniquity of the single-gold standard, sought to embarrass the Bank of England by collecting its paper and making demands for gold. While honest tradesmen were furnished with the gold they needed, those who demanded gold for vexatious purposes were all refused. None of them, however, sacrificed their bank notes or admitted them unsound. The people applauded, and the credit of the bank improved. Even the gold-standard advocates admit that no disastrous consequences result from the practice of the Bank of France in paying out silver as well as gold.

These people predict a silver standard and apprehend that gold will go out of circulation, when there has not been such a thing as gold circulating among the people in years. Yet if they tell the truth, there is more gold in the United States than existed in the world at the discovery of America. They talk about the gold reserve illegally kept in the Treasury and its possible depletion, when the Treasury now contains four times as much gold as the whole earth possessed at a time when the arms and arts and commerce of Rome dominated and dazzled the word. They have not told us where the gold would go after it fled from this country. They say there is plenty in all other countries.

Strange that it does not occur to them that, being redundant in its new home, it would reduce its price there, get down off of its stilts, in its efforts to make something for its owner, and come right back to this country after our products, and go back into circulation with silver, just as it did in England at the time of recoinage, about which history makes the following significant remark:

> The high price of gold was not the evil which afflicted the State, but merely a symptom of that evil, and a fall in the price of gold would inevitably follow, and could by no human power and ingenuity be made to precede the recoinage of silver. Till the milled silver was in circulation the guinea continued in spite of law to pass for 30 shillings. When the milled silver became plentiful, the guinea fell to 21 shillings and 6 pence.

Parliament once broke up an artificial panic, created by speculators to juggle with currency and enhance the purchasing power of gold crowns and guineas, by passing this resolution:

"That they would not alter the standard of the gold and silver in fineness, weight, or denomination, and that they will make good all parliamentary funds since His Majesty's accession to the crown that have been made credits for loans from the subject."

The effect of this true statesmanship was instantaneous. The expectations of those who hoarded guineas in the belief that a guinea would pass for 30 shillings, of those who hoarded crowns in the belief that what was worth 5 shillings would exchange for commodities at the value of 7 shillings and 6 pence, were at an end. The true money flowed into circulation. Trade revived. The financial and commercial crisis was past. The nation was solvent.

Denouncing silver and paper as dishonest and unsound in order to create a panic for forcing legislation, yet pending that panic of their own creation, these experts pay 3 per cent premium to secure those silver and paper dollars for change; and have never refused to take any and all the dollars of this Government obtainable, such as they are.

They claim that with silver in circulation we would have a silver standard, but insist that with nothing but bank paper in circulation we could have a gold standard.

By sound money they mean money subject to their control which will continually appreciate in value.

Having made a difference of $16,000,000 between their bids for bonds payable in gold and those payable in coin, and the Government having by contract accepted the lower price for bonds which Congress, with full knowledge of the difference in the two offers, had expressly refused to make payable in gold, those wise and honest experts nevertheless insist that the Government ought to pay those bonds in gold without even offering to remit the $16,000,000 difference in the cost.

Having made a campaign on the pledge to maintain the statu quo as to the currency until international bimetallism could be secured, they immediately demanded the enactment of the single gold standard, admitting now what all intelligent people knew and all honest people contended, that the gold standard does not exist by law, but depends entirely on unwarranted construction.

Boasting that we have the best currency in the world, that confidence has been fully restored, which means confidence in their opportunities to rob the people, and that prosperity is breaking with all the glory of the morning over the country, they nevertheless insist on reforming our currency.

Pretending to desire an elastic currency, which means one which they can so control as to force all the materials out of the hands of the producers at a low price and compel all consumers to buy their supplies at a high price, they delude the people by talking about an equal distribution of the currency throughout the country, while they so exercise their tyranny over the banks of the country that in order to have any standing and credit for temporary loans when needed, or interchange of any business, the strongest country bank must continually keep on deposit with its Eastern correspondent a large part of its limited capital, not only losing interest thereon, depriving its locality of that much money, but piling up in this artificial center a large surplus of idle cash, rendering the money market stagnant there, and making money so scarce and high elsewhere as to render all other things cheap and stagnant everywhere else. Upon the slightest evidence of insubordination in business or politics, discipline may be administered by a boycott, or black list among the guild.

To those wise and honest people thus surrounded it looks like there is plenty of money. The wonder of the century is that all these contributory banks throughout the country, which furnish all that surplus money, do not show a little self-respect and independence and by cooperation build up some money centers of their own nearer their homes, where they are most needed and where they could enjoy the profits. They could secure circulation as well as any bank in the metropolis, and ought unanimously to rise and denounce the infamous robbery which takes away their right to issue currency.

Pretending to favor international bimetallism, these experts send commissioners to negotiate therefor, and fire on their rear, by denouncing bimetallism at home and holding conventions declaring the single standard alone desirable, and appointing persons of their own number on a commission to take the already published opinions of themselves and make their report, dictated by their masters long ago, recommending the gold standard and further powers to the banking oligarchy. This was doubtless in aid of their effort to secure international bimetallism.

They talk about the law of supply and demand as applicable to everything but money, ignoring the fact that when the supply of money is inadequate to move commodities, enabling those who need them to buy and those who produce them to sell, the law of supply and demand is entirely suspended, it being impossible for it to have operation, force, or effect to move the supply or give expression to demand.

These experts say that if we establish the gold standard and furnish them with the Government's credit to run a bank monopoly, they will make just as much money as we need, which will all be as valuable as gold, which will remain as valuable as now. Yet they say that if we coin silver and enlarge the quantity of money, it would grow cheaper. It is commonly believed that if it were possible to make four or five paper representatives, each as valuable as the single dollar they represent, all together would be worth no more and buy no more than the original gold dollar itself, without any paper representatives.

What would become of the sound dollar if all the representatives were presented for redemption at once? But admitting that the wise and good experts are correct, does not this proposition to multiply money by giving notes look a good deal like the story of the man lifting himself over the fence by his boot straps? Would we not therein realize the visions of that ancient alchemy which sought to increase the supply of money by transmuting baser things into gold? And would it not be the creation of something out of nothing far eclipsing the demands so often denounced by the experts that the Government use its own credit direct when necessary, and resort to paper money exempt from expense and manipulation?

All the banking schemes ever advocated by this class sought to dispense with the metals because they are expensive. It is now proposed to improve on the original plan by having the Government indorse and redeem their bank notes in consideration of a 5 per cent safety fund deposited instead of bonds, as now required, which cost something. If that business is right, the Government might make a better deal. There are men who would pay 6 per cent for the Government's indorsement and agree to keep the safety fund intact.

If the Government's credit must support all paper money, it ought to save the expense and complication of Federal bank officials and machinery. This is the gist of the whole contention, and blazes the line of distinction between the diverse interests of the people on the one side and the financial cormorants and their creatures on the other. The only dangerous feature of governmental paper money is certainly common to Federal bank paper, but applies with greater force thereto. The supply of basic money to provide for metallic redemption is inadequate to protect the paper issues in case of reverse. Basic money, such as we insist on, consisting of silver and gold coined on individual account, needs no redeemer, and a quantity of paper money can only safely exist in proportion to the quantity of basic money.

In the judgment of patriots, the danger as to Government paper is small. You have to scratch a Federal banker or other financial expert who measures his faith in his country by the gain he realizes to turn loose the flood tides of prophetic woe and fill the world with howls of calamity and dismay. There was but one time when our Government paper was seriously questioned by honest men, and that can not occur again. Even then the experts manifested the greatest distrust, hoping to buy bonds low at high interest. That was when clouds of civil war enveloped us in gloom and threatened the dissolution of our Union. Suppose that in those crucial days the little artificial creatures of law called national banks, instead of using the opportunity to extort profits from the Government by the use of their gold, had, without Government credit, undertaken to furnish currency for the use of the people and the Government in conducting the war? The answer is apparent, and fearful to contemplate as a possibility.

It may be that my persistent references to State banks and the rights of the States and the people to regulate their internal and domestic affairs without so much interference by Federal authority may cause some statesman who advocates all the forms of paternalism demanded by the plutocrats to complain that I am talking about the obsolete doctrine of State rights. I will remind all such patriots that the doctrine is only regarded as obsolete when it is not necessary to their purpose to assert it. When necessary to protect their interests, it is a doctrine dear to their hearts.

One of the most remarkable conversions since Saul of Tarsus astonished mankind by revealing to the benighted mind of an eminent judge, who held and cast the deciding vote on the Supreme Court, the beauties and glories of the doctrine of State rights, in order to protect the beneficiaries of the corrupt financial and tariff legislation enacted by the Republican party during the last thirty years from paying their just tithes of taxes upon incomes from idle and hoarded millions wrested from the toil and sweat of the land, not alone by superior industry and brains, but by the favoritism and artificial help of corrupt and damnable laws. The details of that conversion have never been given to the world, not even the authority which furnished the new and convincing legal light to a mind trained and grown old in the study, practice, and judgment of the law.

When Saul was converted from error to light, the operation filled his soul with such pride that his eloquent descriptions thereof by tongue and pen have stirred the centuries to admiration. Without reflecting by the least intimation upon the integrity or the intelligence of the distinguished jurist who was so suddenly converted to the doctrine of State rights, I can not conceal my regret that he has not seen proper to give to the world the chapter and verse which enlightened his judgment. It might prove valuable in restraining others when tempted to ignore the rights of individuals as well as the functions of States, by providing that the Federal Government shall undertake to do useless and unwarranted things.

The experts object to remonetizing silver because it is cheap. In 1873 they demonetized it because it was high. They previously proposed, both in this country and France, to make it the single standard, demonetizing gold. They thought it necessary to their bank schemes to destroy one metal and all State-bank issues. They would as leave have silver as gold but for the fact that it would be impossible to corner it when it was diffused among the people in circulation, and it would be more difficult to realize their cherished design to create a dearth of currency and manufacture an abnormal demand for Federal bank notes. Legal use makes demand. Demand makes value.

With gold coined in large denominations and silver in small coins, like dollars and their subdivision, after the examples of all great countries in history, the commerce and energy of the United States, comprising more than half the force, business, and intelligence of this world, would use many times more than we could procure of both metals, fixing their relative value according to the comparative quantities in sight, estimated at about 16 to 1. Until demonetized by the United States, combined greed in all nations could not depress silver below gold at the ratio of 16 to 1. There was never a day with her mints open at that ratio when her silver dollar was worth less than her gold dollar. There never will be if her mints open to-morrow. It is dishonest juggling with words for people who do not believe in coinage at all to talk about ratio. If those who prate about 32 to 1 were candid, they would move to open the mints at that ratio; but they know that a silver dollar would then be worth just $2 in gold; therefore they do not move. If this Government will announce to the world irrevocably that her mints will be opened on a certain day at the market ratio, the markets of the world will unerringly register the commercial value at 16 to 1 before that day arrives.

The experts conducted the last national campaign on the assertion that the gold standard was fixed and free coinage would be an untried experiment, declaiming against the danger of altering the standard. Now they admit we have no lawful gold standard, and, "calling good evil and evil good," they mock us by crying reform, while insisting on further contraction and robbery. All the folly and corruption of their campaigns of education have but presumed on the ignorance and venality of the people, and discredited the teachings of history and experience; Persia with a known ratio under Darius, Athens with a perfect coinage of gold and silver, furnishing examples of the harmony of coinage and market ratios taught by McCauley, Jefferson, and the Chicago platform.

Rome, with a coinage practically unvarying in ratio during the reigns of the twelve Cæsars; Jerusalem throughout all her splendor; England for two hundred years before gold usurped the function of government; France for a century; the United States for eighty years, and the great and good men of all parties in this country, all combine to crush and shame the dishonest assertions of the wreckers who call themselves wise and good. Neither McCauley, Jefferson, nor any patriot subscribing to the Chicago platform was ever foolish or dishonest enough to talk about market ratio without coinage and legal-tender quality. With gold pampered and silver outlawed by law and construction, they can not fairly be compared in value. Silver, in spite of different mint ratios and all other discrimination, maintained its standing with gold. To destroy market ratio it was necessary to suspend coinage. Until that was done by this country, all persecution and discrimination were ineffectual to drive silver below gold.

When silver was demonetized, gold cut loose from restraint and, aided by law, flew away, leaving the relative value of silver and other commodities undisturbed, except that all in common appeared to be depressed and stagnant from the scarcity and lofty height to which gold had been lifted in use and price. The campaign of discrimination against silver has been the most malignant and expensive ever waged in the annals of human disaster and cupidity. "Give a dog a bad name and you might as well kill him." "Cæsar's wife was above suspicion," but if you turn loose the venom, vituperation, mendacity, gold, and patronage to persecute incessantly by whisperings and calumny as they have fought silver, they would pull down the purest vestal virgin from her high pedestal of chaste repute and destroy her with putative shame. The fact that in spite of all machinations silver has sustained its substantial parity with the average price of commodities blazons it as the emblem of right and gonfalon of the people.

The experts prophesy a deluge of silver as the consequence of free coinage, and contradict it by declaring that silver could not be furnished fast enough to supply currency and prevent a panic following the flight of gold. Waiving the contradiction, suppose you place in charge of the mints a man who believes in bimetallism, as England did in the days of Newton, and there will be no dearth of currency, especially if resort be had to coin certificates pending mintage. As long as you keep national bankers or their creatures in charge of the Treasury and mints the people will always be regaled with sophistries about silver and Treasury notes while robbed perpetually by manipulation in favor of Federal banks.

When we claim that repeal of discrimination will restore business certainty and normal level of prices through a return to adequate and honest currency consisting of silver and gold, with paper convertible into either, leaving the people through the instrumentality of State banks to supplement the circulating medium as local necessity or enterprise may suggest, the experts in ridicule assert that legislation can not make wealth or prosperity. Adverse legislation has afflicted the common people with poverty and depression of business through destruction of equal condition and opportunity, while making the experts rich in money.

Its repeal would so far undo the evil inflicted as to restore conditions under which each and all may work, earn, and preserve according to his skill and industry, which is all that Government has a right to do in promoting the fortunes of anybody. The experts falsify their contention by promising prosperity if we adopt the gold standard. They prefer bank notes to Treasury notes, professedly because they can not force the Government to pay its promises. Then why do they want the indorsement and supervision of the Government? Why are they not willing to rely on their own resources as honest people are content to do, if permitted, and circulate their notes as far and no farther than their solvency and assets may inspire the people with confidence to accept them? Are not the statesmen who make such declarations representing the banks rather than the holders of notes?

Is not that preference conditioned on the permission to issue their bank notes at small cost and float them on Government credit with no competition?

Perhaps it is wrong to expect consistency and reason in connection with the operations of men of such wisdom and honesty as the experts. Their jewel casket is full of other, if not rarer, gems. The teachings of Jefferson and Calhoun and Jackson and Lincoln and Clay and Webster and Blaine are discredited by the luminous wisdom and towering integrity which can only be produced by the education and training acquired through an apprenticeship as a bank clerk or a few years as ward-heeler.

It is unfortunate that when the experts produce authorities in support of their financial contentions almost every one who is known beyond his own bailiwick may be impeached by proof of previous contradictory statements, and the only chance to sustain the witness by proof of general good character is to rely on the character borne before conversion.

Some of the wisest and purest of the great experts who, by guarding the universal equilibrium, prevent the "wreck of matter and crush of worlds," have disclosed the quality of their discernment by disclaimer of participation in "Coin's Financial School." I have since meditated over the possibility that, perhaps, search among the legends of Uncle Remus's "creters" and the archives of antiquity might reveal denials interposed by the characters mentioned in the immortal productions of Æsop and Bunyan.

More than two centuries ago Lord Bacon wrote: "There be three things that make a nation great and prosperous—a fertile soil, busy workshops, and easy conveyance of men and commodities from one place to another." He is another old fogy, and falls far short of comprehending modern conditions. He ought to have known that true greatness and opulence could never crown a nation's growth without a small moneyed aristocracy to hold mortgages on all the soil, force into trusts all the workshops, flood all the conveyances with watered stocks and wreck them with fraudulent bonds, corner all commodities, draw tribute from all men through the slavery of debt, utilize business methods when necessary to purchase votes, election managers, and legislatures, and, with superior wisdom and patriotism, exercise a close control over the Government.

To admit that Bacon was right would be to brand this wise, respectable, and honest little class as parasites whose existence is not only unnecessary but exceedingly burdensome to the body politic. But there is an honorable ground on which to adjust the difficulty. The pension industry, in the luxuriant proportions in which it flourishes at present, had not been dreamed of in Lord Bacon's philosophy. The wisdom and honesty of this patriotic but exclusive band of wiseacres would afford ample compensation for the few thousand millions, even if it required that much to pension them, make them comfortable, and abolish their occupation.

Wisdom and honesty would not necessarily "perish from out the earth" thereby. In comfort and confidence, no longer disturbed about the honor of the Government nor agonized over the ills of the poor, free from all care and disquietude, they could devote their whole lives to illuminating society with shining examples of wisdom and purity, perhaps thereby aiding us either to convert or destroy other minor parasites. It would be a great deal cheaper for the people, even if it required every dollar on earth to quiet these experts and insure the world against a renewal of their machinations.

It would be a fortunate bargain for the people to surrender to them every existing dollar, if permitted to provide other medium of exchange to float their commodities, transact their business, enhance their property, render stable their measure of value, and insure certainty for the rewards of toil, exempt from distracting operations of speculation and greed, which are rendered no less destructive by masquerading under pretense of wisdom and honesty.

Despite all professions of superior rectitude, if conditions were in operation to-day under which Annanias and Saphira conducted their "business methods" the undertaker's industry would become as profitable as that of the sheriff and heterophemy would cease to masquerade in the garb of integrity and wisdom.

We might account for the failure of common understanding to realize the truth and wisdom which fill the hearts and heads of these experts if we could adopt the sarcastic remark of Addison that "Gold is a great clearer and convincer of the understanding;" but McCauley startles us by the opinion that gold can, if desirable, procure scholars and statesmen to demolish, in popular faith, the theory of gravitation.

Besides, we are confronted by late events, in which for the love of gold and its representative in the form of Turkish bonds classic Greece, with her memories and glories, was left to humiliation and ruin, while struggling Cuba, fighting for liberty, within a hundred miles of "the land of the free and the home of the brave," and asking nothing but that we cease to help Spain, has been abandoned to starvation and butchery, because the financial magnates have not yet informed the Administration that their interests are ready for us to withdraw our aid and allow Cuba a fair showing.

True, the assaults of speculators upon the liberty and prosperity of our people, waged for twenty-five years, to induce us to adopt a financial policy of manifest self-destruction, is encouraged by one mournful precedent, in the campaign of Lord Castlereagh, "when with gold and offices and titles he succeeded in inducing the Irish Parliament to commit national suicide and surrender to England her liberty, her nationality, and her happiness," a disaster which her patriots and statesmen have not yet been able to retrieve.

If temporary success of corruption and bribery appall the lover of his country in our day, let him take courage from another example. There was an evil day in Athens when, deluded by false leaders, the people ostracized Aristides because he was just—the same reason that baffled the popular will and prevented the ascendency of the greatest living American in 1896—but when the policy of "business methods" had availed to purchase for the Persian King the submission of all the Grecian States except Athens, Aristides was recalled, and repelled the insulting overtures to his people in the burning words, "That there was not gold enough on earth to induce the Athenians to sell their own liberty or the liberties of the other Grecian States."

So a betrayed and disgusted people will turn back to the American Aristides, who will lead them in triumph over the rout and discomfiture of bossism and corruption back to their regained liberty and equality of condition under the law. The battle will be royal, if not the Armageddon of our liberties. The foe never sleeps and is powerful and well intrenched in corruption, patronage, and gold, commanded, cajoled, encouraged, or intimidated, according as different characters may require different influence, by two doughty leaders, the wonder and admiration of all the worshipers of Mammon, the terror and detestation of all who love liberty and equality—one, the financial head of the Government, the other, the business manager of the dominant party; the first, truly "an Israelite in whom there is no guile," whose shortcomings are all "errors of the head," the second, committing no error of the head, but all his faults being of the heart.

Notwithstanding sectional and local susceptibility to corrupt influence the attempted apotheosis of greed will fail in our land. Already most of the pivotal States, outraged by shady operations in 1896, have repudiated that action by later elections, the country thereby renouncing the declared result of 1896 and discrediting regnant bossism. Stripped of all misleading pretense, the experts have at last been driven from their cover of evasion and duplicity into the open to battle in the light for their unholy demands. When the guns shall have ceased to reverberate and the smoke of battle cleared away the friends of liberty may rejoice that "goldbuggery is dead," the people free, and the country cleansed from the taint of corruption just as the new century opens, in which we may bless humanity with the perfection of civilization and the highest triumph of popular government. [Applause.]

Mr. EDDY. Mr. Chairman, perhaps the remarks that I shall make may not have a direct bearing upon the bill under consideration, but I have noticed that in the long debates which have lately occupied the attention of this House the speeches are remarkable chiefly from the fact that they do not have anything to do with the subject under discussion. We have discussed civil service on an appropriation bill, and some of us at least discuss free silver on every occasion. So, certainly, it will be no novelty for a man to discuss a question not properly before the House.

Mr. Chairman, we have learned by experience that the proper time for a man to make remarks on any subject is when he can get the opportunity, and when he has an undoubted right to the floor, for if he does not he is liable to find himself in the air with a carefully prepared extemporaneous speech on his hands for which he has no earthly use. It is true he can unload his speech under the "leave-to-print" privilege, but were one who has acquired something of a reputation for agitating the atmosphere during the campaign to resort to this procedure to get his views before the House and the country the boys at home might imagine that he had lost his nerve or his voice, and in those districts where it is a neck-and-neck race from the start until the winner passes under the wire such a course might prove disastrous.

But, Mr. Chairman, the question of the disposition of the public lands of this country is inseparable from the Indian question, because all of our public domain was first acquired from the Indians, either by purchase or conquest, and practically all public lands which are now in the possession of the Government, except those in Alaska, consist of portions of our country that have formerly been ceded to the Indians for reservations and have been received back by the Government from them under treaty stipulations. The public-land policy of this Government for more than twenty-five years, from 1862 to 1890, was to dispose of these lands by gift, or rather by grant, upon the performance of certain conditions, either to a corporation for the purpose of building a railroad, or to the party who would take up a certain amount and plant thereon a certain number of trees in a treeless region, or 160 acres to an individual who would settle upon the same for five years and cultivate it under the provisions of the homestead law.

The wisdom of the first method of disposition has been seriously questioned. The good results of the timber-culture law have been doubted; but the beneficent results of the operation of the homestead law are as well settled as the beneficent results of the emancipation proclamation; and a member of Congress would no more have thought of rising on the floor of this House and advocating its repeal than of standing in his place and advocating the restoration of slavery.

As a matter of fact, very few people in this country, or even on the floor of this House, are aware that all the beneficent provisions of the homestead law have been repealed and that the old song which we used to sing with so much vigor, "Uncle Sam is rich enough to buy us all a farm," must now be so amended as to read: "Uncle Sam has become so poor that if any man takes up 160 acres of the Government domain, he must pay from $200 to $500 for the privilege."

Mr. Chairman, the homestead law was founded upon the soundest business principles. The Government of the United States donated that which was not only valueless in itself but a constant source of expense to the Government, to the people, and thereby speedily filled it with a wealth-creating and revenue-producing citizenship. The States of Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Wyoming, and Washington were largely built up under its operation. Other States and Territories have been largely increased in wealth and population by its operation. Large cities have sprung up in the pathway of the pioneer. Great railroad lines have been built to transport the products of the homesteader to the seaboard.

Mr. Chairman, more money has been brought into this country and injected into our circulation by immigrants from foreign shores under the operation of the homestead law than the Government price of the lands that were donated. The United States derives every year more revenue from the speedy settlement of the States I have mentioned than it would have received if it had sold the land at the original Government price. The homestead law is the best bargain that this or any other country ever made with its own or foreign citizens. The rich fruits of perpetual revenue are poured into the coffers of the Government by simply donating the lands on which to plant the orchards of industry.

But this is not all. The hardy pioneers who settled up these States and Territories under the provisions of the homestead law constitute the greatest citizen-producing factory that this or any other country on God's green earth possesses. The cosmopolitan commingling of the many nationalities upon this vast domain has produced the most magnificent specimens of American manhood found on the continent to-day; and in case of foreign war or any other great national danger, if every other source of strength were exhausted, they could and would successfully defend this nation against any foe.

Mr. Chairman, is it not strange that a system productive of such beneficent results should have been changed or abandoned? Is it not strange that this Government in the dark days of the civil war, when in dire need of money and with comparatively few sources of revenue, could give to States and railroad corporations, principally the latter, more than 40,000,000 acres of land, worth more than $80,000,000, and five times as much to homestead settlers—give away an empire in extent, fair as the garden of the Lord and fruitful beyond compare—and should in 1890, with an overflowing Treasury, be seized with a spasmodic fit of economy and come to the conclusion that it could not afford to dispose of the comparatively infinitesimal fragments of the semiarid lands of Oklahoma and the Dakotas and the wooded, broken, swamp-intersected regions of northern Minnesota without charging from $1.25 to $3.75 an acre therefor?

It is worthy, perhaps, of passing notice to observe how this change was brought about. In 1887–88, and perhaps prior thereto, negotiations were opened with the Sioux Nation of Indians looking to the purchase of what was known as the Great Sioux Reservation, situated in North and South Dakota, and a portion of it, I believe, in Nebraska. A proposition for its purchase was incorporated into what was known as the Sioux bill or the Dawes bill, and submitted to Congress. Mr. Holman, of Indiana—and I speak his name with reverence, for, however misguided he may have been, he lived with an eye single to the public interests and died after years of faithful public life in the public service—was at that time a leading member of the Indian Committee of this House. It is surely no disrespect to his memory for me to say that he looked with suspicion upon any scheme involving the expenditure of money. He belonged to that class of economists who never can be brought to realize that under certain conditions liberality is frugality and expenditure economy.

He stood aghast at the vast sum of money required to make this purchase—$5,000,000 and over—not so much as the cost of a single battle ship, but still a large sum of money. He was a statesman; and he realized the necessity of opening up this portion of our public domain to settlement. He addressed himself to the problem of devising some expedient whereby that object could be accomplished without an expenditure of Government money on the part of the Government. He finally hit upon the expedient of dividing the total price by the number of acres, and when the tract was opened to settlement under the provisions of the homestead law, in addition to the condition of settlement and residence imposed on the settler, he was to pay a stipulated price per acre. Mr. Holman found a gentleman of a similar school of economy in the Senate in the person of Mr. Dawes, of Massachusetts; and a clause was incorporated in the Indian bill providing for an Indian treaty to carry out this project as a subordinate proposition, and never referred to the Committee on Public Lands in either the House or the Senate, and in that form it became a law. This precedent was unfortunately followed in opening other reservations since that time, and thus the beneficent provisions of the homestead laws were repealed and an unjust and inequitable burden was imposed upon the settlers on those reservations, a burden which to-day hangs like a pall over that country, retarding its development, hindering its settlement, and causing pale fear to sit, an unbidden and unwelcome guest, at the frugal board of every one of those pioneers—the fear of losing their little holdings.

The United States, prior to the opening up of the reservations recently opened, beginning with the Great Sioux, paid to the Indians more than $103,000,000 for lands purchased from them. Prior to those purchases these lands had in general been purchased from France or Spain. Now, it would have been as just to add the $103,000,000 paid to the Indians and the price of the land paid to France or Spain, together with the price of the recent purchases, into one lump sum and divide that total amount by the number of acres, and then compel the last settlers to pay the price of all, as it was to adopt the course which was pursued: and that would have been as just as to make the beggars who gladly ate the fragments of the recent $250-a-plate banquet held in Philadelphia pay the price of the same, and allow those who sat at the table to escape all expense.

The public-land policy of the United States from 1862 to 1890, a period covering more than twenty-five years, was this: That the Government held its public domain in trust for the people, and the Indian policy of the Government for more than one hundred years and down to 1890 was that the Indians were the "wards of the nation," and their maintenance a burden to be borne by all the people and not to be imposed upon a limited number of its poorest citizens, and I have no hesitation in saying that the law reversing this policy is one of the most unjust, inequitable, and uncalled for that was ever placed upon the statute books of the nation.

Mr. Chairman, I think that I know something of the privations and hardships of frontier life, and this knowledge was obtained in the stern school of experience and not in the fanciful college of theory, and I want to say that no man ever left the comforts and advantages of civilization and went out on the frontier and made a home for himself and family but he fully earned it without paying a money price therefor; and this Government never donated 160 acres of its domain, valueless until transformed into a fruitful field by the labor of the occupant, without receiving an ample return for the donation, without exacting a monetary price therefor.

Mr. Chairman, I know an old soldier located on the Sisseton-Wahpeton Indian Reservation. His face is seamed with a saber cut received in defending the flag of his country. He has faced three successive failures of crops, and he can barely maintain his family from the scanty returns of his farm and his meager pension. He could no more raise $400 to pay for his land than he could buy a Cunard steamer for a pleasure yacht, and the despairing look upon his face when he asked me if there was any hope of relief from Congressional action was pathetic to behold.

I know a widow on the Red Lake Indian Reservation in northern Minnesota who took a claim and built a shack thereon with the fond hope of providing a future home for herself and little ones. Huddled in one small room is her little family. Daily over the washboard she toils for their support, and the fear that some day she will lose her home that she has obtained by such sacrifice—for she knows she can never pay the Government price for it—will eventually drive her into an insane asylum or the grave. And these are not isolated cases. They are the rule on these reservations.

But, Mr. Chairman, I do not come here pleading the poverty of these people. I simply ask for justice. I simply ask that they be treated as others have been treated. If the principles of the homestead law were ever just, they are just now. If it was right to offer to the world a banquet of the finest lands in the universe, it is manifestly wrong to charge these poor people for the few fragments that are left.

Mr. Chairman, during the long debate on civil service which recently closed in the House much was said about the "cardinal principles of the Republican party," and we listened with delight to the clarion tones of the eminent leaders of our party urging us to stand by those principles and enact legislation along the lines laid down in our national platform. It stirred the blood like a bugle call to battle and roused the martial spirit of old-time Republicanism. That is the task set for us by the people who sent us here. Let it be done and speedily.

Mr. Chairman, "free homes" is one of the cardinal principles of the Republican party, twin-born with the great principle of universal freedom, which was its foundation stone.

It is a Republican principle that is older than the legislative career of any man on the floor of this House except the venerable member from Pennsylvania, Mr. GROW. It was the creation of his genius, the child of his broad sense of Americanism and of justice. For ten years he battled for it, and its enactment into law was the brightest jewel of achievement among the many bright jewels of achievement that he secured through his long and honorable career on the floor of this House.

We have wandered away from this principle in recent years, and from the plains of the Dakotas and Oklahoma, from the wooded regions of northern Minnesota, comes up a cry from hardy pioneers who have invested their all in their cabin homes and their humble environment, "Restore tous this privilege, or we lose our heritage."

Mr. Chairman, the Republican party, in the last national convention, met and declared on this subject:

> We believe in the immediate return to the free-homestead policy of the Republican party, and urge the passage by Congress of the satisfactory free-home bill which has passed the House and is now pending in the Senate.

The principle of free homesteads is as much a cardinal principle of the Republican party as sound money or protection, and just as strongly set forth in its platform. That glorious platform closes with the following soul-inspiring declaration:

> These are the principles and policies of the Republican party. By these principles we will abide and these policies we will put into execution.

Now, we are going to use every endeavor to have the House take speedy action on this cardinal principle of Republicanism, and I think I am justified in calling upon all these strong advocates of the cardinal principles of the Republican party to stand by me in this action.

But, Mr. Chairman, this is not only a cardinal principle of Republicanism, but it is a cardinal principle of Democracy, and a cardinal principle of Populism as well. The Democratic party in their national platform declare as follows:

> The Democratic party believes in home rule, and that the public lands of the United States should be appropriated to the establishment of free homes for the American people.

The Populist platform is still more emphatic:

> We demand that bona fide settlers on the public lands be granted free homes, and that no exception be made in the case of Indian reservations now open for settlement, and that all lands not now patented come within this demand.

Mr. Chairman, so just, fair, and equitable is this principle that no party in the last campaign dared submit its case to the justice-loving American people without a specific declaration in its favor. Every man on the floor of this House is specifically pledged to its enactment into law, and he is so pledged by the declaration of his party in convention assembled; and it seems to me that we ought to welcome an opportunity, and if necessary create an opportunity, of speedily enacting this measure into law and removing the haunting dread that, specter-like, broods over the homestead settlers of the Southwest and the Northwest, the fear of becoming homeless and landless. I appeal to the representatives of the American people here in this House speedily to take such action as will make it impossible, forever impossible, for this great, rich, powerful nation to enact the rôle of the world-hated and the world-execrated English landlord of evicting poor and honest people from the lands and tenements that they have made valuable by the labor of their hands. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time that I have not occupied to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN].

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE] occupy some time now?

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, there is one subject in connection with the pending bill to which I desire to call the attention of the House. I refer to that item of the bill providing for the transportation of the supplies to the various Indian reservations and schools in the United States. From the investigations I have been able to make upon that question it appears to me that great abuses have grown out of it, and in justice to the Government at the proper time during the consideration of the bill I shall offer an amendment, which I now send to the Clerk and ask to have read for the information of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment for information.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out lines 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, page 57, and insert the following:

"That in the transportation of all supplies furnished by the United States Government to the various Indian tribes in the United States, and transported for that purpose from one State or Territory into another State or Territory, the Interstate Commerce Commission shall, upon the application of the Secretary of the Interior, after reasonable notice to all roads affected thereby, prescribe such maximum rates of freight charges as shall, in the judgment of the commission, be fair and reasonable; which rates, when so fixed, shall be binding upon all railroads and connecting lines engaged in the transportation of like or similar freights; and any railroad or connecting line refusing to receive and transport such freight shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $5,000 for each day they shall so refuse to receive and transport the same, to be recovered upon the suit of the United States in any court having jurisdiction."

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not understand that the gentleman offers that amendment now.

Mr. LITTLE. Oh, certainly not. That is an amendment I propose to offer at the proper time.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is read now for information.

Mr. LITTLE. Now, Mr. Chairman, for the further information of the House, I send the following statement of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to the desk and ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TRANSPORTATION OF INDIAN SUPPLIES.

Book of Estimates, page 153	$300,000

The law requires that contracts for transportation of goods and supplies shall be advertised and let to the lowest bidder. (Act March 3, 1877, section 1, 19 Stat., 291). So the amount to be spent depends upon the number of pounds to be transported. As has been said, the quantity of goods purchased for Indians has been increasing and consequently transportation has been increasing.

In 1890 $300,000 was appropriated for transportation; then $290,000 for two years, and since then $275,000. For the fiscal year 1897 there was a deficiency of about $7,500. This will be greater for 1898, even if no more pounds are transported, for the reason that transportation rates are one-third higher for 1898 than for 1897. Assuming that the same number of pounds will be shipped this year as last, and the contract rate being one-third higher, the cost of transportation for 1898 will reach fully $350,000, if not more.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, the purpose I have in the amendment is to empower the Interstate Commerce Commission to prescribe fixed rates for the transportation of Government supplies to the various Indian reservations and schools when it falls under the class of interstate commerce. I find, Mr. Chairman, so far as I have been able to investigate this matter, that the Government during the present year has been subjected to the ordinary outrages and schemes of outside agreements—pooling—and thereby destroying competition in the market upon this question of transportation and placing the Government in the hands of a lot of transportation agents.

I find, sir, that for the year 1896 the rates of transportation from New York to Casa Grande, Ariz., was $3.24; that for the present year it is $4.47 per 100 pounds. From that same city to Phœnix, Ariz., last year it was $3.11, and this year it is $4.27, being $1.16 more than it was last year. The commissioner states in the report which I have had read that there has been a uniform raise in the rates against the Government during the last twelve months of 33⅓ per cent. The report embracing this subject-matter has not been printed so as to allow it to be distributed to members of Congress; but it shows, upon examination, conclusively to me, that these persons calling themselves transportation agents have gotten together and agreed not to offer bids against each other, and in this way filched a large amount of money out of the Government Treasury.

Mr. HUNTER. I would ask the gentleman if this transportation is by railroad?

Mr. LITTLE. It is by railroad.

Mr. HUNTER. What is the distance over which it goes?

Mr. LITTLE. It is from New York to Arizona; I have not the distance in miles. But the general statement is that the increase is 33⅓ per cent. They are asking $350,000 to pay this expense, when it was paid only two years ago with $275,000; and this year without any increase in amount of freights we are asked to pay $350,000. The Department under existing law has no discretion to reject the bids, but must accept the lowest bid. I think the principle involved in this question is paramount to the amount of dollars actually involved.

I do not believe it is right that the Government of the United States, for this Government service, should be put in the attitude of an ordinary bidder for the service of these corporations which owe their lives and existence to the Government. The amendment that I propose is that the Interstate Commerce Commission, upon application of the Secretary of the Interior, shall prescribe reasonable rates that the Government shall pay for this service, and compel the railroads to make the transportation. The railroads do not come into the open market and bid for this privilege.

These transportation agents go to the railroads and get the inside figures, and then they pool among themselves and offer their bids, and the Secretary of the Interior up to this time has no discretion in refusing them. Therefore, we have to-day this immense increase. These bids are based upon the amount of freight without classification—I forget the railroad phraseology—flat rates, which means without any classification of freights. The rate paid by the Government this year on all classes of freight is equal to the highest class of freight from New York to these points, as well as from Chicago to these points, which is charged to private shippers.

I believe this to be a matter of such importance to the Government that the Congress ought to empower the Interstate Commerce Commission to deal with these corporations and authorize it to fix rates and enforce them, and compel the roads to carry goods of the Government at what is a fair and reasonable price. [Applause.] This principle, Mr. Chairman, ought to be extended to all interstate commerce in the United States. [Applause.] I believe its importance demands it; and I want to read just here an example of what the people of this country are suffering from these corporations—our own business people. I read an extract from the opinion of the Interstate Commerce Commission, or statement, in the celebrated import-rate case.

> On books, buttons, carpets, clothing, and hosiery the domestic rate from New Orleans to San Francisco was $2.88 per 100 pounds, while the total through charge on the same articles from Liverpool to San Francisco was only $1.07 per 100.
> Traveling on the same railway from New Orleans to San Francisco—
> Boots, shoes, cashmeres, cigars, confectionery, cutlery, gloves, hats, caps, laces, linen, linen goods, saddlers' goods, and woolen goods were carried from Liverpool through New Orleans to San Francisco for $1.07, though domestic commodities of the same kind were charged $3.70 for the haul from New Orleans to the same destination.

If these companies can ship the goods of foreign countries, including the home charge, from Liverpool by way of New Orleans and by rail from there to San Francisco at $1.07 a hundred, it is robbery for the Government to have to pay $4.47 in freight from New York to these points in Arizona, with corresponding rates to all other agencies in the country.

These railroads are largely owned and controlled by English capital; hence this outrageous discrimination against our own people.

How can the American merchant compete with the English merchant if the English merchant can lay down his goods at the inland towns and cities in the United States for less than half the freight charges that it costs the American merchant over the same railroad in the United States from his own store or factory? Such discrimination against our own people is iniquitous, oppressive, and should be stopped.

Gentlemen, there is no question about the authority of Congress to lay its hand on this evil and control it. When we know that the mileage of the railroads in the United States amounts to 187,736 miles, and that more than 30,000 miles are controlled by the same hand and by the same spirit, it becomes the imperative duty of the Government to assert its authority and rescue the commerce of the country from their grasp. The dignity of the Government demands that its business should be placed above the reach of these schemers and transportation agents. Justice to the people demands that the commerce of the country between its own citizens should be under the strict control of Congress and not left to the will of the corporations.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Will the gentleman from Arkansas allow me a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas yield?

Mr. LITTLE. I do.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Inasmuch as the gentleman has admitted that these conditions prevail and that we are at the mercy of the trunk lines of the United States, and inasmuch as a large number of the members of Congress, always in the majority—because that has been proven by the vote upon bills that come up—inasmuch as the corporations go into politics and have their representatives here, in view of all this, does not the gentleman think the only solution is to have governmental ownership of railroads?

Mr. LITTLE. Well, upon that proposition I will say, as I have heretofore said on the floor of this House, when the people become thoroughly convinced that their representatives and their Government are not capable of dealing with these matters in such a way as to compel justice toward the people, they may go to the extreme demanded by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. GREENE. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. LITTLE. If the question is a brief one, I will.

Mr. GREENE. Do you not think that we have about arrived at that period in our nation's history to-day?

Mr. LITTLE. I think if the Republican party is to be continued it is possibly so. [Laughter.] But to continue. I want to say that with this unquestionable power in Congress there should be no hesitation on the part of Congress to exercise it. It is the demand of the platform upon which the campaign of 1896 was made. The Democratic party in its platform demanded a more vigorous and absolute control and supervision of these corporations. Why, they say, as a gentleman said to me the other day, "These high rates of the railroads are on account of the prosperity of the country." I said, "Yes, Republican prosperity." These railroads have increased their rates 33⅓ per cent without any corresponding increase in the business of the country. They feel their security under the rule of the Republicans and have therefore increased rates upon the commerce of the country.

I told him yes, that the sugar trust had pocketed within the last twelve months about $20,000,000; I told him yes, that the Standard Oil Company had pocketed about $30,000,000—wrested it from the people by this signal prosperity; I told him that the great coal combine had by its own statement filched from the people about $80,000,000; I told him yes, that these great trusts and their satellites had under the present Administration within twelve months filched from the people of this country more than $300,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, it is this same kind of prosperity that has put out the fires in the cotton factories of New England. It is the same prosperity that to-day is building soup houses in the great center of the cotton industries in New England to feed the starving factory hands. It is that prosperity to which, when pressed for a reason for the conditions existing, they assign the cheapness of raw material. Never before in the history of this House have I heard the claim that the cheapness of raw material made cheaper wages. The clamor has always been with protectionists that high raw material would make cheap wages, and whenever protection has been asked on raw material, it has been claimed by them that we must follow it with a compensatory duty on the finished product.

Mr. Chairman, returning to the question, I find that during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, the railroads within the United States hauled 765,891,385 tons of freight; that they earned for that year $1,150,169,376 and had remaining after deducting all operating expenses the sum of $377,180,332, giving them a profit above operating expenses of $2,072 per mile for every mile operated in the United States, which would be a profit of more than 10 per cent on a capital of $20,000 per mile.

But on examination we find that the average capitalization of the railroads in this country is $59,610 per mile. More than half of this amount represents watered stock or fictitious capital.

If the Interstate Commerce Commission was empowered to inquire into the actual capital invested in those roads or their present value and fix rates with reference to such real value or investment, millions of dollars could annually be saved to our commerce. Mr. Chairman, there must be some end to corporate greed. There must be some adequate protection offered the people.

The duty presses upon us. We must meet it or confess that the party in power is incompetent for the duty. The right to regulate the freight and passenger rates of common carriers has been an undisputed power for more than two hundred years.

This right belongs to the sovereign. If within a State, then the power belongs to the State. If commerce between the States, the power rests with Congress. With the Morgan syndicate controlling more than 30,000 miles of railway and still grasping for more power, with the constant pooling contracts before us, we ought to be vigilant.

Lay the knife close to the throat of these monopolies. Warn them, if they expect to enjoy the protection of the law, they must respect the rights of the people. Compel by law justice, equality, and fair play toward all patrons of these companies. When you do, you will give to the people greater confidence in our Government and in its ability to insure justice and fair dealing toward all her citizens. You will unchain the commerce of our own country and contribute much toward the perpetuity of our institutions and the happiness of mankind. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I now yield the floor to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG].

Mr. KLEBERG. I thank the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE] for his kindness. I wish to make some general observations in regard to what he has said as to an amendment which he will offer at the proper time. I cordially agree with him that the amendment should be ingrafted on the bill before its passage, because it is certainly not right that this Government should pay charges for freight out of all reason to some privileged railroad corporations. It seems from this statement and from the letter which has been read before the committee that it is true that these railroad companies have combined, or, in other words, pooled their issues, and are charging the Government rates entirely out of proportion with the economical administration of the Government and the expenditure of the Government money.

But I would remind him, as I would other members of the committee, that while I perfectly agree that this matter should be left with the Interstate Commerce Commission, by the construction of our Supreme Court, whose decision I am not here to criticise, the Interstate Commerce Commission has no power to fix any rates, either maximum or minimum or absolute. It is true that for the last ten years not only that commission but a large majority of the American people thought that that great power was vested in that body so that it might fix reasonable rates upon the charges for freight by the railways.

Yea, that commission has proceeded upon that conclusion. Up to the time that the Supreme Court rendered its decision that it possessed no such power, it has gone on and fixed the railway rates upon a reasonable basis—has seen to it that they were fair and just.

I regret that I have not time to go over this great subject fully, because it should be fully discussed in this House. And not only should it be discussed, but some measure of legislative relief should be adopted by which the chaos which has existed since that important decision, the freight-bureau decision, may be brought to an end and order restored, so that the American people as well as the railways may know what freights are to be charged in the future.

Year after year we have had reports from this commission asking for necessary legislation not only upon the question of fixing rates (because it was supposed that the commission had that power under the interstate-commerce act), but asking other legislation by way of relief—the classification of freights, the public accounting of these great corporations; and I refer to them in no offensive sense; I am speaking in the interest of the people and also in the interest of honest railway investment. These reports, I say, have been made to Congress every year. The commission has done its full duty in pointing out the defects in the present law. Yet nothing has been done, except possibly the passage of some bill which would benefit the railways in their efforts at pooling. Such is the condition of the country to-day. We have on the one hand the railways asking for legalized pooling (that is, asking the privilege of fixing the rates and dividing the revenues among themselves), and on the other hand we have the Interstate Commerce Commission asking, in behalf of the people, for the enactment of some legislation for general relief.

This question is beyond any party question. It is true that the Democratic party has stood and now stands in favor of strengthening the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission; but it is equally true that the Republican members on that great commission are requesting at the hands of Congress some legislation looking to the interests of the people—which will give justice to the people as well as to the railways.

But this question is entirely too large to allow me in the limited time assigned me to go over the whole ground. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, outside of the financial question there is probably none of greater importance awaiting early legislative action on the part of the Congress of the United States than the transportation question. The railways of the country have not only become on the one hand a necessity, but on the other a menace to the economic progress of our people. The very fact that without sufficient railroad facilities the commercial life of persons and localities is impossible brings about the sterner fact that without governmental control of these great arteries of commerce commercial and industrial freedom are impossible and Government itself is hampered, if not, indeed, threatened. The tendency to combination and concentration, which seems to be the specter of the coming era in our country's history, is nowhere more palpable and manifest than in the great railroad problem of the United States. To quote from Mr. Adams, statistician of the Interstate Commerce Commission:

> Looking at the matter in the light of history, railways, as administered, have destroyed the conditions under which the principle of competition can work for the great rank and file of business in a normal and satisfactory manner. In theory, competition is the central principle of our industrial structure. Both legislators and courts assume it to be present in the great majority of cases, and because of their confidence in its potency they deny the pertinency of socialistic arguments. In fact, however, competition has degenerated into a struggle for existence between great corporations or a struggle for special favors at the hand of great corporations, or it has ceased to exist altogether. In this lies the explanation of most of the industrial complications which perplex the nineteenth century. According to the common law of industries, competition is potent; but, in reality, competition is rendered impotent by the arbitrary manner in which railway managers administer their trusts.
> If this be true, and that it finds adequate support in the history of the nineteenth century lies beyond reasonable controversy, the railway problem comes to be a problem of civilization. It is a question of keeping open the avenues of opportunity. There is involved in its solution the broad question of industrial liberty, and the technicalities of railway legislation take upon themselves a new meaning when one considers the true character and the industrial influence of railway transportation. As equality before the law is a canon of political liberty, so equality before the railways is a canon of industrial liberty. A solution of the railway problem means the reintroduction of those conditions under which competition can control industrial forces and deal justly as between industrial agents.

Our people are face to face with the momentous question whether they shall control the railroads or whether the railroads shall control them. These great corporations which once pleaded for privileges, franchises, and quasi-public functions to serve the people are about to dictate to them in a manner that their service shall be performed not to enrich the people, but rather to impoverish them and enrich the manipulators of the railroads. There was a time when the people, in their overanxiety to secure the necessity of railroad transportation, were wholly blind to the great power they transferred to the railroads and to the danger that this power could be abused, or they would have kept in view at least a plan for their reasonable control when they subsidized them and gave them right of way. I do not say this in a spirit of enmity against the great railroad interests which have grown up in this country, and have done probably more than any other agency to develop and civilize it, or with the slightest design to injure the actual property rights of those of our people who have their money invested and their interest involved in railroad securities or railroad employment, but in utter candor and fairness, in the face of the grave situation which threatens alike honest railroad investment and employment and the rights of the people generally; a condition alike destructive of the honest carrier and the honest shipper and which involves not only the rights and fortune but the very happiness, and, to some extent, the economic fate of our people; a condition which is the natural result of a system of fictitious capitalization and unjust discrimination, under which the construction and management of the railroads of the country have been accomplished and maintained, and which, crushing out competition among shareholders and transportation rates as well, is about to terminate in a great pool or trust of the entire railroad properties and activities of the country; a condition which contemplates that 185,000 miles of railroad in the United States, with annual earnings exceeding $1,000,000,000, shall be under the management, if not the ownership and control, of a private railroad pool, to be operated in the interests of railroad magnates and railroad rings; a condition which must be aggravated and perpetuated rather than improved, if the Congress of the United States will pass a pooling bill such as is demanded by the combined railroad influences now clamoring for the repeal of section 5 of the act regulating interstate commerce, passed February 4, 1887, and preventing pooling of freights of different and competing railroads, etc. The situation is just this: The Supreme Court of the United States having decided that a railroad pool in interstate commerce is, under the antitrust law, unlawful (Trans-Missouri Traffic Association Case), and that, on the other hand, the Interstate Railway Commission can not, under the present law, fix freight and passenger rates in interstate commerce (Freight Bureau Cases, 167 U. S.), has induced the railroads now to propose the repeal of the antipooling section of the interstate-commerce act, form a gigantic railway pool, fix rates, and divide earnings among the carriers entering the pool.

Discrimination on the one hand and rate cutting on the other inevitably drive the railroads to this last resort of forming a huge trust pool in self-preservation, as they claim, but which must result in the fostering of clique enterprises engaged in commerce and manufactures and other industries, and which in my opinion will assume such dimensions as to defy all control by the Government if once permitted to exist. The great trunk lines assume that under the prevailing practice of rate cutting it is impossible to live up to the rates in their published schedules, and that in self-defense they must be allowed to pool or go into bankruptcy, while the weaker railways fall into the practice of rate cutting to compete with the stronger companies.

In the meantime the Interstate Commerce Commission is powerless under the late decision denying it the power to fix rates, and the law under which it operates is inadequate to prevent unlawful discriminations, rate cutting, or unreasonable rates in freight and passenger traffic, all of which go on, with little or no restraint, at the expense of the shippers and producers, and seriously threaten not only the business enterprises of individuals but entire localities and communities; in short, veritable anarchy reigns supreme at present in the interstate commerce of our railways, and which, without intelligent and prompt action on the part of Congress, must end disastrously to every business interest in the country.

Three ways are suggested to bring order out of this chaos:

1. Railway pooling under certain legal restrictions.
2. Government ownership and management of the railways.
3. Thoroughgoing governmental control by an interstate railway commission, with legislative and administrative powers to fix rates and prevent discriminations and abuses.

Railway pooling as contemplated by the various measures before Congress is utterly vicious, because it only submits to governmental interference after the pooling contract has taken effect. If pooling is to be permitted at all, guaranties for such interference should be secured before the authority to pool is given and before the contract goes into effect. To this proposition I venture to say the railroads will never accede.

But I am opposed to the principle of pooling even under the most favorable conditions, because I believe it to be against public policy and the spirit and life of the economic conditions of this country. If the competitive principle in our industrial economy is to be modified as far as it applies to the railways, let it rather be by a rule of maximum and minimum rates than by a combination which tends more to higher than to lower rates. If we are to bring our railroad system under the régime of socialism, let it be state socialism rather than private socialism.

If we must trust the faithful administration of our railway interests to a managing board, let it be to one appointed by the people through its governmental agency rather than one selected by the private owners and managers of railroads and railway property; for, to repeat an old truth, "When self the wavering balance holds, it's rarely well adjusted." Again, if discrimination, rate cutting, and other abuses under the competitive system are prevalent—and no doubt they are—what is to prevent these abuses under a gigantic pool, which can better afford to cover up its iniquities than the single corporation? And if pooling were legalized, would it not rather result in the forming of an Eastern, a Western, a Southern, and a Northern pool, which each in turn would discriminate against the other, with little or no danger of detection, because neither would be in the way of the other and each would occupy a different territory to itself?

Would the consequence of such an arrangement not tend to higher freight rates and greater burdens to the people; and would not such gigantic consolidation of railway interests, under the cloak of a Federal statute, overawe all State regulations and finally all national regulations? What would State and national railway commissions amount to in the face of such a quasi-legalized monster? To ask the question is to answer it; the servant would rule the master; the people would have bound themselves hand and foot, and instead of controlling other trusts, they would have encouraged clique enterprises to such an extent that private socialism would not only be complete but well-nigh invincible, and the utter impoverishment of the people accomplished to a degree that would hardly leave an avenue of escape from its thralldom except by a refuge to state socialism.

We are constantly reminded by the railway companies that there must not be a further reduction of rates; and if not a rise in rates, at least a check to lower rates. They emphasize stability and uniformity of rates, in order that a reasonable profit may be derived on the capital invested and a better service to the people secured, and therefore they insist that pooling should be legalized. Well, if rates are to be made so inflexibly stable as not to keep pace with the general fall of prices of other commodities—owing chiefly to a vicious financial system—the country does not want such stability in rates. If the price of the property of the producer and shipper must fall on a single gold standard, let railroad property suffer such depreciation alike with all other property, and not be permitted to fatten upon the misfortunes of an already oppressed people at the hands of a moneyed oligarchy.

There are two sides to this rate business; the one advocated by the railways seems to be wholly on the side and in the interest of the railways. It is all very well to insist on a fair return on the investment made in railroad property, but the rights of the shippers and producers should not be entirely ignored. The people were not consulted when the indebtedness which burdens the railroads was incurred. Are they not to be consulted when it comes to fixing freight rates with which their property is to be burdened? Is the freight which they must pay any less a tax because it is collected in the interest of private parties? From whence comes this power to tax the people on the part of these corporations, if it does not come from the people? The power of eminent domain is the power to destroy, is the power to take property for public use, and is one of the greatest prerogatives of government. It has been delegated by the people to the railways. The right to collect tolls and taxes is another power equally as great; it, too, the people have delegated to the railways.

Are the people not to be consulted first as to the extent they shall be taxed in return for all these great franchises granted, rather than burden the traffic with all it will bear? Is a policy which bases these rates on the true valuation of the railroad property not the best policy for both the carriers and the shippers, inasmuch as lower rates will in the long run bring greater returns than higher rates; and is it not wiser to intrust this great power to an impartial board who may and will act in the interest of all concerned than in the hands of interested parties who can see but one side of this question? If we are to have a commission to pass on such rates as the railroad pool may suggest, why not give this commission the primary power to fix rates in the first instance instead of conferring upon it the homeopathic function of an advisory board? Why, unless the railroads carry in all their well-sounding propositions, the ulterior design to exercise a controlling voice in the matter of fixing rates so that they may be high enough to suit their purposes without reference as to how they may affect the people?

Let us see what the courts have said on this subject. In the case of Ames Adel vs. The Union Pacific Railway Company, decided in 1894, "the Nebraska rate case," Judge Brewer used the following language:

> What is the test by which the reasonableness of rates is determined? This is not yet fully settled. Indeed, it is doubtful whether any single rule can be laid down, applicable to all cases. If it be said that the rates must be such as to secure to the owners a reasonable per cent on the money invested, it will be remembered that many things have happened to make the investment far in excess of the actual value of the property—injudicious contracts, poor engineering, unusually high cost of material, rascality on the part of those engaged in the construction and management of the property.
> These and many other things, as is well known, are factors which have largely entered into the investment with which many railroad companies stand charged. Now, if the public was seeking to take title to the railroad by condemnation, the present value of the property and not the cost is that which it would have to pay. In like manner it may be argued that when the legislature assumes the right to reduce rates, the rates so reduced can not be adjudged unreasonable, if under them there is earned by the railroad company a fair interest on the actual value of the property. It is not always easy to determine the value of railroad property, and if there is no other testimony in respect thereto than the amount of stock and bonds outstanding, or the construction account, it may be fairly assumed that one or the other of these represents it, and computation as to the compensatory quality of rates may be based upon such amounts.

From this decision we must infer that, if the actual value of the railroad property can not be ascertained by any direct means, the amount of stock and bonds may be followed as a guide, or the construction account, and that, at all events, a reasonable return upon the actual value of the railroad property is all the owners can require.

Recurring to railroad pooling, I beg to quote from a speech of Hon. Allen Fort, railroad commissioner from the State of Georgia, delivered in the convention of railroad commissioners held in Washington, May, 1894, as follows:

> I think the point we want to find in this question of pooling is in the arguments with which the road would induce us to approve of it. It means the practical abolition of competition in all branches of transportation at the points of competition. I wish it understood that in discussing trusts and monopolies I am not speaking of them in the sense in which the terms are often used, to deprive capital of its just rights, for corporate capital should be considered as sacred as that of the individual. But we do know that in this age, in this day, at this hour, if there is one particular thing above another from which this country is suffering it is monopoly, it is trusts. It is a day of trusts; consequently we find it a day of distrusts. And yet shall we legalize one of the most pernicious forms in which the trust can be made by recommending legalized pooling at points of competition? It seems to me that we will abandon one of the greatest principles that we hold on this subject of regulation.
> In my State it would be impossible to permit pooling, because our constitution prohibits it in expressed terms, in terms even stronger than the act of Congress. I could not, with my convictions upon the subject, be willing to recommend to this convention a departure from what I believe to be a sound principle, founded not only upon the constitution of the State of Georgia, but those of other States. I have read with interest the very able report submitted upon this question, and I fail to agree with my learned friend who thinks this clause in the act has no place there, that it is incongruous with it. To my mind it seems to be there logically, to be necessary to the very spirit of the law. The legalizing of pooling would tend to destroy the very competition which now exists among the railroads and which has been of so much advantage.
> The Interstate Commerce Commission should be invested with the rate-making power, the power to make a maximum and minimum rate. If it has not that power, Congress should confer it. Whatever is beyond the maximum or below the minimum would then be illegal.
> They would not at the points of competition fix the rate. They would not have time, with all their indefatigable industry, to determine whether or not the rates upon the thousands of articles upon which rates are fixed are just, or to fix the rates at the thousands of places in this great country; but if they had the rate-making power, the law would be almost self-executory. You could go to the courts, they could complain to the commission of the violation of rates that had already been established as just and reasonable, whereas they only determine now upon the rate fixed by the railroad companies themselves.

That would remove the difficulty in regard to pooling; but if we legalize it, if we take this step to give the sanction and approval of law to so convenient and common a means of combination, of promoting monopoly, we will strike down, to my mind, one of the greatest securities that the people have under railway regulation. It is in vain to talk of the facility with which they can practice a fraud upon the public by giving an advantage to this one or an advantage to this commodity or that locality, secretly or illegally. The opportunity would be equally as great if pooling were legalized. The very men who are regardless of the law and of the rights of his competitor would be equally regardless of their duty to other railroads and to the public, and still continue to the same extent to deceive and impose upon each other.

Why, it is a common thing to hear of these railroads complaining against each other. Take the Southern Railway and Steamship Association and I doubt not the Western Traffic Association and others throughout the land. They are great pooling combinations, in my opinion illegal (but that is not here for discussion now, but reduced to the last analysis that is what they are), and yet we find them constantly complaining of violations of these among themselves.

So I say, if their experience in this respect goes for anything, we can not evade the troubles that it is supposed will be gotten rid of by the legalizing of pooling.

It seems to me that if Congress repeals section 5 of the act to regulate commerce, it will have removed the last great barrier which now protects the people against corporate greed, and will have set a pernicious and powerful precedent for the legalizing of private socialism, which is a thousand times worse than outright state socialism, in that it permits combinations and trusts of private capital under a monopoly, primarily at least, for private gain, and thus sets a precedent most dangerous and far-reaching in its consequences by encouraging similar trusts in every private enterprise where private capital may choose to combine under the pretext of self-preservation, thus opening wide the flood gates of private avarice and corporate power.

Nothing would do more to hasten the change of our economic conditions from the competitive system to the collective system, and would furnish not only a powerful argument for the wildest socialist, but force the people to the adoption of state socialism in self-defense. If pooling among railways, who are quasi public functionaries, can be sanctioned, then, indeed, the legalizing of all private trusts would not only be consistent, but inevitable, and we might as well abandon the competitive idea in our economic conditions and go over, horse, foot, and dragoon, to private socialism of the worst form and quit caviling about oil trusts, sugar trusts, and coal trusts. Indeed, these exist principally through the discrimination and rebates made by trunk railways now, and would not only flourish more under a railroad pool, but receive a new impetus and legal status from the legalized railway pool,

I venture the opinion that the American people would never approve such a step and would soon take one in an opposite direction leading to state socialism, as of the preference between private and public socialism there can be little hesitation in favor of the latter. The question whether the classes or the masses should have the benefit of legal combination would soon resolve itself in favor of the masses, and it would not be long before every public enterprise, if not every private one, would fall under governmental control—revolutions do not travel backward—and the dreaded paternalism which now disturbs our dreams would be a reality. Whatever action Congress may take, let it not fall into this pitfall.

Such a course would indeed legalize the methods of socialism without tolerating its claim for equality of opportunity. It would result simply in a benefit to a privileged few at the expense of the many, and this under legal sanction. The great private trusts which are now outlawed, at least by public opinion, would be legally sanctified, and their methods of oppression upon labor and their brigandage upon commerce become a public virtue. While the trend of the times is indeed toward combination, let us at least not encourage it with legal approval in this direction.

I come now to the discussion of the question of Government ownership of the railways. If I had to choose between private ownership with legalized pooling and Government ownership, I would certainly prefer the latter, but I am not driven to this alternative, and still have the choice between regulation and Government ownership. But let us fairly scrutinize the latter without taking spasms at its mere mention. A great many of our people believe that it is the only solution of the railroad problem, and one of the great political parties of this country has embodied it as a plank in its national platform, and many of the brightest of our publicists openly advocate it in the leading American magazines and newspapers. Even some railroad men indorse it—it is true, more from a selfish standpoint—and its discussion has assumed a wide scope and an earnest character among all classes of our people.

Let us look first and see what are the relations of the governments of the world to the railroads. I can probably present this matter more strikingly and fully by reproducing a report from our Interstate Commerce Commission, under date of August 27, 1894, and which at the time was referred to the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce. It is as follows:

The Vice-President presented the following collection of statements from the Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission relative to foreign railway ownership and operation:

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., August 27, 1894.

SIR: In part compliance with the resolution of the Senate passed August 24, 1894, relating to railroad ownership by foreign governments, I have the honor to transmit herewith a collection of statements contained in various publications treating of foreign railway ownership and operation. The commission will hereafter furnish the Senate with such further information on the subjects embraced in the resolution as may be obtainable.

Respectfully,

WM. R. MORRISON, Chairman.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP OF RAILROADS.

This subject is treated in this paper under the following heads:

1. Relations of Governments to the railroads of the world.
2. The foregoing data tabulated.
3. Comparison of freight and passenger rates on government-owned railroads and on roads within the United States.
4. Views of various writers on the subject.

(1) Relation of governments to the railroads of the world.

ARGENTINE REPUBLIC.

The Government owned about 620 miles of railroad in or about the year 1893. In that year the total mileage was 8,053 miles.

AUSTRALASIA.

About five-sixths of the mileage in Australasia belongs to the various colonial governments. These roads were built principally with moneys derived from large loans negotiated by agents-general, and their value forms one of the principal assets for the public debt. The management of the Victorian and New South Wales railways having resulted in various abuses, they were, about the year 1884, placed under the direct management of a nonpartisan commission. In addition to the management of existing roads, this commission has charge of the construction of new lines.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

In Austria about 40 per cent of the railway mileage is owned and about 73 per cent is operated by the State. Upon the expiration of charters not exceeding ninety years, the lines, lands, and buildings of the companies revert to the Government, but the equipment remains the property of the private owners. Before a railway is opened it must be approved by the minister of commerce. The tariffs of State roads are fixed by the Government. Those of the companies are subject to revision by the Government every three years, and the Government has power to reduce rates if the net earnings exceed 15 per cent on capital.

BELGIUM.

About three-fourths of the railway mileage in Belgium is owned and operated by the State. The roads not owned by the Government will, under the terms of their charters, ultimately revert to it. Railway affairs are administered by a Government "department of railways, post-offices, and telegraph." The laws regulate tariffs. Railways are exempted from taxation.

BRAZIL.

The State owns about one-fourth of the total railway mileage, but this one-fourth does about one-half of the entire business.

CANADA.

About one-tenth of the total mileage of about 15,000 miles is owned and controlled by the Government. For the year 1892 the operation of the Government lines resulted in a loss of over $600,000.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE (ENGLISH SOUTH AFRICA).

All of the railroads are owned by the Government, except one of about 192 miles in Cape Colony.

CHILE.

About one-third of the railway mileage is owned by the State.

COLOMBIA.

The Government has granted subsidies to the railways with the understanding that, at the end of a certain period, they will become the property of the Government.

DENMARK.

The State owns and controls about three-fourths of the total mileage, which in 1892 was 1,289 miles.

EGYPT.

The railway system, covering about 1,225 miles, belongs to the Government.

FRANCE.

At the present date by far the larger portion (about five-sixths) of the French railway system is operated by private companies, each company serving a definite territory and being comparatively free from the competition of other lines. But the railroad properties are ultimately to become the property of the Government. This system is a mixed one of State and private ownership. The competition of the private lines compelled the Government to lease some of the State lines to the former. On account of the necessity for great additional taxation, the scheme of nationalization of the railway system was abandoned in 1883.

GERMANY.

In Germany nearly 90 per cent of the railway mileage is owned by the Government. Under the law, the Government is required to manage the railways in the interest of general traffic as a single system. It may cause the construction and equipment of roads and enforce uniform traffic and police regulations. Even the few private railways are controlled by State boards.

GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

The Government does not own any of the railways. There are stringent regulations provided by law and administered by the railway commission and board of trade. New lines cannot be constructed without the sanction of Parliament.

The act of 1844 provided that the Government should have the right to acquire any railroad constructed after its date by purchasing the same for a sum equal to twenty-five years' purchase of annual divisible profits, estimated on the average annual profits for the three years preceding the date of purchase. If, however, the average profits for such three years has been less than 10 per cent, and the company thought the purchase price based thereupon was inadequate because of the future prospects of the property, the matter was to be referred to arbitration. Under this law, however, the Government was not empowered to take branches or extensions of old lines constructed after the date of the act unless it took the whole system, if the company required it to do so.

This law, so far as it relates to the Government acquisition of railroads, has never been acted upon. Twenty-three years later (in 1867) a commission appointed by the Government to report on the subject stated: "We are of the opinion that it is inexpedient at present to subvert the policy which has hitherto been adopted of leaving the construction and management of railways to the free enterprise of the people, under such conditions as Parliament may think best to impose for the general welfare of the public."

GREECE.

The railways of Greece are nearly all owned and altogether managed by private companies.

GUATEMALA.

The Government owns and operates 30 of the 126 miles of railway in this country.

HOLLAND.

One-half of the railways belong to the State, but that one-half is worked by a private company.

INDIA.

Two thirds of the railways belong to the Government, and the other one-third, owned by private companies, is subsidized.

ITALY.

Italy has tried both State and private railroads, and has come to the conclusion that it is not advantageous for the State to own and operate the railways. The result was a reorganization of the whole railway system. Under the present system private companies operate the State roads under contract with the Government. The contracts run for sixty years, the Government or the companies having the option to terminate them at the end of twenty or forty years upon a two-year notice.

JAPAN.

Only a small per cent of the railway mileage is owned by the Government. When a charter is granted to a private company for a limited period under the ordinance of 1887, the Government has the right at its expiration to purchase the property at a price calculated upon the average price of the shares during the five years previous to the date of purchase. Prior to 1875 there appears to have been State, prefecture, and village railroads in Japan. State roads are maintained at national expense, but their regulation and repair are in the hands of the prefectures through which they pass. Prefecture roads are maintained by equal contributions from the General Government and particular districts or prefectures. Village roads serve petty local districts, and are maintained at their expense.

MEXICO.

The Mexican railways are owned and operated by private corporations. Nearly all have been built by American companies. But the charters granted to most of the railway companies contain a proviso allowing the Government to purchase the railways after the lapse of a named number of years.

NICARAGUA.

The few roads of this country are owned by the State.

NORWAY.

Owing to the topographical difficulties of the country, Norway has never, except a short line of 42 miles, had any other than State railways.

PARAGUAY.

Paraguay owns its railways.

PERU.

The railways are operated by private companies.

PORTUGAL.

About 62 per cent of the mileage is owned and operated by private companies. Most of them, however, have been aided by the Government through concessions and subsidies or guaranties. Where aid has been granted it has always been conditioned upon the roads reverting to the Government in ninety-nine years.

RUSSIA.

The Government is stated to own and operate about 40 per cent of the railway mileage. Nearly all the railways owned by private companies have received subsidies from the Government. The State is represented on boards of directors, and all expenditures, declarations of dividends, etc., must be recommended by the directors and approved by the Government.

SPAIN.

Mileage owned and operated by private companies.

SWEDEN.

In 1892 about one-third of the total mileage of 5,254 was owned by the State.

SWISS CONFEDERATION.

All the lines of railways in this country belong to private companies, but the Government has direct supervision over them.

TURKEY.

The railways of Turkey all belong to private companies.

UNITED STATES.

The National Government does not own or operate any of the railways. It is stated that several of the States have tried ownership in a limited way. Illinois constructed a road at a cost of $1,000,000, but disposed of it for $100,000; Indiana had a similar experience; Georgia owns a railroad, but has found it expedient to lease it to a private company; Pennsylvania constructed a railroad from Philadelphia to Columbia, but subsequently sold it. Massachusetts, Michigan, and several other States tried the experiment without success. (Kirkman.)

URUGUAY.

There are no State railways in Uruguay.

NOTE.—The above statements are based upon the Consular Reports, Mulhall's Dictionary of Statistics, Reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission, Statesman's Year Book, 1894, Reports of Bureau of American Republics, and various other authorities hereinafter cited.

*Includes 1,957 miles of local interest.

†Includes 96 miles, owned jointly by State and private companies.

NOTE.—Where information of the apportionment of mileage operated between the state and private companies could not be obtained, it has been assumed that each operate the mileage which they own.

From this it appears that the following countries do not own or operate railways, viz: Colombia, Great Britain and Ireland, Mexico, Paraguay, Peru, Spain, Switzerland, Turkey, United States, and Uruguay—10.

The following Governments own and operate practically all their railways, viz: Egypt and Nicaragua—2.

The following Governments own and operate some of the railways, viz: Argentina, Australasia, Austria-Hungary, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Cape of Good Hope, Chile, Denmark, France, Germany, Guatemala, India, Japan, Norway, Portugal, Russia, and Sweden—18.

The following Governments own part of the railways, but do not operate any, leasing all the present mileage to private companies, viz: Greece, Holland, and Italy—3.

Though not claimed to be accurate, it is believed that the foregoing summary presents an approximately correct statement of the relation of the various Governments to the railways.

The total railway mileage of the world is estimated in a recent issue of Archiv für Eisenbahnwesen at 406,416 miles on December 31, 1892.

(3) Comparison of freight and passenger rates on Government-owned roads and on roads in the United States.

The freight charges on the Australasian railways are considerably greater than on the lines in the United States. It is said, however, that there are circumstances which should be taken into consideration in comparing the charges of the two countries. The people here, nevertheless, are constantly clamoring for the reduction of the rates. The farmers in Victoria insist that it will not pay them to grow grain unless they can get a reduction of fully 50 per cent on the present rates.—Consular Reports, No. 97.

A word may be required as to American rates. No doubt we in Australia will never be able to obtain rates as low as those that prevail in the United States, our conditions being radically different; but the extraordinary thing is that the assertion should be persisted in that our Victorian rates are lower than those that are charged in America. The force of mendacity could scarcely further go. In one sense, there are no American rates to quote. There are a thousand and one railways in America, and each line has its own schedule, and any fancy list can be prepared.

The inquirer can only deal with averages, and taking averages there is no doubt possible. The current number of the Fortnightly Review is tolerably accessible to most people, and the inquirer has but to open the article by Mr. J. S. Jeans on the railway subject, and he will find the allegation that freights on the United States lines are the lowest in the world. Mr. Jeans adds: "There is no need for any controversy on this point. The fact is set out in the clearest possible light in the published accounts of the principal American railways. The Pennsylvania system may be taken as a typical case. Over a large portion of this vast system—the largest and most important on the face of the globe under one designation and control—the average ton-mile rate in 1890 was less than a farthing per ton per mile. The average ton-mile rate for the whole system was three-tenths of a penny. That is to say, that throughout this great organization the average for goods of all classes, first-class goods, second class, and so on, was just over a farthing per ton per mile, while in Victoria the average for all classes would be more like 3d. per ton per mile; and it is obvious that wheat and similar low-priced goods may be carried over the Pennsylvania lines at rates which appear to us to be nominal." * * * Still, when the average American rate for wheat is under one-fourth of a penny per ton per mile, and the average Victoria rate is 1d. per ton and over, the handicap appears to be excessive. (Extract from the Argus, published in the Province of Victoria, as contained in Consul-General Marratta's report of May 10, 1894, Consular Reports, Volume XLV, No. 167, page 579.)

The freight rates in the United States, are, in general terms, only five-eighths of those charged on the continent of Europe, and a little less than one-half of those which prevail in Great Britain.—Gen. Horace Porter, North American Review, 1891, volume 153, page 718.

The transportation charges in Russia are 40 per cent higher than in America. Working expenses there are 75 per cent of the gross receipts.—Consular Reports, volume 26, page 350, 1888.

Mulhall gives the working expenses at 57 per cent of gross receipts.

The following table furnishes a comparison of average passenger rates per mile:

The policy of giving the control of the railways to the State (in Australia) is very seriously questioned in many quarters. One of the principal objections to it is the amount of patronage it controls, and the liability to use such patronage for political purposes. Another objection is that under the State system the expenditures are greater and the receipts smaller than when under the management of private companies. It is urged, however, by those who support the State system that the reason Government-owned railways experience so much difficulty in making fair returns for the amount of capital invested is that as soon as a profit is shown the public insists upon concessions in rates or increased facilities, both of which are practically an amelioration of taxation. The difference between a State and a private railway is explained on the ground that as traffic develops, in one case, the public get immediate benefit from lower charges and greater facilities, and in the other, the shareholders obtain a larger dividend at the end of each year's working.—Consular Reports, 97.

The railways of Australia practically represent the assets for the national debts of each colony, and to-day would probably realize, if they were to be disposed of, the full amount of the national indebtedness. It is, however, improbable that the people concerned will ever allow these great possessions to pass into private hands, believing that they should be retained to open up and develop the resources of the colonies and aid in the material progress of Australia.

It is agreed, however, that to a certain extent the railway administration should be separated from politics. The construction and direction of new lines may well be left to Parliament to determine, but the management of the lines and control of the railways' daily working, it is held, are matters for skilled and capable railway managers, untrammeled by the exigencies that political considerations would often cause to influence the political mind.—Consular Reports, volume 45, No. 167, page 579.

[Extracts from The Railroad Problem, Adams, 1887.]

The Government of Belgium, meanwhile, in its turn, pressed by the competition of the private lines, found itself compelled to work its roads on regular "commercial principles." In order to get business it made special rates, and, if necessary, entered into joint-purse arrangements with its adversaries. (Page 99.)

Should the Belgian Government now adopt a policy of expansion and proceed to acquire the remaining lines of the system, it will enter upon the very doubtful experiment of exclusive State management. (Page 100.)

Meanwhile the whole drift of discussion tends away from the private ownership of French railroads and reliance on competition among them toward a closer connection between the railroads and the Government. (Page 108.)

Indeed, those managing the French railroad companies look with simple astonishment on the wild fluctuations in the railroad tariffs incident to the American method of operation, and they do not hesitate to say that if any similar outrages were perpetrated on the French people and business public by them the question of State ownership of railroads would immediately assume a new shape. Such proceedings would not be tolerated. (Page 108.)

The English, the Belgian, th French, and the German are the four great railroad systems. With many points in common, each has peculiar features deserving of careful study. In their political relations they are divided into two groups by a broad line of demarcation. On the one side of that line are the systems of the English-speaking race, based upon private enterprise and left for their regulation to the principles of laissez faire, the laws of competition and of supply and demand. On the other side of the line are the systems of continental Europe, in the creation of which the State assumed the initiative, and over which it exercises constant and watchful supervision. In applying results drawn from the experience of one country to problems which present themselves in another, the difference of social and political habit and education should ever be borne in mind. Because in the countries of continental Europe the State can and does hold close relations, amounting even to ownership, with the railroads, it does not follow that the same course could be successfully pursued in England or in America. The former nations are by political habit administrative, the latter are parliamentary; in other words, France and Germany are essentially executive in their governmental systems, while England and America are legislative. Now, the executive may design, construct, or operate a railroad; the legislative never can. A country, therefore, with a weak or unstable executive, or a crude and imperfect civil service, should accept with caution results achieved under a government of bureaus. Nevertheless, though conclusions can not be adopted in the gross, there may be in them much food for reflection. (Pages 115 and 116.)

Uncontrolled competition between railroads has been abandoned. The tendency of events is all in one direction. It varies simply in degree and as it is affected by the political habits and modes of thought of the nationalities. In one country the direct principle of exclusive State ownership is accepted, while in another a system of close public supervision is assuming shape.

Thus supervision, always increasing in efficiency, would seem to be the practical Anglo-Saxon solution of the problem, while upon the continent of Europe that solution is abandoned in favor of a purely governmental system. The paths diverge, but the end is the same—the restraint of an excessive competition resulting in a perpetual chaos. Order is evolved in different ways, but it is evolved at last. [An extract from Railway Practice, Alexander, 1887, pages 46-50.]

As to the argument that our own Government manages our postal affairs and generally with honesty and efficiency, I would say that there is such a radical difference between the relations to trade and commerce of the postal service and freight transportation that no parallel can be drawn. Letters and papers have no commercial value. Postal rates are uniform for all distances. No commercial rivalries are affected by them, and little money is involved in the operations of the Department but the salaries of the employees. But in the transportation of freight, and the rates charged upon it, every branch of agriculture, manufacture, and commerce, with their infinitely diversified rivalries, is intensely, vitally interested. Rates can not be uniform for all distances and nearly all articles, but there must be an infinite and frequently varying adjustment, or discrimination, and adaptation of rates to circumstances. * * * As to Professor Ely's reference to the Prussian governmental railroad management, * * * Prussia is small and finished. We are very large and growing. There it is a recognized governmental duty to look after and take care of the people. Here the people take care of themselves, and it is our theory that free competition will work out the best results possible to human nature.

There seems to be a general and well-founded belief that, while the management of the railways by the Government might remove many of the evils of corporate control, it would certainly, in our political system, cause others as great or greater. There are still some very respectable advocates of this system, who allege that it has proved a success in Europe. But the example of European railways can not be cited as conclusive for this country. The military considerations which govern the leading governmental railways in Europe are of no weight in this country, while the commercial purposes which are primary here are there secondary to the rapid concentration of troops at strategic points; nor does a comparison of their financial results with those of the American railways commend the plan. In Belgium the ratio of expenses to earnings is somewhat less on the state railways than on those of private companies, while in Germany the private railways have a slight advantage in this respect.

But, making allowance for the business which the Governments of these countries can put on their own roads at their own rates, the superiority of the private railways is marked, and confirms the theory, generally accepted in England and America, that in any business private enterprise, with free competition, furnishes more economical and efficient service to the public than the ownership and management by the State.

[Extracts from Railway Problems, Jeans, 1887.]

In all legislation that has taken place in reference to British railways since 1854 the possible ultimate acquisition of the system by the State has been steadily kept in view. (Page 468.)

If the postal and telegraph systems were properly taken under Government control, there seems much more reason why the railway system should be, since railways are not only used by all, but exercise a power and influence on our social and our business relations that no other single element can claim to do. (Page 457.)

In almost all European nations provision has been made for the ultimate acquisition of the railways as a whole by the nation and for the nation. (Page 456.)

Sir R. Hill gave the following, among other reasons, why railways should belong to the Government:

(a) A pecuniary gain to the State.
(b) A gain to shareholders and others in steadiness and security of income.
(c) Security against Parliamentary contests now so costly.
(d) A reduction (eventually large) in fares, freight, etc.
(e) Greater efficiency of management.

We know how public business is habitually mismanaged, and there is no instance, even among the foreign countries with the best civil service, of state railroad systems conducted on the American standard of efficiency. But a large section of the public, more or less misled as to the evidence, believes in state railroad ownership and desires to see it introduced into the United States.

[An extract from The Railways and the Traders, Acworth, 1891, preface, pages 6, 7.]

Now, I am no foe of government railways. On the contrary, I believe that in countries with a population less self-reliant than our own such a policy is necessary. In a country with a bureaucracy as well trained and as well organized as that of Prussia it may even be desirable. Nay, more, I am not concerned to deny that even here (England) state purchase might do something to bring up the worst railway services more nearly to the level of the best. But a careful study of the evidence has convinced me that in the long run state control ends in keeping down the best to the level of the worst, and that, taking them for all in all, the private railway companies of England and the United States have served the public better than the government railways of the Continent or of our Australian colonies, and, which is still more to the point, are likely to serve it better in the future.

[Extracts from The Working and Management of an English Railway, Findlay, 1889.]

The State purchase of railways would involve an objectionable amount of interference with the industries of the nation and with the character of the people. The Government would become the direct employer of a vast army of men of all classes, from laborers to highly-trained artisans, clerks, and officials. They must come in contact with trades unions, face the question of employer's liability, and all other difficult labor questions which from time to time agitate the industrial community, and at times they would even have to deal with strikes. (Page 235.)

All experience of the working and of the scale of expenditure of government departments is strongly opposed to the belief that so vast and difficult an undertaking as the administration of the railways of the country could be carried on economically and upon sound commercial principles by a department of state. (Page 236.)

It only remains to add that in France, where the experiment of ownership of railways by the State has been tried for many years past on a very considerable scale, an agitation is now growing up, as may be gathered from recent debates in the French Chambers, for the absolute sale of the state railways to private companies, on the grounds that the present system involves a very heavy annual loss to the exchequer, and that any advantages which may be expected to result from the ownership of the railways by the Government are not reaped by the public, but are applied to the furtherance of political objects. (Pages 236, 237.)

In Belgium, where, as before stated, the railways are worked as a department of the State, and the appointment of minister of railways is a political one, the patronage which lies in his gift is well known to be largely exercised for party purposes. Promotion in the service is entirely governed by consideration of the political tendencies of the individuals concerned, and when the minister is a Liberal he will systematically refuse to appoint or promote officials who are known to belong to the Clerical party; while, on the other hand, if a Clerical minister is in office, there is no hope of advancement for Liberals until their friends in turn succeed in power. (Page 237.)

In Germany, where there has been considerable experience of the plan of working the railways as a Government department, the financial result does not appear to be too encouraging. The railway department, it is true, figures in the budget with a large annual profit, but this is only apparent, for the Landtag is every year called upon to vote supplies to be expended on the railways far in excess of the so-called profit, notwithstanding which, loud complaints are heard of the want of sufficient plant for carrying on the working in efficient manner. (Page 237.)

[Extracts from Railway Rates and Government Control, Kirkman, 1892.]

The question of Government ownership and management of railroads has not been much discussed in the United States. There seems to be a tacit understanding among practical men that it would not be desirable. The Government itself has studiously discouraged such reference. (Page 236.)

Governmental management lacks spirit, alertness, and a desire to please (page 207). * * * It is nowhere the equal of private effort (page 209). * * * Its effect is to retard improvements, to prevent new enterprises, to lessen the interest of owner and manager in the comforts and conveniences of the people (page 217). * * * It is made up of about equal parts of business and politics, trade and theory, frankness and evasion, knowledge and ignorance, industry and sloth (page 223). * * * It is practiced more or less in many countries, not because the people thought it the best way, but because Government aid was necessary in the first instance to build the roads (page 224).

The highest good that can attach to Government intervention in a country whose people possess commercial spirit or enterprise is to be found in a wisely supervising body, such as the Board of Trade of Great Britain or the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States. (Page 232, note.)

In no instance has state ownership of railroads answered the expectation of those who advocated it from a belief that rates would be cheapened and facilities bettered thereby. (Page 233.)

The author of our interstate-commerce act (Hon. SHELBY M. CULLOM) found Government ownership and management of railroads in Germany anything but agreeable. He discovered that it greatly increased the number of employees and surrounded the service with tedious and harrassing regulations. (Page 250, note.)

There is [said he] at each station a small army of uniformed employees, who make more fuss about the arrival or departure of a train than one sees in a year's travel in the United States. If American railroads were to employ such a number of men, and pay them the current American rates of wages, the lines could not earn enough to pay them if traffic rates were doubled. * * * In Germany all is fuss and feathers. Every railway employee is a Government official, and there is enough red-tape to weary an American. (Chicago Post, September 24, 1891.) (Page 250.)

[Extracts from Railway Secrecy and Trusts, Bonham, 1890.]

But the power of the State must be clearly confined to supervision and control, and must involve no kind of State ownership or interest for profits. (Page 87.)

In the end, the essential function of a free government is restricted to the guardianship of political and industrial equality, and this guardianship necessarily involves judicial and impartial relations to the subject-matter of control. (Page 87.)

The Government can never secure a free field for competition to all the citizens where it is not disinterested. As well might we expect a judge to decide equally and fairly between litigants, where that judge is an interested party, as to expect a Government to preserve industrial equality where its interests are involved as a participant in profits. This principle does not preclude Government ownership where industrial competition is not a factor. The Government may own a navy without impairing the principle. Such ownership is not for profit. It may own and conduct a post-office; this is for convenience and without profit. For the like reason it may own and conduct an exclusive telegraph system. It has been the owner of vast untenanted lands in the West. They have never been dealt with as a private owner deals with his own property. (Page 88.)

[Extracts from the Report on the Relations of the Governments of the Nations of Western Europe to the Railways, by Simon Sterne, 1887.]

Personal and preferential rates have been so completely eliminated from railway tariffs in civilized European States that it may be said that substantially they no longer exist. (Page 42.)

In one particular, however, the European governments have been more just to the railway companies and more conservative of their interests than we have been in this country. They have coupled supervision and control with the recognition of the right to the undivided occupancy of a field, and have prevented the mere duplication of railways not called for by public necessity, and which had and have their origin solely in the desire to divide a profitable field with another railway. (Pages 42 and 43.)

This report refers to the danger there will be in Government ownership of the railways in the United States from the patronage attending the large personnel employed in railway enterprises.

The inference is drawn therefrom that for any Government like that of the United States, the officials of which are elective and their tenure of office dependent largely upon the popular will, either the ownership of railways or their very effectual control by a central authority would so add to the power and patronage of any political party in office that it would be difficult to displace it, and would therefore be a menace to our form of government. (Page 43.)

Moreover, an impediment to the acquisition ultimately by the Government of the United States of the railways of the country exists in the nature of our institutions themselves, insomuch as no constitutional power exists on the part of the General Government to acquire these railroads. (Page 44.)

[Extracts from The Railroad Question, Larrabee, 1893.]

The experiment of State ownership and management of railroads has been longest tried in Belgium, and with the best results. With an excellent service, the rates of the Belgium State roads are the lowest in Europe. Their first-class passenger tariffs are, next to the zone tariff recently adopted on the State roads of Hungary, the lowest in the world, and are, for the same distance, lower than those of American roads. (Page 409.)

In France and Prussia the State service is superior to that of the private companies. (Pages 409 and 410.)

Ex-Governor Larrabee, in this work, also points to the demoralizing influence in case of Government ownership of railroad employees in politics. (Page 412.)

Mr. T. B. Blackstone, president of the Chicago and Alton Railroad Company, declares in favor of Government ownership of roads on the ground that by this means the railroads could dispose of their property to the Government at a price representing several times their original cost, or several times the cost of duplication. (Page 413.)

[Extracts from Railroad Transportation, Hadley, 1893.]

In judging the railroad policy of Belgium by its results, all must unite in admitting that they are in many respects extraordinarily good. What their average rates are we have already seen. The passenger rates are lower than anywhere else in the world, except, perhaps, on some East Indian railroads. The freight rates are much lower than anywhere else in Europe. Nominally, they are about the same as in the United States. Practically, they are lower for almost any given service, because Belgium does not have the enormous long-distance traffic which brings down the average in the United States. (Page 216.)

While not withholding the freest praise from the Belgium system, we may fairly ascribe much of its success to other causes than enlightened State management or deliberate public policy. (Page 218.)

There is a strong popular feeling, to a large extent unsuspected by those in authority, in favor of Government ownership of railroads as a system. No one can have much to do with the more thoughtful workingmen without finding how strong that feeling is and what hopes are based upon it. The fact that the question is not more under discussion must not blind us to the fact that forces are at work which may prove all but revolutionary when the question actually does come up under discussion. If it be true that Government railroad ownership would be a most serious political misfortune for the United States, we must be prepared to meet the danger with our eyes open. Unless we are able to face it intelligently and to show reason for our action, the widespread feeling in its favor will prove too strong for us. It may not come for many years, but the lessons of the Granger movement show plainly enough what forces will lie behind it when it does come. (Page 258.)

MISCELLANEOUS.

The people of England, proud of their commercial ability, and jealous of their commercial liberties, spurn the idea of governmental ownership or management of the railroads.—Joseph Nimmo, jr.

If ever American social ideas be ripe for the ownership and operation of railways by the State, then it will be time for a change of policy; at present the ideas of the Republic are not compatible with state socialism as applied to railways. If the United States will do justice between them and the people, it will do all that society expects for awhile.—The Union Pacific Railway, Davis, 1894.

The zone tariff systems of Hungary and Austria constitute the most important reform of modern times in the administration of the passenger traffic by railway. It was inaugurated in 1889, and its object was to encourage long-distance travel between the capital and the provinces, the theory being that the increased volume of travel would fully compensate for the lower charges to individuals. Each railway is divided into sections called zones, and all the railways of Hungary have a common center at Budapest. The zones are established to and from that center. Passenger rates are fixed, not per mile or per kilometer, but at so much per zone, the charge for every fraction of a zone being the same as for a full zone, thus bearing some analogy to the practice of grouping rates in freight traffic. As each zone constantly increases in length over that immediately preceding it, the effect of the system is evidently a constantly diminishing rate per mile or per kilometer in proportion to distance traveled.—Railroad Regulation in Foreign Countries, appendix to Fourth Annual Rep., I. C. C., page 334 et seq.

Regulation through State ownership has been practically unknown in the United States. It is of foreign origin and is foreign to the character of our institutions. The time may come when the people of the United States will be forced to consider the advisability of placing the railways of the country completely under the control of the General Government, as the postal service is, and as many believe the telegraph service should be. This would seem to be the surest method of securing the highest perfection and greatest efficiency of the railroad system in its entirety, and the best method of making it an harmonious whole in its operation and of bringing about that uniformity and stability of rates which is the greatest need of trade and commerce. But the dangers to be apprehended from the giving of such vast additional power to the Government will always prove a formidable barrier to the adoption of such a policy, and this committee sees no necessity for considering its advantages or disadvantages until other methods of regulation more American in spirit have at least been given a trial and have proved unsatisfactory.

Nor is it deemed important to investigate in detail the experience of those European nations in which the policy of state ownership or management in one form or another has prevailed.—The report of the Senate Select Committee on Interstate Commerce, 1886.

The difference between American and foreign railways is very great, and the advantages are all on the side of the American railroad. The English is better than the continental railway and more progressive, and the reason seems to be in state ownership. The nearer you get to governmental proprietorship in the lines the more uncomfortable and old-fogy and nonprogressive they remain.—Chauncey M. Depew, Railway Review, 1887, page 668.

In my judgment there is no adequate necessity for our country to try that which I think would be a dangerous experiment of the Government in assuming the enormous burden of debt which the acquisition of all the railroads would involve, and to engage in a business that requires a force of nearly 1,000,000 men. * * * The necessity should be the most extreme before such enormous power and working force should be added to that which the General Government already has. * * * As a general proposition rates are low. * * * Regulation under the law, State and national, is working out its designed result in correcting evils that had crept into railroad administration. * * * In a word, without stating further reasons, I do not believe that transportation by common carriers, or the interests of commerce, will be improved by Government ownership and operation of railroads. The railroads themselves, as artificial persons, would undoubtedly be benefited in a majority of cases by Government assumption, but I would not take the risk of it.—Interstate Commerce Commissioner Veazey: Interview in the Washington Star, July 21, 1894.

The railroads are tyrants, they dominate this public, they purchase legislators, corrupt judiciaries, rule us with a rod of iron, is the popular cry. What is the remedy? Why, make them still stronger, make them the very Government itself. (Page 171.)

At present, utterly depraved as our railways are, and skillful as the high-priced legal talent they monopolize, they do, sometimes, pay for our baggage when they smash it, our cattle when they kill them, our freight when they destroy or mislay it, for our legs and arms and eyes when they maim us. I do not know whether all this would be done with a greater or less alacrity under a system of government-controlled railways. But I think I do know that the more paternal a government becomes, it is apt to take rather less than more care of the individual subject. (Page 173.)

The fairest plan would seem to be, if the railways were to be purchased at all, to enact that when any railroad company had paid its stockholders a certain agreed dividend for a certain number of years, then the Government should purchase its entire line and plant at a valuation of its stock based upon the payment of such dividends. If any plan were practicable, I think this plan would be. And if any plan of Government railway purchase could ever be just and honest to the involuntary venders, I think this one might be made so. (Page 174.)

[Extracts from National Consolidation of Railways, 1893, Lewis.]

A very large part of the social leadership of this country, instead of being a conservative force against the encroachments of the railway system, as in England, here casts its strength in favor of that system. So that consolidations of railway power which might be harmless in England, because counterbalanced by the power of the nobility, would be terribly dangerous in this country, where the force of wealthy and powerful families is directly opposite, and is cast into the scale of the railroad power. (Page 146.)

Thus, on account of radical differences both in the social organization and in the political constitution and form of government, a world-wide difference exists in the effect which the same consolidation of railway power under private ownership would exert in this country and in England. That which might be there safe would be here exceedingly dangerous, and in the end practically subversive of our republican form of government. (Page 148.)

If the National Government should buy up the roads, while nominally it would own them, in fact the ownership would be in the individuals and institutions furnishing the money to buy the bonds which the Government must issue to purchase the roads. Nor is governmental control necessarily the best method of managing the railroads. It might be the worst possible method if under the control of a corrupt and unscrupulous coterie of politicians. In such a case neither property nor business interests nor commercial or political liberty would be safe. (Page 207.)

The objection to governmental control on the ground of danger in our political affairs is not obviated by permitting this control to be left in the hands of a few private citizens. In fact, carefully analyzed, the objection will be seen to be based on the power which so vast an aggregate of wealth in one line of business, capable of being so easily controlled toward one object, inevitably creates. (Page 253.)

And in reply to the point made against Government ownership, that the railroad system would exercise too great an influence in our politics, I answer that the railroads now exercise a most dangerous and often corrupt influence in our politics, both State and national. (Page 260.)

In every State of the Union railroad influence is powerful, if not dominant, in its politics, and it is doubtful whether, if the Government should purchase the railroads their influence in politics would be any greater than it is now. The concentration of this influence, however, in national politics, with the vast power which so great a number of officeholders would exert in a national canvass, would make this influence exceedingly dangerous. (Page 267.)

[An extract from National Railways: An Argument for State Purchase, by James Hole, 1893, pages 10 and 11. (English.)]

As governments improve more public work can be intrusted to them, and they in turn are improved by it. The process is gradual. Thus it happens that individuals make a highway or a bridge at their own cost, and as recompense charge a toll. In time this is found to be an uncertain, slow, and costly process, and the community makes its own roads and bridges. The post-office was started as a private enterprise, and if it had remained one it would never have reached its present magnificent development. The telegraphs have followed this example. The adaptation of it, the telephone, will do the same. Gas, water supply, tramways, are falling under municipal ownership. Electric lighting is now in the private or company enterprise stage, but the examples of Bradford and St. Pancras (about to be followed in other places) show that this, too, is likely to fall within the sphere of municipal government. And when these public improvements are taken out of private ownership, those who led the way should be justly, even liberally, compensated.

So, too, railways fall under the class of things that the state ought to own in the public interest. It is admitted that private enterprise originated and perfected them, that it found the capital and energy to spread them over the country. The fair presumption, however, is that railroads, like all other roads, should be under public authority, and this is confirmed by practical experience. In other words, that to secure the full advantages of which the railway system is capable, it should be in the ownership of the state, as the trustee of the public.

Since this report was issued there have been some slight changes in the relations of the governments to their railroads. For instance, in Switzerland the Federal Legislature has adopted a proposition for state ownership. But upon the whole, the general relations of the different governments of the world to the railroads remain as they existed at the time of said report.

Can it be said in the face of these statistics and views of various writers on this subject that this country is ready to seriously consider the question of the Government ownership of railroads? I think not. Not, in my opinion, until all the methods of regulation have been fairly tried and failed. Should the National Government enter upon an experiment so uncertain in its results and so fraught with danger to its institutions? I confess the longer the present chaos in the conduct of our railway business is permitted to exist the nearer shall we approach the question of state ownership, and no time is to be lost in inaugurating a stringent regulation of the railways by Federal and State authority to avert this crisis.

In what, then, is this regulation to consist in order to bring about order out of the present state of confusion, and to protect the people against further abuses, and to secure stability and uniformity of rates alike just and reasonable to the railways and the people?

I answer that it consists in the strengthening of the present Interstate Commerce Commission, by investing it with legislative powers to fix and maintain maximum and minimum rates in freight and passenger traffic; with general administrative powers to regulate interstate commerce in all its details, making its orders, reports, and findings conclusive and lawful until they are challenged in the courts and found to be unlawful.

To show that Congress has this power, I beg to offer the following decisions and precedents of the courts:

POWER OF CONGRESS OVER INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Congress has power "to constitute tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court." (Cons. U. S., section 8, clause 9.)

To regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and with the Indian tribes. (Cons. U. S., section 8, clause 3, Article I.)

The making and fixing of rates is a legislative and not a judicial function, and the decisions are uniform in declaring that statutes creating railroad commissions, and giving them the power to make and fix rates, are not unconstitutional as delegating a legislative power which belongs only to the legislature itself. (8 Am. and Eng. Ency. of Law, 911; R. R. vs. Dey, 4 Ry. and Corp. L. J., 465; Granger Cases, 94 U. S., 113-187; State vs. R. R. Co., 37 N. W., 782; State vs. R. R. Co., 35 N. W., 118; 36 Ib., 306; Tilley vs. R. R. Co., 5 F. R., 641; Georgia R., etc., Co., vs. Smith, 70 Geo., 694; N. Y. and N. E. R. R. Co. vs. Town of Bristol, 151 U. S., 556; Reagan vs. F. L. and T. Co., 154 U. S., 362, and cases quoted; Ames vs. Un. Pac. Ry. Co., 64 F. R., 165.

When the law has confided to a special tribunal the authority to hear and determine certain matters arising in the course of its duties, the decision of that tribunal, within the scope of its authority, is conclusive upon all others. (Johnson vs. Towsley, 13 Wall., 72.)

The legislature's determination, either directly or indirectly, of what is reasonable is conclusive, subject only to charter rights and to the fact that the rates established will give some compensation to the carrier. (Attorney-General vs. Old C. R. Co., 22 L. A. R., 112; C. and N. W. R. Co. vs. Dey, 35 F. R., 866.)

The power to regulate is to prescribe the rule by which the commerce is to be governed. This power, like all others vested in Congress, is complete in itself, may be exercised to its utmost extent, and acknowledges no limitations other than are prescribed in the Constitution. If, as has already been understood, the sovereignty of Congress, though limited to specified objects, is plenary as to those objects, the power over commerce with foreign nations and among the several States is vested in Congress as absolutely as it would be in a single government having in its constitution the same restrictions in the exercise of the power as are found in the Constitution of the United States. (Gibbons vs. Ogden, 9 Wh., 1, 197.)

It is obvious that the Government, in regulating commerce with foreign nations and among the States, may use means that may also be employed by a State in the exercise of its acknowledged powers—that, for example, of regulating commerce within a State. (Gibbons vs. Ogden, 9 Wh., 204.)

The power to regulate commerce * * * amounts to nothing more than a power to limit and restrain it at pleasure. (Gibbons vs. Ogden, 9 Wh., 227.)

It may be doubted whether any of the evils proceeding from the feebleness of the Federal Government contributed more to that great revolution which induced the present system than the deep and general conviction that commerce ought to be regulated by Congress. It is not, therefore, matter of surprise that the grant should be as extensive as the mischief and should comprehend all foreign commerce and all commerce arising among the States. (Brown vs. Maryland, 12 Wh., 446.)

The power to regulate commerce includes that of punishing all offenses against commerce. (U. S. vs. Coombs, 12 Pet., 72.)

The design and object of that power, as evinced in the history of the Constitution, was to establish a perfect equality amongst the several States as to commercial rights, and to prevent unjust and invidious distinctions which local jealousies or local and partial interests might be disposed to introduce and maintain. (Veazie vs. Moor, 14 How., 574.)

Commerce is a term of the largest import. * * * The power to regulate it embraces all the instruments by which such commerce may be conducted. (Welton vs. Missouri, 91 U. S., 280.)

The power conferred upon Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States is not confined to the instrumentalities of commerce known or in use when the Constitution was adopted, but keeps pace with the progress of the country, and adapts itself to the new developments of time and of circumstances. It was intended for the government of the business to which it relates at all times and under all circumstances; and it is not only the right but the duty of Congress to take care that intercourse among the States and the transmission of intelligence are not obstructed or unnecessarily encumbered by State legislation. (Pa. Tel. Co. vs. W. U. Tel. Co., 96 U. S., 9.)

The power to regulate that commerce * * * vested in Congress is the power to prescribe the rules by which it shall be governed—that is, the conditions upon which it shall be conducted. * * * The power also embraces within its control all the instrumentalities by which that commerce may be carried on, and the means by which it may be aided and encouraged. (Gloucester Ferry Co. vs. Penn., 114 U. S. 203.)

When a commodity has begun to move as an article of trade from one State to another, commerce in that commodity between the States has commenced. (The Daniel Ball, 10 Wall., 565.)

But this movement does not begin until the articles have been shipped or started for transportation from the one State to the other. (Coe vs. Errol, 116 U. S., 517.)

This species of legislation is one which must be, if established at all, of a general and national character. (Wabash Rwy. Co. vs. Ill., 118 U. S., 577.)

For the regulation of commerce as thus defined there can be only one system of rules applicable alike to the whole country; and the authority which can act for the whole country can alone adopt such a system. (County of Mobile vs. Kimball, 102 U. S., 691.)

The power to regulate commerce embraces a vast field, containing not only many but exceedingly various subjects quite unlike in their nature. (Cooley vs. Board of Wardens, 12 How., 299.)

The power to regulate commerce among the several States is granted to Congress in terms as absolute as is the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations. (Brown vs. Houston, 114 U. S., 622.)

The uses of railroad corporations are public, and therefore they are subject to legislative control in all respects necessary to protect the public against danger, injustice, and oppression. (N. Y. and N. E. R. Co. vs. Bristol, 151 U. S., 556.)

Congress has plenary power, subject to the limitations imposed by the Constitution, to prescribe the rule by which commerce among the several States is to be governed, and may, in its discretion, employ any appropriate means, not forbidden by the Constitution, to carry into effect, and accomplish the objects of, a power given to it by the Constitution. (I. C. C. vs. Brimson, 154 U. S., 447.)

The making and fixing of rates by either a legislature directly or by a commission do not work a deprivation of property without due process of law. (Munn vs. Ill., 94 U. S., 113; Davidson vs. New Orleans, 96 U. S., 97; Stone vs. F. L. and T. Co., 116 U. S., 307; Dow vs. Beidelman, 125 U. S., 680; Minneap. and St. L. R. Co. vs. Beckwith, 129 U. S., 26, and cases cited; Budd vs. New York, 143 U. S., 517; N. Y. and N. E. R. Co. vs. Town of Bristol, 151 U. S., 556; Reagan vs. F. L. and T. Co., 154 U. S., 362.)

The State does not lose the right to fix the price because an individual voluntarily undertakes to do the (public) work. (Budd vs. N. Y., 143 U. S., 517.)

The Nebraska statute fixing maximum rates is not obnoxious to the fourteenth amendment. (Ames vs. Un. Pac. Ry. Co., 64 F. R., 165.)

The compelling of railway companies to comply with the order of railroad commissioners regulating rates is due process of law. (8 Am. and Eng. Ency. of Law, 911; Chicago, etc., R. Co. vs. Becker, 32 F. R., 849; L. and N. R. Co. vs. R. R. Com., 16 Am. and Eng. R. Cas., 1; Oregon R. Com. vs. Oregon R. and N. Co., 35 Am. and Eng. R. Cas., 542; State vs. C., M. and St. P. R. Co., 37 N. W., 782; Stone vs. Natchez, 62 Miss., 646; Stone vs. Trust Co., 116 U. S., 307; State vs. Fremont, etc., R. Co., 32 Am. and Eng. R. Cas., 426; People vs. N. Y., L. E. and W. R. Co., 104 N. Y., 58; State vs. R. R. Co., 37 Conn., 153.

The principal objects of the interstate-commerce act were to secure just and reasonable charges for transportation. * * * (I. C. C. vs. B. & O. R. R. Co., 145 U. S., 263.)

It is difficult to perceive how the power to fix and regulate the charges for such transportation can be considered in any other light than that of a power to regulate commerce. (Ill. C. R. Co. vs. Stone, 20 F. R., 463.)

It is not doubted that Congress has the power to go beyond the general regulations of commerce which it is accustomed to establish and to descend to the most minute directions if it shall be deemed advisable. (Cooley, Const. Lim., 732, quoted with approval by Mr. Justice Field in the case of Gloucester Ferry Co. vs. Com. of Pa., 114 U. S., 196.)

That this power to regulate by fixing charges for interstate transportation is vested solely in Congress by Article I, section 8, paragraph 3, of the Constitution of the United States is, in my opinion, equally well settled by numerous decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. (Mobile & O. R. Co. vs. Sessions, 28 F. R., 592.)

Several of the State statutes, under State constitutions containing nearly identical provisions on the subject as the Federal Constitution, allowing State railroad commissions to make and fix railway rates for such States, which said rates were to be operative until set aside by the courts, have been upheld as valid and constitutional by the United States Supreme Court. (See P. & A. R. Co. vs. State, 3 L. R. A., 661, with extensive notes.)

This Federal commission has assigned to it the duties, and performs for the United States in respect to that interstate commerce, committed by the Constitution to the exclusive care and jurisdiction of Congress, the same functions which State commissioners exercise in respect to local or purely internal commerce, over which the States appointing them have exclusive control. Their validity in their respective spheres of operation stands upon the same footing. The validity of State commissioners, invested with powers as ample and large as those conferred upon the Federal commission, have not been successfully questioned when limited to that local or internal commerce over which the States have exclusive jurisdiction; and no valid reason is seen for doubting or questioning the authority of Congress, under its sovereign and exclusive power to regulate commerce among the several States, to create like commissions for the purpose of supervising, investigating, and reporting upon matters or complaints connected with or growing out of interstate commerce. What one sovereign may do in respect to matters within its exclusive control the other may certainly do in respect to matters over which it has exclusive authority. (Ky. and Ind. Bridge Co. vs. L. and N. R. Co., 2 I. C. Rep., 380.)

The power granted to Congress to regulate commerce is necessarily exclusive whenever the subjects of it are national or admit only of one uniform system or plan of regulation throughout the country. * * * In the matter of interstate commerce the United States are but one country, and are and must be subject to one system of regulation and not to a multitude of systems. (Robbins vs. Shelby Co., etc., 120 U. S., 489; Stoutenburgh vs. Hennick, 129 U. S., 141.)

Congress may, under certain conditions, reduce the rates of fare on the Union Pacific Railroad, if unreasonable, and fix and establish the same by law. (12 Stat. L., 497, sec. 18. This statute is discussed by Mr. Justice Brewer in Ames vs. Un. Pac. Ry. Co., 64 F. R., 165, and held not to conclude the State of Nebraska from fixing rates until Congress takes action.)

This act (of Colorado) was intended to apply to intrastate traffic the same wholesome rules and regulations which Congress two years thereafter applied to commerce between the States. (Un. Pac. Ry. Co. vs. Goodridge, 149 U. S., 680.)

The Interstate Commerce Commission is an administrative board, and the courts are only to be resorted to when the commission prefers to enforce the provisions of the statute by a direct proceeding in the court or when the orders of the commission have been disregarded. (I. C. C. vs. C., N. O. and T. P. Ry. Co., 162 U. S., 184.)

The entire commerce of the United States, foreign and interstate, is subject to the provisions of the act of Congress to regulate commerce. (Tex. and Pac. Ry. Co. vs. I. C. C., 162 U. S., 197.)

Upon the power of legislatures to fix tolls, rates, or prices, see note to case of Winchester and L. Turnpike R. Co. vs. Croxton, 33 L. R. A. 177.

A statute imposing a penalty for charging more than just and reasonable compensation for the services of a carrier, without fixing any standard to determine what is just and reasonable, thus leaving the criminality of the carrier's act to depend on the jury's view of the reasonableness of a rate charged, is in violation of the constitutional provision against taking property without due process of law. (L. and N. R. Co. vs. Kentucky, 33 L. R. A., 209.)

Penalties can not be thus inflicted at the discretion of a jury. * * * The legislature can not delegate this power to a jury. If it can declare it a criminal act for a railroad corporation to take more than a "fair and just return" on its investments, it must, in order to maintain the validity of the law, define with reasonable certainty what would constitute such "fair and just return." (L. and N. R. Co. vs. R. R. Com., 19 F. R., 679.)

The Supreme Court of the United States, in Railroad Commission Cases, 116 U. S., 336, refers to the last-named case and substantially approves it.

Although a statute has been held to be unconstitutional which left it to the jury to determine whether or not a charge was excessive and unreasonable, in order to ascertain whether a penalty is recoverable, yet, where the action is merely for recovery of the illegal excess over reasonable rates, this is a question which is a proper one for a jury. (8 Am. and Eng. Ency. of Law, 935.)

The Iowa railroad commission act was attacked for uncertainty on the ground that it did not prescribe what should constitute a reasonable rate; but as the statute declared that the rate fixed by the commission should be prima facie evidence that it was reasonable, although the accused could show in defense that it was not reasonable, the supreme court of the State held that the statute was sufficiently definite, since the rate was fixed, although it was subject to attack in the courts. To the claim that the commissioner's rate would not secure the accused from conviction if it was excessive the court declared that the State was precluded from denying that the commissioner's rate was a reasonable one. (Bur. C. R. and N. R. Co. vs. Dey, 12 L. R. A. 436.)

The same decision in substance was made on this question by Judge Brewer, then of the United States circuit court, in the case of C. and N. W. R. Co. vs. Dey, 35 Fed. Rep., 866.

The Illinois act providing that a charge by a railroad company of more than reasonable rates shall constitute extortion is held to be sufficiently definite when construed with another section which provides that the railroad commission shall make a schedule of reasonable maximum rates. (C., B. and Q. R. Co. vs. People, 77 Ill., 443.)

And the validity of this provision of the Illinois statute has been further established by the Illinois supreme court. (See C., B. and Q. R. Co. vs.

Jones, 149 Ill., 361, 24 L. R. A., 141; Stone vs. F., L. and T. Co., 116 U. S., 307, deciding the same way the Mississippi statute.)

The Georgia statute is not violated unless the rates charged exceed those fixed by the commission. (Sorrell vs. Cent. R. R., 75 Ga., 500.)

But in order to constitute a crime the act must be one which the party is able to know in advance whether it is criminal or not. The criminality of an act can not depend upon whether a jury may think it reasonable or unreasonable. (Tozer vs. U. S., 52 F. R., 917.)

An inquiry whether rates of carriers are reasonable or not is a judicial act; but to prescribe rates for the future is a legislative act. That Congress has transferred to any administrative body the power to prescribe a tariff of rates for carriage by a common carrier is not to be presumed or implied from any doubtful and uncertain language. (I. C. C. vs. C., N. O. and T. P. R. Co., 167 U. S., 479.)

In the case of Munn vs. Illinois, Ninety-fourth United States supra, the Supreme Court of the United States, after a thorough review of the American and English authorities, has laid down the following fundamental principles governing public carriers and other quasi public institutions:

1. Under the powers inherent in every sovereignty, a government may regulate the conduct of its citizens toward each other, and, when necessary for the public good, the manner in which each shall use his own property.

2. It has, in the exercise of these powers, been customary in England from time immemorial, and in this country from the first colonization, to regulate ferries, common carriers, hackmen, bakers, millers, wharfingers, auctioneers, innkeepers, and many other matters of like quality, and in so doing to fix a maximum charge to be made for services rendered, accommodations furnished, and articles sold.

3. The fourteenth amendment to the United States Constitution does not in any wise amend the law in this particular.

4. When the owner of property devotes it to a use in which the public has an interest, he in effect grants to the public an interest in such use, and must to the extent of that interest submit to be controlled by the public.

5. The limitation by legislative enactment of the rate of charges for services rendered in an employment of a public nature, or for the use of property in which the public has an interest, establishes no new principle in the law, but only gives a new effect to an old one.

Thus the highest court has permanently established the broad principle that the public have the right to regulate charges in all enterprises effected with a public use. To this doctrine all the courts have steadfastly adhered. In this leading case it was also held that the courts had no right to interfere with the rates fixed by the lawmaking power. This doctrine, however, has been since somewhat qualified in the case of Reagan vs. Trust Company (154 U. S., 412) and other cases there cited, where it is held that when rates are confiscatory the courts may so declare and relegate the matter back to the lawmaking power for new rates, by which a reasonable profit is left to the carrier. But the principle that the legislative power, either directly, or indirectly through a commission, can fix rates of freight and passenger traffic within this constitutional limitation has been uniformly upheld in all the decisions of the United States Supreme Court upon this subject. In a recent case, that of Livingston vs. Sanford (164 U. S., 578), the court uses the following language:

> We could not say that the act was unconstitutional because the company (as is alleged and admitted) could not earn more than 4 per cent on its capital stock.
> It can not be said that a corporation is entitled as of right and without reference to the interest of the public to realize any given per cent on capital stock.
> When the question arises whether the legislature has exceeded its constitutional power in prescribing the rates to be charged by a corporation controlling a public highway, stockholders are not the only persons whose rights or interests are to be considered. The rights of the public are not to be ignored.

The court further says:

> The public can not properly be subjected to unreasonable rates in order simply that stockholders may earn dividends. * * * If a corporation can not maintain such a highway and earn dividends for stockholders, it is a misfortune for it and them which the Constitution does not require to be remedied by imposing unjust burdens upon the public.

In the case of Chicago vs. Wellman (143 U. S., 339), where the act of the Wisconsin legislature fixing railroad fares at 2 cents per mile was challenged, the courts say:

> Before the court would declare such an act unconstitutional because the rates prevented stockholders receiving any dividend or bondholders any interest, the court must be fully advised as to what was done with the earnings; otherwise by exorbitant or unreasonable salaries or in some other improper way the company might tax the public with unreasonable charges. Unless such things are negatived by proof of reasonable salaries and expenses, or if the record is silent, the legislative rate will be sustained.

This principle was reaffirmed in Regan vs. Trust Company (U. S., supra). In Dowe vs. Beidelman (125 U. S., 680) it was held that rates which would pay only 1½ per cent on the original cost of the road were not illegal when the road is held by a reorganized company or its trustees after foreclosure. Even in charter exemptions it has been held that provisions in a railroad charter permitting the company from time to time to fix rates, etc., does not constitute a contract restricting the legislature from the power of fixing or reducing charges. (Stone vs. Farmers' Company, 116 U. S., 307; Stone vs. Illinois, id., 349; 134 U. S., 418; 108 U. S., 526; 94 U. S., 164; 132 U. S., 75.)

In short, the United States Supreme Court has declared that the railroads are chartered and built for the public benefit, and that the pecuniary profit of the owners is purely incidental.

It is a common mistake which some people still make, to look upon railways solely as the private property of the owners. These people forget that the railways are connected with the public interest, that they are quasi public corporations, and that their freight and passenger charges partake of the nature of public taxation, which is always subject to legislative control; that the interest of the public is paramount, and that the maxim "Suprema lex salus populi" is the true foundation upon which they exist.

It follows therefore that Congress has not only authority to delegate its power of fixing rates to a commission, but that it can invest this commission with power to examine and look into the character of the expenditures and management of the railways, and limit them to a reasonable net profit on the real value of their properties, without taking into account watered stock and bonds, exorbitant salaries, illegal disbursements or lobbying, and paying election and newspaper expenses, as well as all other extravagant expenditures. If we estimate the actual value of all railroad properties in this country in round figures at, say, $5,000,000,000, and their gross annual earnings in round figures at $1,000,000,000, we have a gross income of 20 per cent on said actual value, a higher gross profit than any legitimate business yields in this country.

Most of these earnings are expended for operating expenses, amounting, in round numbers, to $700,000,000. It would not only be to the interest of the public but that of the investor in railroad properties to have this item of expenditure brought under a system of thoroughgoing public accounting, when it would be found that much of this enormous expenditure was unwarranted and extravagant.

It must be remembered that this is a larger sum by $200,000,000 than that which is expended annually for the maintenance of the National Government, and includes salaries to officials in many instances which are double those paid by a single State to its governor and all of its other executive officers, and sometimes ten times what such State pays its chief executive. It also includes other large amounts for illegal expenditures, such as lobbying, running newspapers, and election expenses.

It is the right of the people to be informed of the character and amount of these expenditures for operating the railways and to have those which are illegal discarded, in the estimate of fixing rates on freight and passengers. This power of Congress to regulate commerce extends also to the matter of classification of freights. Under the present practice of diversified classification by the railways in different sections of the country, much serious dissatisfaction is occasioned among shippers. Charges of unjust discriminations between rival communities or kindred articles are of frequent occurrence, without adequate means of prevention or regulation on the part of the Interstate Commerce Commission. It should be the object of the law to secure to the public impartial treatment on behalf of the railways in this respect.

In fact it is impossible to intelligently fix rates until some system of uniform classification has been established. It is admitted on the part of the railways that without legislative initiative the railways can never be induced to agree upon the work of classification, which they confess is highly desirable.

The interchange of traffic between connecting lines and the continuous carriage of freights from the place of shipment to the place of destination is another matter to which the effort of a commission can be directed, backed with ample power to enforce it.

Suitable fines and penalties to enforce all the orders and regulations of the commission is another implied power under the authority above quoted which should be clearly provided by Congress to reach all cases of infractions, either when permitted by the officers and agents of the railway companies or by the corporations themselves.

The power of the commission so delegated to it that its orders and regulations shall become effective without the aid of the courts, and until set aside by them for unconstitutionality, is clear and constitutes more than any other feature the efficiency of administrative regulation. In fact, the power of Congress is most ample to delegate full and complete authority to the Interstate Commerce Commission as a legislative and an administrative body to regulate interstate commerce in all its details, so as to make it at once satisfactory both to the carriers and the shippers upon the present basis of private ownership, and to make railway transportation far more efficient than it possibly could be made under the present cut-throat system or under State ownership.

Such interstate regulation, together with intelligent cooperative State regulation, is, in my opinion, the best system that could at this time, at least, be devised, and one which is entirely practicable.

Up to the time that the United States Supreme Court decided affirmatively that the Interstate Commerce Commission had no implied power to fix rates (May 24, 1897) under the act of February 4, 1887, it was generally believed that the latter embraced this power, and for ten years both the commission and the railways had pretty well accepted this doctrine, until finally the commission's power in this respect was directly challenged by the large traffic associations. These cases are known as the Freight Bureau Cases (167 U. S.). The commission in these cases found that the rates of the various railways who were defendants were unreasonable and in violation of the provisions of said interstate-commerce act, and ordered said defendants to desist from further charging such rates. The railroad companies having failed to comply with said order, the commission, under section 16 of said act, instituted suit in the circuit court of the United States for the southern district of Ohio to compel obedience thereto.

The said circuit court dismissed the bill, from which decree an appeal was taken to the court of appeals, and that court submitted the issue to the United States Supreme Court whether the commission had power to fix rates.

On the 24th day of May, 1897, the Supreme Court of the United States delivered its opinion, deciding that the Interstate Commerce Commission had no such power under said act.

The court among other things says:

Before the passage of the act it was generally believed that there were great abuses in railroad management and railroad transportation, and the grave question which Congress had to consider was how those abuses should be corrected and what control should be taken of the business of such corporations.

The present inquiry is limited to the question as to what it determined should be done with reference to the matter of rates. There were three obvious and dissimilar courses open for consideration. Congress might itself prescribe the rates, or it might commit to some subordinate tribunal this duty; or it might leave with the companies the right to fix rates, subject to regulations and restrictions, as well as to that rule which is as old as the existence of common carriers, to wit, that rates must be reasonable. There is nothing in the act fixing rates.

The court, then, after going over the act, further says:

The question debated is whether it (Congress) vested in the commission the power and the duty to fix rates, etc. The grant of such power is never to be implied. The power itself is so vast and comprehensive, so largely affecting the rights of carriers and shippers, as well as indirectly all commercial transactions, the language by which the power is given had been so often used, and was so familiar to the legislative mind and capable of such definite and exact statement, that no just rule of construction would tolerate of such grant by mere implication. Administrative control over railroads through boards or commissions was no new thing. It had been resorted to in England and in many of the States of this Union, etc.

Then, after quoting many of the legislative acts of different States authorizing commissions to fix rates, the court concludes:

Our conclusion, then, is that Congress has not conferred upon the commission the legislative power of prescribing rates, either maximum or minimum or absolute. As it did not give the express power to the commission, it did not intend to secure the same result indirectly by empowering that tribunal to determine what in reference to the past was reasonable and just, whether as maximum, minimum, or absolute, and then enable it to obtain from the courts a peremptory order that in the future the railroad company should follow the rates thus determined to have been in the past reasonable and just.

Mr. Justice Harlan dissented. (Interstate Commerce Commission vs. Cincinnati, New Orleans and Texas Pacific Railway Company, 167 United States, 479.)

Thus it will be observed that the Interstate Commerce Commission has neither express nor implied power under said act to fix rates, and that the railways alone have this power; and that the only way in which such rates can be questioned is by direct suit at common law in a court of competent jurisdiction upon complaint of a shipper that rates are unreasonable and unjust. Of course, such a proceeding leaves the shipper practically without a remedy, as the great majority of shippers are financially and otherwise not able to cope with the railway companies upon such a question in the courts. So that this decision is not only far-reaching in its consequences, but virtually emasculates the said act and leaves nothing of it of any force, except section 5, prohibiting pooling. With this out of the way, the status of the railways would be exactly where it was when the interstate-commerce act was passed ten years ago, with the additional power of pooling conceded to the railroads.

It is therefore the plain duty of Congress—

1. To empower the commission to fix and maintain maximum and minimum rates upon complaint made or upon its own motion and after a full and fair investigation of the facts.

2. To so amend the law as to provide for the interchange of traffic between connecting lines and to enforce the continuous carriage of freight from the place of shipment to the place of destination.

3. To empower the commission to prescribe uniform classification of freight,

4. To empower the commission to prescribe and enforce an efficient system of accounting, so as to ascertain reliable data of the value of the railroads and their annual income and expenditures, etc.

5. To so amend the law as to make the orders, proceedings, and regulations of the commission effective by denouncing adequate fines and penalties for the violation of such orders, proceedings, and regulations, and by placing the onus probandi that rates are unreasonable and the orders of the commission erroneous upon the railway companies.

In addition to all this, it will be necessary to amend section 4 of the act concerning the long and short haul so as to meet the effect of the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of Interstate Commerce Commission vs. Alabama Midland Railway Company et al., decided November 9, 1897, in which the court holds that competition in interstate freight rates may be taken into account as one of the dissimilar conditions and circumstances by which a carrier may ignore this section of the law without first applying to the Interstate Commission for authority to do so. This section should not be suspended for any cause except when the carrier is directly authorized to do so by the Interstate Commerce Commission, as without its active effect intermediate points are absolutely at the mercy of the carriers and the grossest inequalities must follow and the most injurious discriminations result.

The above amendments to the original act, together with a few minor amendments, will make the act what it was intended to be—a protection of the people against the greed of railway corporations, as well as other corporations who grow and thrive into trusts upon the illegitimate favors of freight discriminations and rebates.

The power of the commission to fix minimum as well as maximum rates would protect the railways against unjust and unreasonable competition and rate cutting, and would at once remove all just contention on their part for railroad pooling. It would effectually remove every reasonable ground for legalized pooling, but would have none of the objectionable consequences which pooling would entail upon the shippers and producers, and would go far toward maintaining uniformity and stability of rates, while the power of the commission to fix reasonable maximum rates would inure to the benefit of the shipper and producer, would secure cheaper transportation rates generally to the people, and would still leave a legitimate profit to legitimate railroad investment. Such a power vested in a commission would soon be recognized by the railway companies, and in a short time there would be a voluntary scaling of rates to a reasonable basis on the part of the railways without special interposition by the commission. Once let the railroads know that their rates must not be extortionate and they would soon adjust them upon a fair principle. With lower rates of freight, the business of the railways would increase correspondingly as the shipper and producer prospered. Under the commission's power to fix rates and the power it already possesses to prevent discriminations and abuses, together with the other amendments suggested, clique enterprises and trusts alone would be restricted, if not destroyed, and impartial treatment to all shippers and producers would secure equality of opportunity to all.

The compulsion of an interchange of traffic between connecting lines and a continuous carriage of freights from the point of shipment to the point of destination is of the utmost importance and should rest primarily in the hands of the commission.

The law as it now stands is inadequate, and railway companies who are hostile to each other can not be forced to carry the freights of connecting lines, although their roads may furnish the shortest and best route for through carriage. In England, upon application of a connecting line, or any person interested in through traffic, the commission can force such interchange of freight in the interest of the public by fixing and apportioning the proper rates to which connecting lines are entitled, and of course proper safeguards are provided in the interest of the connecting lines.

A similar provision in the interstate-commerce law is all that is required.

When it is considered that the transportation of freight involves the handling and carrying of a great variety of commodities of different weight, bulk, size, condition, risk, value, and character, it can be easily understood that a classification of this freight matter is of prime necessity in order to fix freight rates, and that classification of freight is in fact the foundation of fixing reasonable and just rates. Unless there can be a thorough classification of the various commodities of the entire commerce of the country no reliable basis for fixed freight charges can be made, and although some of the great trunk lines have done much to approximate such classification, there can never be uniformity in this direction until the Government takes the initiative and compels the different railways to conform to a general classification, as under the present system of private classification local and individual interests stand in the way of uniformity.

On the other hand, all interests, both of the railways and of commerce, concede the desirability of a single uniform freight classification, and all that is needed is to give the commission the power to inaugurate it, and little, if any, opposition on the part of the railway is probable.

A uniform system of accounts by the railways under close supervision and control of the commission is also of first importance. The expenditures made by the railways should be open to full and thorough inspection by the commission, so that it may be determined whether they are warranted or not in passing upon the question of reasonable rates. Frequent reports of the earnings of railways and operating expenses under specific supervision of the commission are necessary to the protection of the public and the stockholders alike, and must constitute one of the principal features of public regulation.

That the orders and rules of the Interstate Commerce Commission should be self-enforcing, without the additional machinery of the courts, in order to become efficient and bring about the public regulation so much desired, must be self-evident and can not be questioned on constitutional grounds at this time. The Supreme Court of the United States having uniformly held that Congress has the exclusive power to regulate interstate commerce in all of its details and to delegate this power to a commission, and that when a business or property is connected with a public use such property or business becomes subject to legislative control; that due process of the law of the land in the matter of public control is one which, following the forms of law as appropriate to the case, is just to the parties to be affected and does not necessarily include a trial or a judgment of a court; that when the law has confided to a special tribune the authority to hear and determine certain matters arising in the course of its duties, the decision of that tribunal, within the scope of its authority, is conclusive upon all others, there can be little room or doubt that when the commission has fairly passed upon the facts, after due and full notice to the parties at interest in a question affecting the regulation of interstate commerce, such finding is conclusive, unless it is confiscatory in its nature, and that such finding can be enforced by proper fines and penalties enacted by Congress and to apply in the event of disobedience on the part of the railway to such findings.

Local tax assessors and boards of equalization in most if not all the States of the Union now pass upon the question of valuation of the properties of the railways, and in some instances without the right of appeal. Upon what legal ground can it be said that a national railroad commission shall not have the right, under the Constitution of the United States and the interstate-commerce law, to say what rates shall be charged by the railways, what classification of freights they must adopt, what connecting lines they must use in the carriage of interstate commerce, what proportion of the freight and revenues they are entitled to, and how they must keep their accounts, etc.? None; unless such action on the part of the commission is arbitrary, unjust, unfair, and deprives the railway of all profit and forces it to carry freight for nothing.

In that event the railways could at once resort to the courts and relieve themselves of illegal oppression and protect themselves against irreparable injury by injunction against the orders of the commission. But why should the lawmaking power forever be placing the people in the attitude of supplicants and forcing its commission to resort to the courts as a common litigant in order to enforce its rules, orders, and proceedings legally and constitutionally made and declared in the first instance? It is time that the railway companies are taught the lesson that they must obey the orders of the commission, under adequate fine and penalties fixed by Congress for their infraction, like they are required to respond to the assessment of a local tax assessor or any equalization board under a State law, and that if such order is unconstitutional, the onus probandi is upon the railways and not the commission.

This is the theory upon which the railroad-commission law of Texas has been constructed, and although its constitutionality has been combated in the courts it has not been declared unconstitutional and is to-day the most efficient law of its kind in all the States of the Union. Let the commission be required to give the railways a full and fair opportunity to be heard and make a thorough investigation into the facts of matters upon which it is to decide in questions affecting interstate commerce. Let it fix a reasonable time before its orders or rules shall be effective. Let the railways have the right in the meantime to enjoin the order of the commission, but let the order be conclusive when the time has expired unless the same is set aside by the commission upon new application on the part of the railways; and lastly, let there be an adequate penalty under the law to enforce the action of the commission.

As the law now stands, the commission must bring suit in one of the circuit courts of the United States to enforce its order, and is forced to try the matter there de novo, not upon the record and proceedings had before such commission, but upon new and such additional testimony as the railway may choose to offer, which has the effect of making a new case and a different question from those passed upon by the commission, and usually results in defeating the order of the commission. For instance, if the commission should find that rates are unreasonable and then resort to the court and attempt, on the face of the proof before it, to show such rates to be unreasonable, the railway could by additional proof show that the rates were not unreasonable. But amend the law so that when the commission has investigated a rate and found it to be unreasonable and has fixed a rate for the future, then, without further action on the part of the court, the railway shall, under penalty of the law, observe the rate so fixed at a certain time stipulated in the order of the commission, unless the company resorts to the court and enjoins such order on the ground that it is confiscatory or erroneous.

In that event the railway company would be apt to make its full defense before the commission in the first instance rather than expose itself to the penalty and the burden of a suit in court against the commission. The railway companies would respond promptly to the summons of the commission and submit to its process and investigation with greater alacrity. The investigations before the commission would be attended by the parties at interest, with their full defense and their testimony, and they would exhaust their efforts to convince the commission that their rates were reasonable. The commission, on the other hand, assuming that its orders were self-enforcing unless set aside by the courts for grave error, would exercise its great power with caution and fairness, and the courts would not be prone to enjoin the order of the commission except upon plain error or abuse of power; all of which would soon tend to make the orders of the commission what they should be—the official acts of a legislative and administrative board, which could only be set aside upon the showing that they were clearly wrong, by those whom they were intended to affect, and which would enforce themselves by proper penalties affixed by Congress for their infraction.

These are, briefly stated, the principle reforms which I would advocate in our transportation system and which are contained in my bill (H. R. 4060) introduced by me at the present session.

Of course this bill contains other amendments of minor importance—for instance, such as will include express companies, sleeping cars, and all other improved cars used by private companies. The bill also guards against any discrimination in favor of foreign transportation companies, and subjects all traffic coming from a foreign country to the provisions of the interstate-commerce act as soon as it reaches this country, so that freight coming from a foreign country can not be carried on so-called import rates, but must be carried for the same rates as domestic freight under similar conditions and circumstances confining these to domestic territory. Under the law as it stands now importers frequently secure better rates than domestic shippers, and goods are carried frequently cheaper from points abroad to points in the United States than between points wholly in this country, thus discriminating in favor of foreign enterprise at the expense of domestic enterprise.

Clauses as to the publication of advances and reductions in freight rates are so amended as to require publication for sixty days instead of ten and three days, as under the present law, except when otherwise ordered by the commission. The present limit is too short and does not afford the commission sufficient time to scrutinize rates and has a decided tendency to make rates both arbitrary and unstable.

The names of the several carriers who are parties to joint tariffs shall be specified, and evidence of concurrence by each of the parties thereto shall be shown or attached to the copy of such joint tariffs, etc. And the commission shall not only prescribe the form of schedules and joint tariff sheets, but enforce obedience on the part of the carriers thereto, such copies of schedules and tariffs to be filed with the commission and preserved as public records and to be used as prima facie evidence in investigations before the commission and in all judicial proceedings. So all copies of contracts, agreements, or arrangements between common carriers shall be so filed and used as evidence; also all statistics, tables, and figures contained in annual reports of carriers to the commission.

The penalties denounced against the officers and agents of carriers shall include the corporations themselves, as the present law applies its penalties only to such officers and agents and makes it difficult in most instances to discover the guilty official, the corporation persisting in the meantime in its infractions of the law. By making the carrier corporation amenable to a pecuniary fine a stricter observance of the law will be secured. A similar provision in the Texas statutes has but recently secured voluntary pleas of guilty of infractions of that statute by a corporation amounting to $25,000 for unlawful freight discriminations.

In cases where the commission has found that a common carrier has injured a private party by reason of discriminations and abuses, and such finding provides for the payment of money by such common carriers by way of reparation to any injured person or party and payment is refused, such person or party may bring a suit in any State court of competent jurisdiction where such person or party resides or such carrier may have an office and operate its line, and the conduct and proceedings in such suit, including appeal, shall be determined by the laws of the State applicable to other civil suits for damages or extortion, but such suit may also be brought at the option of the plaintiff in the United States court.

Provision is also made for special agents of the commission, not exceeding ten in number, to prosecute any inquiry of the commission necessary to the performance of its duties in any part of the United States—into any question of fact pertaining to the business of the commission.

I am not unmindful of the fact that on the one hand this bill will be attacked by many of the railway companies as inquisitorial and destructive of property rights, and that on the other hand socialists will condemn it as a mere palliative, which will fail to bring about the desired reform. But I shall content myself in adopting a course which lies in the middle of these two extremes, as frequently the truth and true reform are to be found midway between two conflicting theories.

The theory of abandoning all governmental regulation of transportation and leaving it to self-regulation is utterly indefensible and must result, as already stated, in the control of the Government by the transportation companies and their natural allies, the trusts and syndicates; while the change from private to national ownership of the railways not only involves a radical change of our industrial conditions, but a like change of our present civil government. Once assume the right of control by national ownership of the means of transportation, and establish the relation of the Federal Government toward a private enterprise of such magnitude to be based upon a theory of collectivism, and not only do we expose every other private enterprise to like governmental absorption, acknowledging the principle of the socialist that all means of production and distribution should be owned and operated by the nation for the common weal, but we admit an innovation upon our entire theory of economics, which now rests upon the competitive principle—an innovation which will not only change this to the theory of collectivism, but actually change completely our theory of government.

If, as is contended by some modern political economists, governments should own and operate in the interest of the public all enterprises which are monopolistic in their tendency and which exclude private competition or unduly restrict it, could we halt at Government ownership of railroads? Would this not require us—to be consistent—to include the mines, factories, and in fact all large industrial and commercial enterprises which have a tendency to crush out private activity? Would such a course in its logical scope not force us squarely upon the socialistic idea to destroy not only all competition, but all private capital, and convert the same into collectivism and state capitalism, to be owned and operated by the nation for all the people alike?

Of course, nationalism, as interpreted in the light of socialism, contemplates not only a revolution in the present industrial structure, but alike a revolution in our republican institutions. State lines would be wiped out, and with them the principle of representative government and the functions of the principle of the present three coordinate branches in our State and Federal governments, upon which the political life of the nation depends; in fact, the abolition of constitutional government and a substitution therefor of social democracy, with the power of the people to rule themselves directly by means of the initiative, the referendum, and the imperative mandate, as in the days of ancient Greece and Rome and again in more modern France. The principle of a government based upon a written constitution and constitutional checks as the supreme law, which can only be changed according to the mode pointed out in said constitution, a principle at which the world has so long stood in marvel and which we were taught by our fathers to recognize as the essence of our national strength, is to be thrown to the winds and recourse is again to be had to the theories of the Greek solons, the Roman Cæsars, and the French philosophers.

Let us not underestimate the growth and strength of this ancient doctrine in modern habiliments. It is here on American soil, and is fast taking root among many classes of our people and in all sections of our country. The tendency of wealth is to concentrate in the hands of the few. The trend of the times is toward industrial combination, and the cry that the rich are growing richer and the poor are growing poorer is not the idle shout of the demagogue. It is not an accident. It is the real skeleton in our national closet. It is a product of the nineteenth century and the natural outgrowth of an age of invention and machinery and reckless class legislation.

It is, in short, the spirit of socialism against private capitalism, it is the eternal and irrepressible struggle between collectivism and individualism, which is as old as the hills and which has been going on since the dawn of civilization, and which will continue until the human race has run it course. These two great elementary forces will continue to antagonize each other, like the forces of nature in centrifugal and centripetal motion, and when the pendulum of one threatens to swing too far in one direction, it is wisely checked by the other. In the meantime, as civilization advances, the struggle becomes sharper and greater foresight is required to keep the great clockwork of nature's economy in running order, and to prevent the mechanism of political economy from slipping a cog in its wheels and running down and moving the hands of time a century or two back on history's dial.

What wonder that history once more repeats itself, and the theory of Plato, of Lycurgus, of Rousseau, Robespierre, Danton, and Marat is eagerly embraced as a new political evangelism by those who dream of a perfect equality and the divine right to live in comfort and happiness under a paternalistic form of government? But the answer that paternalism is impracticable can not assuage the storm that is brewing, and while we are profiting from the lesson of the French Revolution, let us not forget the fearful cost in blood and treasure of that revolution and that the wild dreams of the French philosophers led a king and a queen to the guillotine; that the fierce mobs of the Jacobins and Sans Culottes vied in making war upon all those who belonged to the better class of French citizenship, trampled private rights under foot, dispersed legislatures, preached the doctrine of nihilism, and spread red anarchy over fair France until the great Corsican, with a mailed hand, throttled the specter and lifted himself upon the throne.

Now, the lesson to be learned from history is that true and lasting reform in government is not by revolution, but by evolution, and that the task of the statesman and patriot lies in the path of evolution. But while this is so, he must not ignore the conditions which surround him. He must meet the spirit of paternalism with tangible schemes of reform, or else paternalism must continue to grow in strength and influence and finally sweep the country, or conditions growing out of capitalistic greed, worse than paternalism, must assert themselves and menace republican institutions.

While revolutionary socialism is to be absolutely condemned, it by no means follows that the extension of the nation's activity in certain directions should be decried. But before the nation extends its activity beyond the postal service—which might include the postal telegraph—and certain other entirely public functions let such socialistic reforms as are desirable begin in municipal government. Let local self-government, which is the basis and strength of our national fabric, take the initiative and make the experiment; let socialism first vindicate itself in the municipal ownership of street railways, light and water plants, etc., before we begin at the top and plunge the nation into the vortex of general socialism.

In other words, let us not invite revolutionary socialism, or we may provoke a struggle that may end in absolutism and destroy the proud fabric which it has taken us over one hundred years to build up and which yet challenges the admiration of the world in its strength and greatness. As to radical socialism I have simply this to say: The struggle for existence and the survival of the fittest by natural selection will go on as long as life lasts on this earth. This has been the law of evolution, and will continue to be the law as long as man is subject to growth and decay and the immutable laws of nature, despite of all the fine-spun theories about man's perfect equality.

Men are not created equal in the sense of the socialist, and never will be. If they could be, the processes of nature as well as the divine plan of creation must be changed. Some are born sound in mind and body, and others are ushered into the world as cripples and weaklings; some are surrounded by climatic advantages, others are not; some have natural advantages, and others have not; although all are similar in body and mind, the greatest dissimilarity exists between them, and no two human beings are alike, or should be so. All must struggle to exist or development must cease, and the weak must fall by the wayside and the strong will reach the goal.

Eines schickt sich nicht fur alle,
Siehe jeder wo er bleibe,
Siehe jeder was er treibe,
Und wer steht das er nicht falle.

—Goethe.

Society might and should protect the weak and feeble, but it can never demand the same service of the weak that it can demand of the strong and the active, and when it forces the latter to share equally the value of their earnings with the former, it proscribes personal freedom as much as the master who forces his slave to work for him without remuneration.

Between the shiftless and the industrious the inequality and injustice would be still more glaring. No panacea against indolence has yet been discovered, and if the nation undertakes to provide for the lazy and shiftless by issuing to them the same material allowances that it extends to the industrious and thrifty, it simply enslaves the latter to maintain in idleness the former. The principle of mine and thine is as old as the race and is imbedded in nature's instinct, and finds expression even in the plant and animal kingdom. It is the mainspring in life's economy upon which rests all progress in elastic balance. Remove it by society's decrees and you remove man's incentive to development and he must revert to barbarism.

Self-interest is as necessary to uphold progress as selfishness is detrimental thereto; but by destroying the first you still retain the second, and thereby tie a millstone around man's neck. Virtue and righteousness are strengthened, if not called forth, by their antipodes, vice and wrong; and a hothouse virtue which is maintained without temptation is not worth the name and loses the very ground of its existence.

If man is forced by circumstances to be good and can not be anything else, I ask why should he receive credit for being good? And what element of moral strength is it to him? It is by nature's struggle to higher forms of life and its seeming contradictions and the inscrutable wisdom of a divine plan and energy that life's problems are solved, and not by the toy makeshifts evolved in man's limited brain.

All the laws society may pass will not change these inexorable laws, and can only serve to impede progress until nature's God has broken these fetters and resumed His onward march on the never-erring path of evolution. Man must work out his happiness on lines of his individuality, and no human being has yet been thrilled with this much-coveted emotion unless he has been permitted to seek and find it in his own way. You can no more force a person to be happy than you can lead an unwilling horse to water and make him drink, and physical comfort least of all will make man happy. He must dare and do, and if need be die, before he can kiss this whimsical phantom.

Yet this heavenly condition on earth is what radical socialism aims to bring about in its advocacy of the destruction of all private enterprise and a substitution therefor of collectivism and national ownership of all means of production and distribution, etc.

Let us turn our back upon a doctrine at once so fantastic and mischievous and set our face toward reforms that are practical and can be carried to realization for the amelioration of the toiling masses, and not fly to ills we know not of, never losing sight of the great central truth that to whatever extent socialism may leave its impress upon certain public activities that it must never be permitted to hamper individual freedom and private rights, for, after all, these are and will continue to be the corner stones of our civilization—civilization which begins and ends with individual liberty.

Control the railways by vesting in a Federal commission the full constitutional power which Congress possesses to regulate interstate commerce and the trusts and clique enterprises must go down before the sharp attack of legitimate competition.

Industrial freedom is based upon equal opportunity, and it can not exist where railways are permitted to discriminate in favor of certain enterprises. Therefore stop discrimination and extortion in freights and you again free American commerce from the thralldom of the trusts and syndicates. Add to this the proper legislation by the several States preventing the formation of trusts, and cooperating with national legislation in this respect, as well as on railway regulation, and then cap the climax with the blessings of bimetallism and a reform in national taxation, so as to reach wealth as well as poverty, and you will hear very little more of national socialism or the referendum, the initiative, or the imperative mandate, but you will have restored representative government to its pristine strength and glory. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LITTLE. I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken or who may obtain the recognition of the Chair during this debate have liberty to extend their remarks in the RECORD. There are so many wishing to speak and the time is so short that I feel it necessary and proper to make this request.

There was no objection.

Mr. LITTLE. I now yield to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH].

[Mr. SMITH of Arizona addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. LITTLE. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, there is not much that need be said in behalf of this bill. It merely follows in the track of similar bills in the past. The committee has expended a great deal of time and hard work upon the measure to insure its being just; and in my opinion it is a good bill. I wish to say, however, that I disapprove of the whole policy embodied in these bills with reference to the Indian question. I think there ought to be a change in this respect. This bill carries in the aggregate an appropriation of seven million and a half of dollars for the maintenance of the Indians. In my view this Indian policy should be changed. The whole Indian Territory should be reopened. As a very able member of our committee has introduced a bill proceeding on that line, I will not say more on that question, but will proceed to discuss something that I think is of greater interest to the American people. I refer to the promises made by the Republican party one year and a half ago, the result of those promises up to the present time, and what we may expect in the future.

What is our present condition? Speaking for my Southern section of the country, I regret to say that it is unfortunately in a depressed condition. We are selling our cotton at 5 cents a pound, and the people there are in debt much more deeply this year than they were a year ago. What is the condition of things in the East? We see there in the cotton factories strikes and 10 per cent reductions of wages. What is the general condition of the country? Has there been any improvement? I have mentioned two instances of great depression in the South and the East; and I am sorry that I can not refer to any great improvement in any section of the country. It is true that the West is a little prosperous on account of the advance in the price of wheat. I will not refer in detail to the reasons for that advance; they have been discussed too often. I will only say what we all recognize, that the advanced price of wheat in the West is due solely to the misfortune of the wheat planters of India and other European countries. This advance in the price of a single agricultural product is not owing to Republican administration or a tariff or anything of that kind. It is true that the recent tariff raised the duty on wheat; but that has not affected the question.

I wish now to refer for a few moments to the cotton manufacturing industry, in reference to which the discussion here the other day took a wide range. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] undertook to defend the New England manufacturers. I was impressed with the gentleman's statement that the misfortunes of the cotton producer and the Eastern cotton manufacturer were due entirely to the overproduction of cotton. But I deny that under usually fair and prosperous conditions of the country we have produced more cotton than the world really requires. I find from an investigation of the statistics of the stock of American cotton at home and in other parts of the world that there are now only about 150,000 bales of cotton in excess of the number of bales on hand at the same date last year, and that with the decrease of the Egyptian and India cotton the stock of cotton would be brought down to about the same quantity as compared with to-day one year ago. But let us see what your platform of 1896 says on this subject. Under the section referring to the tariff we find this language:

> It upholds the American standard of wages for the American workingman; it puts the factory by the side of the farm.

This was your campaign cry to bring about your Republican majority. It is true that you have put the cotton factory and its operators by the side of the cotton farmer, but in a manner that neither like. Under this bold promise they expected to see prosperity, but instead of prosperity and happiness we find depression, suffering, and gloom. Continuing under the same section of your tariff plank, we read:

> And makes the American farmer less dependent on foreign demand and price; it diffuses general thrift and founds the strength of all on the strength of each.

What would have become of the Western farmer if it had not been for both the demand and price for his wheat in foreign markets? It strikes me that your tariff law has just had the reverse effect of what you predicted in your platform of 1896.

But instead of defending his tariff bill the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], to make an excuse for its failure to give prosperity, or, we might say, to avert distress and suffering, would have the cotton growers as well as the cotton manufacturers to dwarf their energies and endeavor to build up prices by making short crops and running their factories on short time, adopting the squeeze-out plan; the thought of trusts to limit quantities and by that means to build up prices being ever before the Republican party. They forget that the cotton farmer must make cotton and the factory hand must work daily for their living.

He went on to say that it was a fact that the Eastern manufacturers could compete with and produce their manufactured goods just as cheap as the Southern factories. He said that the old theory about difference in freight was an exploded theory and did not enter into the competition. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to take issue with the gentleman on that point and to endeavor to show that that can not be true.

He further laid great stress on the time—the working hours. He says we work eleven hours, while they work but eight hours or ten hours in the New England factories. I wish to say that while that may be true, yet in my State we have the eleven-hour law, which prevails generally in all business establishments. But we must remember in connection with that that we have important advantages, which can not be denied, in the southern part of the country and which do not exist in the New England States.

We are bound, under the conditions that prevail there, to take the manufacturing interests in this country in our own hands. We have great advantages over the East in many ways—climate, freight, and other advantages. The gentleman neglected to state the very important advantages that we have in climate. Our people can live in cheaper homes there, and more comfortably than they can in New England States. The weather is decidedly more comfortable, and we can afford to work for a longer time. It is no doubt true that the average wages of the Southern cotton-mill operatives is less than the average pay of the Eastern mills, but I would dare say that the salaries paid by Southern mills in our cities—for instance, Augusta, Ga., my own State—for the same class of manufactured product are quite as good as the salaries paid for the same labor in the East.

I venture the assertion that the laborer who receives 75 cents a day in any factory in the Southern States can save just as much money, taking into consideration all of those advantages which we possess, as does the laborer in a New England factory who receives his dollar per day.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If the gentleman will allow me, I would suggest that the difference in the fuel alone would amount to that.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Yes, sir; unquestionably it would.

Then, another advantage; we are very much nearer the coal fields, and we are right in the cotton belt. The gentleman laid great stress, as I have already said, on the question of freight. He said that the theory that the South has the great advantage in freight transportation has been destroyed; that it was only a theory that had never any force or effect, and that outside of the cheap labor and longer hours of work the Eastern mills had an equal advantage.

Mr. GAINES. If the gentleman will allow an interruption, in Alabama they are producing pig iron at $5.60 per ton, against $12.50 in the Eastern mills. The gentleman from Maine did not allude to that fact.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. He said the only difference was merely the difference in wages and the time that the laborer works, and when that difference was adjusted and Southern labor was paid the same wages as Eastern labor we would be precisely on the same level.

But, Mr. Chairman, I will go further, and state that the low price of freight on cotton—notwithstanding that fact the Southern manufacturer has a decided advantage in this branch of manufacture. I maintain that we are right along the line of the cotton belt; that we can get the cotton at a very low cost for transportation, while the Eastern manufacturer must pay freight on the raw cotton great distances. Besides that, when it comes to the manufactured state the Eastern mills, not being at the seaports, have to reship the manufactured goods and pay freight again. The Southern mills have no longer distances to reship to ports for transportation than the Eastern, whereas they do not pay freight or need not pay freight on the raw cotton, which is right at hand.

I maintain, therefore, that with reference to our trade along the coast line and to China and Japan we are on an equal footing with the Eastern markets, so far as freight is concerned, and we have the other advantages to which I have already referred.

But I was sorry the chairman of the great tariff committee, he who promulgated and framed the tariff bill under which we are operating and which he told us was to bring prosperity to the country—I was sorry to find him resorting to some of the same tactics that I read in a copy from an English newspaper in the last few days, especially in those countries where we hear so much about labor. We are told that the mill operatives in England want higher wages, but are unable to get them because the mill owners tell them in Great Britain that "we are competing with the Russian labor markets, where they work from one to two hours a day longer than we do" and are paid less wages, and hence they can not afford to pay any more because they can not compete with the cheap Russian labor.

I heard so much in the last campaign about the pauper labor, the cheap labor, in England, and yet it seems that that labor is rich as compared with the poor people who are laboring in Russian factories.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us look at another branch of this subject. Let us take the question of wheat. I desire to say that if it were not for the great misfortunes of the farmers in India and in European countries generally where this grain is grown the crop produced by the Western farmers would have brought them only the same price that they have received for it in years gone by—that is, 50 or 60 cents a bushel. That certainly would have been a discouraging feature to the wheat grower. But the conditions which produced an increase in the value of his crop were remarkable. It is not the same excuse that is given to the cotton planter, "overproduction," but the advantages arising not only from the shortness of the European crop in India, but the advance in price by speculation—the syndicates and trusts in Europe and led in this country by the Leiters, Armours, and other speculators. Owing to this speculation the price of wheat is held up to the high figure it has maintained for the last few months.

I am told that large stocks of wheat are stored in the city of Chicago and other great cities, the holders trying to take advantage of the bears and the market; that these stocks of wheat are being held for speculative purposes and really above the export price. Then what is the unfortunate condition? While these speculators have taken advantage of the misfortunes of the poor people in Europe, these poor strikers at the Eastern mills, near the home of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], and those people who have had their wages reduced 10 per cent are having to pay this additional price for their bread. That is the condition of affairs to-day.

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. GAINES. The gentleman fails to state that although they have cut down wages, they have not cut down dividends, but are now declaring dividends of from 15 to 18 per cent.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Yes. But the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. DINGLEY], the father of this great measure, asks the people still to have hopes that the bill is going to give us prosperity, and he tells us now that we may look for prosperity in June and July, when the tariff bill will come to our rescue. I want to say that I have been watching closely the disbursements and receipts, and I see nothing to look forward to. In fact, the imports of this country have been rather decreasing than growing, and we have no right to expect any decided increase, nor do I look for it.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. And the balances between imports and exports have been settled against us by the return of our securities, which prohibits any prosperity on that line.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Yes. I am glad the gentleman makes that suggestion.

But before I leave the point I want to call attention to the condition of our Treasury to-day. We get these Treasury statements, but they are false in their conclusions. They show that the Government has received $809,000 more than it has disbursed, up to the present time during the present year, but that is not the real fact. We all know that $58,000,000 from the sale of Union Pacific bonds has been turned into the Treasury. Now, how much of that $58,000,000 is lying there I am unable to tell. There are some bonds against this amount, some $30,000,000. But I dare say that none of these bonds have been paid. Consequently, until I know better, I am constrained to say that we are from fifty to fifty-five million dollars short in receipts as compared with expenditures for the current year.

The people have lost hope in the tariff. They do not expect more from that. Then what else have you done? What do you propose to do to give the people relief? What are the people expecting now? They are waiting. The tariff theory is about to be exploded. The theory of international bimetallism is about to be exploded. Then what have the people to look forward to? What are they to expect? Why, nothing; and the people are getting discouraged. I can tell the people what they may expect. I see it as clearly as it is possible for it to be seen. They may expect a gold standard and the issue of money by banks, national or otherwise. Is not this a pitiful condition? Will this be an improvement to the people of the country? They have had it long enough. I attended the committee meeting and listened to the statement of Secretary Gage and Secretary Sherman.

I have seen where Secretary Gage has been abused, while at the same time President McKinley has been upheld by bimetallists and others. I want to say that I do not know Secretary Gage personally, but he must be a very big-hearted and patient man to stand this abuse all the time, because evidently he and the President are on good terms and thoroughly understand each other. Anyone who heard the speech of Senator WOLCOTT the other day will certainly give up all hope of international bimetallism. In fact, it has got down to this, that the Republican party is going to adopt the gold standard and national banks of issue. This is an outrage upon the people. It is wrong. I am getting disgusted at hearing this discussion of the question of what kind of money we shall have. It has gotten so that the country is filled with specialists to discuss its different forms. It has become a matter of theory instead of a practical question. It reminds me of the doctors of the present day who are discussing the various diseases of mankind. Why, we read in the papers now that the doctors have concluded they can take out a man's stomach and that he will still live. The discussion of financial questions reminds me of these things. Let us get money down to a practical common thing, a people's money, a common-sense matter, something that the people can understand. When we do that, then we will have free coinage of both gold and silver on the same basis, at the ratio of 16 to 1.

Mr. STURTEVANT. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I wish he would state to me what civilized nation on the face of the earth has the unlimited coinage of both gold and silver.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Tell him what civilized nations had it twenty years ago, when they were more prosperous than they are now.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Following Europe, we have been whipped into line from time to time, as the others have, but I feel that the United States, instead of being a follower of others, ought to be the leader. If there is any nation in the world that can be independent and have the free coinage of silver and gold, it is the United States, because we are the most independent people; we are not dependent upon foreign countries, or less so than any other nation, because we export a great deal more than we import, and are independent at all times.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. If the gentleman will permit me, let me suggest that it is no evidence of civilization——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Certainly he does. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. I do.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. It is no evidence of the civilization of any country when it surrenders its right to issue and control its own currency to a corporation, whether it be of bankers or any other kind; nor is the gold standard, if adopted, any evidence of the civilization of a nation.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If it were, Turkey and Cuba would be very highly civilized nations, and so would the Portuguese East Indies.

Mr. GAINES. And the Egyptians.

Mr. STURTEVANT. But it is a matter of history that gold has followed civilization since the first use of it.

Mr. BRUCKER. Silver likewise.

Mr. STURTEVANT. But silver in all civilized nations is now limited——

Mr. BRUCKER. To-day?

Mr. STURTEVANT. To-day, except in half-civilized nations.

Mr. MADDOX. Is it not true that Germany, the highest civilized country in the world, was on a silver standard only a few years ago?

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I am being taken away from the point I was discussing.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I do not care to take up the gentleman's time further, but I say that every civilized country that has curtailed the amount of its currency has lost its civilization. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I am speaking of bank currency. I believe in a government issuing its own money, issuing the money for its people; something plain that all can understand. What is the condition that confronts us? The Republican party are forcing us to adopt the gold standard; and as we have not enough gold to answer the business purposes of the country, then we must necessarily depend upon the banking system to give us money. It is the outrage of this privilege being given to banks that I am speaking of and protesting against. I am speaking of an intelligent nation, and I think any intelligent nation will issue money on its own strength and not depend upon banks for it. I think that that is a weakness in any nation.

Now, it is a well-known fact that under this system if we get a sufficient amount of money in circulation the banks will have to furnish it. It is a fact that inducements must be held out to banks of issue, and if they are to issue money they must be paid to do it. Banks will not issue money unless the Government holds out to them an inducement to do so. I think it is an outrage on the people of this country that we must pay banking corporations to issue money and pay them a premium, because they will not issue money unless it is to their interest to do so, and the amount in circulation will depend largely upon the greater interest we extend to the banks to issue money. If the profit in issuing money is great, they will issue more; if not, they will issue but little money. That is unfair. It is going a step backward for the Government to have to pay a bank to issue money.

Mr. TODD. And the banks issue poorer money than the Government.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. In the first place, it takes capital to establish banks. Then banks are luxuries that only capitalists and the already intrenched money power can afford, which means that bank circulation will be at the mercy of corporations and can be contracted and expanded in volume as may best subserve the interests of the banks. It is common sense to suppose that the banks would look to their interests and not to the interests of the Government; that in times of depression, when money would be needed most, then these banks of issue would become alarmed and prefer contracting rather than expanding their circulation.

I am desirous of being conservative in discussing banks of issue, but it seems so unjust to the masses of the people that they must have their money medium through second hands, or, to be more plain, to have middle men between the people and the Government, at the expense of the people. I do not feel that I am too severe in saying that it will virtually have the effect of putting the circulation of our money in the hands of trusts, pools, and combines, so that the volubility of our circulating medium can be lessened or made greater at the will of the banks, just as the quantity and price of sugar are regulated by the sugar syndicate or the price of oil by the Standard Oil trust.

The people are showing their disappointment and are discouraged because of the failure of your many promises of relief and prosperity. They are restless and now doubt your ability to pass such laws as will promote prosperity. Although you are in possession of all branches of the lawmaking power, you have put upon the statute books no good laws, and the people are holding you responsible for your failure to give relief.

Let me admonish you that your opportunities are passing away, and at the coming fall elections you can not go before the people seeking their support and indorsement by holding out to them such glowing promises as you made them in your last platform and campaign. You can not tell the striking workingman, now out of employment, of the prosperity in store for him; you can not say to the poor factory hand, with his wages reduced and the price of his bread dearer, that you will increase his wages and enlarge his bank account. You need not trouble then about the cotton planter's prosperity, for he did not expect when you were making him promises that relief would come from your administration of the Government.

What will you say to the great number of bimetallists all over the country, who, in the utmost good faith, accepted your liberal promises of a successful international monetary agreement, but who now too clearly realize that the promises and hope you held out to them have vanished like mist before the morning sun? This great band of voters will go to the party that can and will bring about bimetallism. The meaning of all this is a sure and great victory for Democracy in 1898, and two years later a still greater victory for Democracy and its principles. Then we will have bimetallism, and the American people will proclaim and assert their independence and will dictate and have enacted into law the great principles of true and honest money. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. LITTLE. That leave has been granted. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has fifty-two minutes remaining.

Mr. LITTLE. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS].

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of this House to the condition of the Comanche, Kiowa and Apache Indian Reservation in Oklahoma.

The United States made a treaty with these tribes of Indians on October 6, 1892, in which they agree to receive an allotment of 160 acres of land each. Estimating 5 Indians to a family, each family would thus receive 800 acres of land for a permanent home. I have introduced a bill to ratify this treaty and to provide for carrying it into effect, and providing for the sale of the surplus lands in this reservation to the United States for $2,000,000.

This reservation contains 2,968,893 acres of land. Out of this 440,800 acres is to be allotted, leaving 2,528,093 acres sold to the United States at $1.25 per acre. This land will bring the Government the sum of $3,160,026, while the appropriation necessary to carry this treaty into effect is only $2,000,000.

The treaty and bill ratifying it provide that the sum of $200,000 shall be paid in four months from the date of the ratification of the treaty; $200,000 one year thereafter, and the final payment of $100,000 two years thereafter, and the balance, $1,500,000, will be placed in the United States Treasury to the credit of the Indians, and bears 5 per cent interest per annum.

This interest amounts to $75,000 per annum, which, added to the $200,000 paid annually the first two years, makes the sum of $275,000.

There are 2,755 Indians on these reservations. Each Indian will receive $97 for the first two years after this treaty and allotment bill passes. Each family, allowing 5 Indians to the family, will receive 800 acres of land and $485 in money. The third year each family will receive $322.50. After the third year the interest on the $1,500,000 still due will amount to $135 to each family.

This money and land will make these Indians self-supporting and far richer in lands and money than any of their white neighbors.

The present great appropriations annually made by Congress for their support and for running their agency will be discontinued. Forts Sill and Anadarko can be abandoned and the annual expenditures at these military forts saved to the Government.

Three-fourths of these Indians have already built houses upon the lands that they have selected for their homes, thus anticipating the ratification of this treaty and the allotment of their lands among them.

It is therefore evident that this Congress should ratify this treaty and now allot this reservation. This step will do more toward civilizing these tribes than anything else that can be done for them. It will also be a great benefit to the whole surrounding country.

This reservation is now only occupied by cattle ranches and these Indians. It has no local officers or government whatever, and for that reason it is the home and house of refuge for all the outlaws of the Southwest. Here they organize their raids on the horses and cattle, the banks, stores, and express trains of Texas, New Mexico, Oklahoma, and the Indian Territory. The citizens of that country have filed numerous petitions with us requesting that this treaty be ratified, stating that many murders and robberies have been committed by these outlaws and that they have thus created a reign of terror in that part of our country.

We can not, we should not, longer ignore the just demands of thousands of the best citizens of the Southwest.

It has been urged that this reservation is in a dry, arid region, where farming can not be successfully carried on. This is untrue. I live in a county adjoining this reservation on the southwest. This county last year produced at least 2,000,000 bushels of wheat and several thousand bales of cotton, besides a large crop of oats, corn, and other crops. This county received at the State fair at Dallas the first premium for the best bale of cotton and also for the best wheat raised in the State of Texas, and I assert that the country surrounding this reservation is to-day the most prosperous part of the Southwest.

The Fort Worth and Denver Railroad runs through my district, south of Red River and parallel with this reservation. The counties along this portion of this road will produce at least 50,000 bales of cotton and an immense amount of wheat and corn. I state these facts to show that this country is not a desert. Greer County, Okla., adjoining this reservation on the west, is thickly settled by farmers, all of whom are succeeding well in their farming operation, producing annually thousands of bales of cotton and millions of bushels of grain. Oklahoma, on the north, and the Chickasaw country, on the east, are equally productive and prosperous. The only opposition to opening this reservation comes from the cattlemen, who have been leasing these lands from the Indians for several years, and from the wealthy and influential Indians, who have large pastures fenced which they use for their own stock or lease to white men.

Many of the Indians are farming on a small scale, and nearly all of them are raising cattle and horses. (Read reports of Secretary of Interior.) There will be 2,528,093 acres of this reservation thrown open for settlement, enough to furnish 15,800 families with homes of 160 acres each, and it is a shame for all this rich land to remain idle while so many people are homeless. Under this treaty the Indian family of five persons will have 800 acres of land given to them besides the money, as I have explained. Why, then, should we not permit the homeless white man, who is willing to earn an honest living at farming, to purchase these lands, build up schools, churches, county seats—in short, wrest this wild country from the outlaws and make it the permanent home of thousands of American citizens?

The Indians would be greatly benefited by seeing their white neighbors open farms, erect houses, and raise crops of all kinds, and would follow their example. This kind of education would be practical, and is far better than the present mode of feeding and clothing them and giving them nothing to do. They should be thrown on their own resources and required to work and act like white men. Thus they would soon become self-supporting.

If the same number of white families should be fed and clothed and treated as these Indians are by this Government, they too would soon quit work and look wholly to the Government for support. These Indians are said to be wards of the Government. If so, then Congress is their guardian. If a man should be appointed by our courts the guardian of a family of children and should let them grow up without learning any useful trade or knowing how to make a living by honest labor, he would be condemned for his conduct, and justly so.

This Government spends millions of dollars in educating Indians and then returns them to their reservations—among their old, vicious, ignorant, lazy associates. These associates scorn, envy, and hate the educated young Indians and force them to give up their civilized ideas and fall to the common level of their tribe. The money we spend in educating these Indians is thus wasted. Suppose a city should build an expensive reservoir and filter river water and fill the reservoir. Suppose they should let this water flow into the river from the reservoir before it could be used. Would not the time, labor, and money of this city be lost?

This is exactly what our Government is doing by educating young Indians at great expense away from home, and then sending them home to again fall to the common level of their Indian associates. I would remedy this evil by allotting to every young Indian on leaving school 160 acres of land, to be chosen by him out of any part of their reservation. I would supply him with tools and provisions to make a crop, and he would thus become a self-sustaining farmer, and his example would be followed by others.

This Government should transfer its public lands to the States in which they are situated. The Indians and Indian reservations situated in the States should also be transferred to the States in which they are situated. The State legislatures can control these Indians much better and at much less expense than the General Government. But few members of Congress know anything about Indian questions or their reservations. If the States had charge of them, the State legislators would have a personal knowledge of Indian affairs and could much more effectually handle and civilize them.

The State would be reimbursed for the expense of caring for the Indians by the transfer of the public lands and the Indian reservations to the State.

But this will be objected to by many persons who claim to fear that the Western people will cheat and illtreat the Indians if they are controlled by the State legislatures. I have no patience with this morbid sentimentality—this "I am holier than thou" Phariseeism. There is as much intelligence, as much humanity, as much patriotism among the Western people and in their State legislatures as you will find anywhere on God's footstool.

Congress should pass a law offering to transfer our public lands, our Indians, and Indian reservations to the States, and when the State legislature accepts the offer, the transfer should be made. Our House Committee on Indian Affairs reported a bill favorably a few days ago repealing the Federal statutes making it a crime against the United States to sell whisky to an Indian in New York. It was urged in the committee, and I think rightly, that the laws of the State of New York should govern this matter.

This law is a step in the right direction, because the States should have full control of every citizen or human being in their borders.

I am a State-rights Democrat on this question as well as all others, and there is no reason why the States should not have control of the Indians and public lands in their borders.

Every true lover of his country should endeavor to economize in public expenditures, and this settlement of the Indian question would save many millions of dollars annually to our already overburdened people.

The Republican party should join us and change the Constitution, so that we can levy and collect a tax on inheritances and incomes, and thus compel the wealth of the country to bear its just part of taxation, and thus shift the burdens of tariff taxation from the millions of poor consumers to the property owner and capitalist.

I have introduced a joint resolution for the purpose of imposing a tax on incomes and inheritances, but, like the Cuban Senate resolution, it sleeps sweetly in the pigeonholes of a Republican committee of this House. But we this fall will appeal to that final tribunal, the people at the ballot box, which makes and unmake political parties, and ask them to send Representatives here next year who will not bury resolutions imposing an income tax on the wealthy and who will declare in favor of the acknowledgment of the independence of Cuba.

I believe that when the people speak again, they will forever relegate to the shades of political oblivion that party whose boss, HANNA, the other day telegraphed the President that "God reigns, and the Republican party still lives." Coming from this gold autocrat, this telegram should have read, "Gold reigns; therefore the Republican party still lives."

The President, in his annual message, recommends the legislation I insist upon.

I will read briefly what the President of the United States says in his message in reference to that matter:

> The Secretary of the Interior reports that leading Indians have absorbed great tracts of land to the exclusion of the common people, and government by an Indian aristocracy has been practically established, to the detriment of the people. It has been found impossible for the United States to keep its citizens out of the Territory, and the executory conditions contained in the treaties with these nations have for the most part become impossible of execution. Nor has it been possible for the tribal governments to secure to each individual Indian his full enjoyment in common with other Indians of the common property of the nations. Friends of the Indians have long believed that the best interests of the Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes would be found in American citizenship, with all the rights and privileges which belong to that condition.

Hon. Henry L. Dawes says:

> Individual ownership is in their (the commission's) opinion absolutely essential to any permanent improvement in present conditions, and the lack of it is the root of nearly all the evils which so grievously afflict these people. Allotment by agreement is the only possible method, unless the United States courts are clothed with the authority to apportion the lands among the citizen Indians for whose use it was originally granted.

The governor of Oklahoma, in his annual report in 1896, says:

> The situation in the matter of Indian reservations remains unchanged since the report last year. The Wichita, Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indian reservations have not as yet been opened to settlement. I can not refrain from urging, as I have done heretofore, that these reservations be at once opened to settlement. They embrace some of the finest lands in Oklahoma Territory, and would be capable of supporting a large population. The Indians on their allotments can make but a very limited use of the unallotted land.
> It is, in my opinion, subversive of the very best purpose of allotments to withhold the residue of unallotted lands from settlement. The Indians learn more of the ways of civilization and modern agriculture from contact with white neighbors than in any other way. To put an Indian on an allotment in the midst of an Indian reservation and expect him to farm is indulging a hope not justified by the actual results. The attention of the Government to this question is most earnestly solicited, and the earliest possible action advised.

That serious difficulties attend the settlement of the question arising out of the conditions of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians situated in the Indian Territory will not be denied by anyone; but however great the difficulty, and however serious the embarrassment of the Government, the time has certainly arrived when the question must be solved. Further delay or further temporizing with the question can only increase the difficulties and embarrassments of the situation. It requires no argument to convince every thinking man that a population of 200,000 people without State, county, or city government can not continue long to be a peaceful community, but that sooner or later a state of anarchy and a "reign of terror" will inevitably be inaugurated.

It is useless to any longer talk of the sacredness of treaty obligations between the Government and these tribes. The Indians, by their own voluntary act, have made it impossible for either them or the Government to carry into effect the existing treaty stipulations. The Indian, instead of preserving the country as a home for himself, in which his own local laws would apply, has invited the white man to come and occupy the country with him, until to-day there are about ten white men to one Indian. The Indian government wholly fails to furnish these white people with any protection to either person or property, and neither their laws nor their institutions furnish any rule of civil conduct for the white man. Not only so, but the tribal government and laws fail to furnish any adequate protection to the Indians either in person or property as against the encroachment of the white man or of each other.

By a well-known rule of law, when one party to a contract consisting of mutual obligations by his voluntary conduct makes it impossible for him to carry out his part of the mutual obligation he thereby releases the other party from any obligation to carry out his part of the contract. We think that this rule of law—which is a rule of justice and common sense as well—ought to be invoked in the solution of these questions, and under it we think it is clear that the Government has, by the voluntary conduct of the Indian, been released from its treaty obligations.

By the first article of the treaty of 1855 with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, as well as by the terms of the patent issued to them by the Government, their title to the land is conditioned upon the Indians continuing to occupy the same as a tribe. If the Indian should become extinct or abandon the same, the land is to revert to the United States. Now, in truth, the Indian has practically ceased to occupy and use this land for tribal purposes. He has invited others to occupy it with him, and has practically surrendered the possession and enjoyment of a greater portion of this land to persons not members of his tribe.

If this does not operate as a forfeiture of title by the letter of the law, it certainly does by the spirit of it, because it never could have been contemplated that the Indian would voluntarily deliver the possession of the greater portion of this land to another. He is prohibited by the terms of the grant from selling, and yet he has brought about a state of affairs which is equivalent to such a sale. By leases and by permissive occupancy he has produced the very condition that the Government sought to avoid by preventing a sale of the land.

Now, while we should not insist on a forfeiture to the extent of depriving the Indian of all his rights in the land, yet we do insist that the Government has a legal right so to do, and is fully justified by all the facts in so declaring; but we do not insist that the Government ought to so far forfeit this title as to take absolute control of the country, but in the apportionment or allotment of the land the Indians should be amply protected by giving them all, or a greater portion, of the land. We think that the legal right of the Government to do this is clear, and the political and moral obligations resting on the Government to establish a government over these people is far greater than any supposed obligation arising from treaty stipulations which have already been broken by the Indians themselves.

It is useless to attempt to settle this question by negotiation with the Indians. Recent experience on this line certainly demonstrates the truth of this proposition. Besides, there are local and inherent conditions which will forever prevent such negotiation, or at least delay it for an indefinite length of time, which are known to those who are familiar with the political methods of these people, but which it is not necessary here to state. In this connection we beg to say that the bill recently introduced by Mr. CURTIS of Kansas, relating to town sites, will furnish but little relief in any direction, and will work much wrong and injustice. Municipal government is greatly to be desired by all the towns in the Indian Territory containing a population of over 500.

But municipal government, without a settlement of the question of title, will simply be a patch of new cloth on an old garment, which is both unscriptural and foolish. If Congress has a right to take the land of the Indians and lease it out, we do not see why Congress could not take the land and sell it outright. If the land is the absolute property of the Indian, it is clear that Congress has no right to do either, and one is as much an infringement upon the property rights of the Indian as the other. The only difference is, by an absolute sale the fee is invested in an owner, and the interminable controversy ended; the other is simply to add another link to the long chain of confusion and absurdity.

Another thing I beg to call attention to in this connection. These towns were, as a rule, originally laid off and started by some enterprising member of the tribe; sometimes the Indian of mixed blood, sometimes an intermarried Indian, and occasionally an educated full-blood. They adopted different methods in order to induce people to come and build up their towns. Some of them sold the lots outright. Others leased to the occupant for a small annual rental, but retained the original possessory right in the first occupant or landlord.

Many vacant lots in these towns have become of great value. They are frequently the subject of bargain and sales, and many men now own these vacant lots who paid a big price for them, but because no improvement has been placed upon them there has been a disposition in all former efforts to legislate on this subject to give such owner no rights at all, but simply to take his property without compensation and appropriate it to the public use. There is also a disposition to take the property of adjoining landowners and appropriate it to the purposes of the town without compensation or without giving such owner even the first right of purchase.

It occurs to us that the rights of both of the above classes might be fully protected, either by an actual payment or by securing to them the first right of purchase, without any detriment to the rights or interest of anyone. We think that such an owner is as much entitled to protection, to the extent of his interest, as the man who has actually built a house upon the ground.

The establishment and growth of these towns is attributable, as a rule, to the individual enterprise of some citizen who, in order to promote trade, establish post-offices, schools, churches, and other conveniences usually appertaining to towns, has opened his inclosure, offered inducements for parties to come and settle there, opened roads leading to and from it, and under every rule of right such a man is entitled to the enhanced value of the property, which has been primarily and mainly the result of his own efforts.

The Chickasaws have a law which specially authorized citizens of that nation to establish depots on their holdings without the forfeiture of their possession, and, acting under this law, many citizens along the railroads have opened their inclosures for the establishment of depots, and have by their special efforts started thriving little towns, while such citizen continues to hold as before the land adjoining such town; and yet it is proposed in the establishment of town sites not only to take from him the lots which he has leased to actual occupants, but also to take from him any vacant lots he may have reserved for his own use, and, what is still worse, to take from him without compensation such amount of his land adjoining such town as the present or prospective necessities of such town may require, though such adjoining land may be his farm which he has for years occupied and cultivated.

Such a proposition is repugnant to every man's sense of right, and can only be tolerated when it is absolutely essential that the individual must be sacrificed for the benefit of the community, and when there is no feasible plan for compensation or protection to the individual. No such necessity arises in this case. Besides, full and fair protection may be extended to such owner by paying him out of the fund arising from the sale of lots or by securing to him the first right of purchase, and we protest that the clamor of the demagogue that no man ought to be permitted to acquire the ownership of a body of land adjacent to a town is an insufficient reason for the destruction of valuable existing property rights. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield thirty minutes to my colleague from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS].

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, if there is anything precious, endearing, and potential in the American people, it is the spirit of '76. Sir, it is the germ of our existence as a nation. It ought to be as enduring as endearing. Is it? The spirit of '76! What was it? What is it? It was here one hundred and twenty years ago. Is it here to-day? We have often heard of it. Its great work is before us. But do we comprehend it? It expressed itself in so many events during the dramatic period of the Revolution that a definite idea of it can not be gained from any one of them. It was in truth an evolution in government. It was in sooth a parting of ways.

"When the devil of tyranny once enters the body politic," said Macaulay, "it departs not but by struggles, by groanings, and by great convulsions." The world was ripe. The hour for the great struggle had arrived and the agony was on. The battle was between legitimacy and individual and public rights. It was a shifting of the power of the state from the will of the monarch to the control of the people.

"I will govern according to the public weal, but not according to the public will," bluntly declared James I. George III set himself to the pace. This states the issue precisely. It was the public will against the will of the monarch. The promulgation of the issue astonished the world. The result enlightened it more than it had ever been enlightened in regard to government. It awakened intellectual activity as to the rights of man and the philosophy of government. All that is ferocious and grasping in tyranny came to the front. All that is grand in sacrifice met it, humiliated it, conquered it.

Sir, the victorious impulse was called the spirit of '76; but it was not born in '76. It has a biography in the history of our race running back through ages. Over and over again it tried to assert itself and was as often stricken down by the mailed hand of despotism. On every page of the history of the race, either by its own efforts or by measures for its suppression, it records itself. If, instead of pitchforks and staves, Jack Cade and his followers had possessed the ballot, as we now possess it, they would have overthrown monarchy in a day. Their provocation was as great and their motives as just as those that inspired the heroes of our Revolution. They were utterly overwhelmed. A servile literature gave them an inheritance of infamy; but a just judgment is lifting it into a reminiscent glory. Many and many another effort has gone down before the atrocious spirit of grasping tyranny.

In these struggles for freedom we trace the growth of the spirit of '76. Though its growth was slow, it was constant as to its purpose and undeviating. In our Revolution it had a new advantage. An ocean rolled between it and its pursuers. For the first time in history it had a broad field upon which to demonstrate. It turned at bay, erect, grand, defiant. It spoke to General Gage through the lips of the schoolboys on Boston Common; it inspired the negro Attucks in the Boston massacre; it was manifest in the tea chests afloat in Boston Harbor; it appeared in the belfry of the Old North Church, and sent Paul Revere on his famous ride; it spoke spitefully from the muzzles of American rifles at Concord and Lexington, and it sanctified itself in the blood of Warren at Bunker Hill. At times it appeared in qualities in no way akin to it.

The Continental Army, ragged and destitute, simply did its bidding. That Army showed no such devotion to the person of its chief as did the army of Italy to Napoleon, or the Army of the Potomac to McClellan. Its blood-stained snow tracks at Valley Forge attested its devotion to the cause of liberty. At times it was mutinous; at times marauding. Desertions were common in it—even to the enemy. But the spirit of '76 always regathered and strengthened it. It visited every gathering, it mounted every pulpit, it appeared at every hearthstone, it sat at every table. Defying danger and death, it energized all ages and both sexes. It animated Moll Pitcher at Monmouth and immortalized Nathan Hale on the gallows.

As the peril darkened, it made its way across the Atlantic, entered the English Parliament, and pleaded the cause of freedom in the very presence of the King. Its astounding demonstration awoke the world, and won the applause of even savage tribes. It forced its way upon the great stage of human action, never again to relinquish a leading part. Apparently dormant after the surrender at Yorktown and the signing of the treaty at Paris, it was roused anew by British aggression nearly thirty years afterwards, It arose incarnate in 1812. It tore from its adversary the crown of supremacy on the ocean, and awoke anew the echoes of freedom on Lake Champlain and Lake Erie. [Applause.] It idealized itself in Andrew Jackson at New Orleans, and lifted Decatur. Hull, Porter, McDonough, and Stewart to a level with Paul Jones in the temple of fame.

To-day every monarch recognizes its presence and pays heed to its inspiring mandates. It is fast driving imperialism from the boards and filling the stage with its wholesome and godlike presence. The divinity of its mission challenges despotism to its most frantic efforts. In Greece, for the moment, it seems to have lost its footing; but in our neighboring island, the Queen of the Antilles, it is engaged in as hard a task as that which it accomplished on this ground. [Applause.]

To that devoted island despotism has summoned all its terrors and made use of all its savage implements. But the spirit of '76 is there[applause], and there to stay. All undeviating and undaunted, its torn and bleeding squadrons pour from mountain fastnesses on plain and in valley to confront and defy the uttermost efforts of Spanish tyranny. For some inscrutable reason it calls in vain for help—help almost tendered, but still withheld. It breasts the terrible storm friendless and unaided. Marti, like another Warren, fell at the beginning of the conflict; Maceo, like Montgomery, brilliant and daring, lies dead in the second year of the war.

But Gomez and Garcia, like another Washington and another Greene, maintain the deadly struggle undaunted and undismayed, deaf to all threats and cajolements. No Lafayette has appeared—not even a Louis XVI. And America only 60 miles away! A whole continent wrested from Spain, and Cuba left to all the horrors of extermination, without one word of official sympathy. Grant had only to frown on the empire set up by Louis Napoleon in Mexico, and it faded away. In his memoirs he says:

> I sent Sheridan with a corps to the Rio Grande to have him where he might aid Juarez in driving the French from Mexico.

He waited for no declaration of war; nor did Bazaine wait for it. He packed up, bag and baggage, and left American soil at once. But Grant is dead, Sheridan is dead. Can it be that the spirit of '76 has taken its departure with them? [Applause.] A great people were behind them, and the tyrant tottered to his fall. Such was the power of the great Republic at the end of our civil war. Has it lost its manhood within thirty years, and is there no majestic figure left in the affairs of the nation? [Applause.]

Still the agonizing struggle continues at our very door. At reveille every morning the priest has been seen, crucifix in hand, walking beside fair youths and hoary-headed men, to be shot to death for no crime but their devotion to the spirit of '76. In every instance before the fatal volley the last exclamation of the victim was, "Liberty to Cuba!" The cruelty of the act wrings the heart, but the grandeur of the sacrifice ennobles the cause.

The mission of America, as declared in the Monroe doctrine, is to foster liberty and drive despotism from this continent. [Applause.] That doctrine is the guardian of the spirit of '76. It was not the expression of the sentiment of Monroe alone. It was the embodiment of the sentiment of the nation. Without this it could have no force; with it, it has proved invincible. Jackson was unswerving to its dictates when he scornfully refused the mission to Mexico with Iturbide on the throne. "I will never recognize Iturbide as emperor," he replied. And Richard Olney exhibited the same American spirit when he warned England against her encroachments on the soil of Venezuela, freed from centuries of Spanish tyranny by Simon Bolivar.

Those who revere oppression point to the struggling Cuban patriots and say that such scattered, destitute, and emaciated bands do not deserve freedom and would not know how to use it if they had it.

Ah, Mr. Chairman, this is only a repetition of the scorn, contempt, and derision that were heaped upon Washington and his tattered battalions by royalists and American Tories.

There is no appeal that will nerve the arm of a patriot like a cry from the helpless. That cry comes with appalling force from Cuba to-day.

The shrieks of daughters and wives, struggling in the arms of the beastly Hessians in the Revolution, were incentives to action far more stirring than the call of the bugle and the rattle of the drum. The massacre at Wyoming stirred the patriots to far greater exertions than the capture of Ticonderoga and Crown Point. The licentious insolence and merciless rapacity of the British grenadiers lost more than their bravery gained and inspired the people with a deadly enmity against the British Government.

All the outrages committed by the invaders during the period of the Revolution pale almost into insignificance in comparison with the excesses and barbarities visited upon the Cubans to-day. The shooting of Mrs. Caldwell, the murder of Jane McCrea, and the hanging of Hayne have a thousand parallels in the actions of the Spaniards. The horrors of British prison ships at New York and Charleston are exceeded by the atrocities in the Cabanas, the Chafarinas, and Fernando Po. The avowed purpose of Weyler was the extermination of the patriots. Two hundred thousand dead already, and a thousand a day treading in their footsteps—a grim reminder of the vision of Mirza.

What must be the essentials of a spirit that can unite a people in a firm resolve for a great effort, and set their lives and fortunes upon the cast. It must have life, growth, cohesion, flexibility. It must have endured trials. It must be fashioned to the purpose; the purpose must be molded to it. It must be prudent, resolute, firm, unyielding; so firm and so undeviating as to fling consequences to the wind, and unflinchingly stand the hazard of the die. Of such material was the spirit of '76 a hundred and twenty years ago; of such material is the spirit of '76 to-day.

What of the lessons of this great movement? What has it taught mankind? It has brought about a revolution in methods in every civilized country under heaven but Spain. The Spaniard alone refuses to learn the lesson. Is it not about time that this willful dullard was hurried into the class of civilization and made to keep pace with its progress? The spirit of '76 is a determined spirit. It has a firm hold on humanity, and is resolved to continue its guidance until the whole world is united in its scholarship. The period of its minority was too long and its graduation too severe for it to permit anything but progress in every branch of the political philosophy of which it was at once the founder and the guardian.

Mr. Chairman, this Cuban question is not a question of domestic politics, but one of national policy—so high and so broad that it seems to me all should be agreed in regard to it. The great Republic should promptly and imperatively put an end to this monstrosity on our borders, abhorrent to every principle which we profess to uphold. [Loud applause.]

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I shall take advantage of the practice of the House when it is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to express some views which may not be deemed entirely germane to the bill under consideration, but which nevertheless relate to the state of the Union. The bill now before us votes away money, and I make it my excuse for devoting the few minutes allowed me to talking briefly about our financial condition and the attitude of the political parties on that question.

When the Republican party is placed on trial before the tribunal of the people at the approaching elections, it will stand charged with having perpetrated a fraud upon the country during the memorable campaign of 1896 on the question of bimetallism; it will stand charged with false pretenses; it will stand charged with want of good faith—and it will be convicted. It went before the country bidding for votes, holding out a promise which it never intended to keep. It assured the voters of the United States, in its platform adopted by its national convention, that it would use every means to bring about international agreement for bimetallism.

The framers of that platform used the strongest words they could employ. They "pledged" the party to endeavor to bring about an agreement between the leading commercial nations for the free coinage of silver and gold without discrimination against either metal. No Republican will dare claim now that the party platform of 1896 was not intended to carry to the voters of this country the assurance that the attainment of bimetallism was the aim of the party.

The high priests of Republicanism, the wily framers of the St. Louis platform, recognized that there was an overwhelming demand for the full restoration of silver as a money of final redemption. They realized the folly of going to the people with an unqualified declaration for the perpetuity of a single gold standard. They declared from every stump that they favored bimetallism. They insisted that they loved the "dollar of the fathers" as loyally as the most ardent silver advocate. They only proposed, they said, a different and safer method of obtaining the desired end.

Every one concedes now that by this pretense they captured many votes, and that by this method they carried the election. Thousands voted the Republican ticket because they regarded the party leaders as candid and sincere, and because they believed that international agreement would really and speedily be brought about. But for their pledge to promote the free coinage of silver upon an equality with gold, William J. Bryan would to-day be President of the United States. How has the faith been preserved—how has the sacred pledge been kept? President McKinley, it is true, appointed three gentlemen (now known as the Wolcott Commission) to visit Europe and undertake to bring about an understanding.

The commission went abroad, remained away some months, and came back without success. Since the return of Senator WOLCOTT and his associates the American people have been waiting to hear an account of their work. The other day Senator WOLCOTT, in a brilliant speech in the Senate Chamber, gave a vivid description of the efforts and labors of the commission and the reasons why they had failed of success. The distinguished Senator is a good Republican, and, realizing that his party stood charged with bad faith in failing to give him proper support, he tried to divert attention from the party by praising the President.

He told us that the President had "extended to the mission his unswerving support in all its efforts to bring about an international agreement," and that the commission had felt that back of their efforts "was the earnest desire of the Chief Executive to carry out in its integrity the provisions of the platform of the Republican party pledging it to every effort to bring about an international bimetallic agreement." Senator WOLCOTT does not assure us that he had the moral support of his party leaders. In naming the embarrassments which he encountered while abroad, he says:

> We were also somewhat embarrassed by the statements of representatives of the New York bankers in England, who sought access to the English officials and assured them that any sentiment which had formerly existed in the United States in favor of bimetallism was dead; that the mission was sent solely as a sop to a few far Western Republicans; that the country generally favored the gold standard, and that the President of the United States shared this view.

Let us remember, Mr. Chairman, that the very New York bankers of whom Mr. WOLCOTT complains, who sent their emissaries to London to defeat the purposes of the commission, are the very class whom the bimetallic advocates have all along charged with holding dominion and control over the destinies of this country.

The truth is, the Wolcott commission was discredited from the day of its creation and went upon its mission without the moral support of the Republican party. The very atmosphere was charged with doubts and sneers. No active aid was ever given them by the party in power so far as I know or have ever heard. No words of cheer were ever sent them across the sea, so far as I have ever been informed. The commission received encouragement abroad, but none from the dominant party at home. As Senator MONEY, of Mississippi, well expressed it in an interview in the Washington Times:

> Lord Salisbury must have smiled in the face of the American commission as they were arguing the importance of a bimetallic conference when he had read in the papers that morning that the Administration which sent the commission had the day before extolled the single gold standard and denounced bimetallism.

And the party in power has been quick to insist that every effort has been exhausted and that there is no hope for agreement between the nations. The self-constituted "monetary commission" of the Indianapolis convention says in its report that all further effort at international bimetallism "must now be abandoned," and all the gold-standard people have held up their hands and piously said "Amen."

I charge that there has not been and is not now any real or sincere purpose in them to carry out their pledge. Those who furnish the "sinews of war" for the Republican party do not intend that bimetallism shall ever be attained if they can prevent it, either with or without international or any other sort of agreement. If they had ever entertained any honest purpose to promote and finally bring about free coinage they would not have been so easily discouraged or so quickly fatigued.

One of the first acts of President McKinley, after being elected on a platform pledging his party to labor for a double standard by international agreement, was to appoint a distinguished national banker to be Secretary of the Treasury, and this gentleman was then and is now known to be an ardent and uncompromising single-gold-standard advocate, and opposed to the free coinage of silver under any circumstances or conditions. That distinguished gentleman, during the present session of this Congress, appeared before the Committee on Banking and Currency of this House and presented to them a bill which he had prepared, or caused to be prepared, the object of which was, he frankly said, "to commit the country more thoroughly to the gold standard and to remove, so far as possible, doubts and fears on this point." That bill, in its every feature, provides for putting the country upon a gold basis and contemplates the payment of every Government obligation in gold.

Mr. Gage says:

> As to the first proposition—to commit the country more thoroughly to the gold standard, remove as far as possible doubts and fears on that point, and thus strengthen the United States both at home and abroad—the proposition to refund the bonded debt of the United States, now payable in coin, into bonds bearing a lower rate of interest and payable, principal and interest, in gold, is a measure directed to that end.
> It will cost the Government nothing whatever, so far as the refunding of the debt is concerned, except the expenditure necessary to print the bonds and do the clerical work. It will take ambiguity out of the relations of the Government to its creditors; it will give, I believe, a strength and security and power to the whole commercial and industrial system of the United States, and the measure as it is prepared will, in my opinion, accomplish that object.

To place the Government in this position would leave no loophole for bimetallism hereafter, and the Secretary not only well knows that fact but his design is that it shall have that effect. He knows that it would indeed "remove all doubts and fears" of the gold-standard advocates, and would irrevocably and forever fasten upon the people of this country a condition which would give the bond speculators absolute dominion and control. If President McKinley dissents from these views of his Secretary he does not say so. In his message to Congress he calls especial attention to the financial plans of Mr. Gage and takes no issue with him on any feature thereof. He says:

> The Secretary of the Treasury has outlined a plan in great detail for the purpose of removing the threatened recurrence of a depleted gold reserve and save us from future embarrassment on that account. To this plan I invite your careful consideration.

I assert that those who dictate the policy of the Republican party, those high in its councils, agree with Mr. Gage. I assert that the party and its policy stand for the golden god, and that the issue between Republicanism and the hosts of Democracy is clearly drawn.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, the Republican party stands charged with false pretenses; stands charged with deception; stands charged with bad faith to a nation, and when, at the coming elections, it goes to trial before the people, it will be convicted.

I am not skilled in financial affairs; I do not profess to be, nor do I presume to undertake to teach it. We have many wise financiers nowadays and the country is flooded with alleged arguments pro and con upon the money question.

I perhaps belong to that great majority referred to by the "monetary commission of the Indianapolis monetary convention," in their report the other day, as that large portion "of the people of the United States who have no conception of the nature or importance of a money standard," or to that class referred to by Secretary Gage as "the simpler and more humble," who get confused about the meaning of the word "coin." I shall, nevertheless, venture one or two suggestions. The last annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury contains a table showing "the amounts of money in the United States, in the Treasury and in circulation, on the dates specified."

The last table is as follows:

JULY 1, 1897.

[Population, 72,937,000; circulation per capita, $22.49.]

	General stock coined or issued.	In Treasury.	Amount in circulation.
Gold coin, including bullion in Treasury	$696,239,016	$178,649,328	$517,589,688
Standard silver dollars, including bullion in Treasury	556,590,184	504,649,903	51,940,281
Subsidiary silver	75,818,369	16,201,960	59,616,409
Gold certificates	38,782,169	1,496,830	37,285,339
Silver certificates	375,479,504	17,630,192	357,849,312
Treasury notes, act July 14, 1890	114,867,280	31,397,763	83,469,517
United States notes	346,681,016	100,726,394	245,954,622
Currency certificates, act June 8, 1872	62,340,000	1,380,000	60,960,000
National-bank notes	230,668,034	5,123,683	225,544,351
Total	2,497,465,572	857,256,053	1,640,209,519

It will be observed that of the $696,239,016 which constitutes the total gold supply in this country the Government owns and possesses only $178,649,328, coin and bullion combined. The remainder is owned by national banks or corporations or individuals. In brief, the total gold supply is less than $700,000,000, of which the Government owns and possesses not quite one-third. The total money supply, as shown by the table heretofore quoted, is only a little less than two and a half billion dollars, and nearly all of this money, except gold coin, gold bullion, and gold certificates, was, by the statutes under which it was issued, redeemable by the Government, at the Government's option, in either gold or silver.

Under the new order of things, all this is now held to be redeemable in gold, if the holder so demands. The Secretary tells us in his report that not only will he undertake to redeem all classes of paper money in gold, but that, in order to maintain the parity, he will exchange, on even terms, gold for silver. In other words, silver itself is now held redeemable in gold. And he has been frank enough to say:

> Nevertheless, it must be recognized that this undertaking involves a large financial responsibility and requires proper and adequate legislative provisions for its continued execution.
> The responsibility of the Government in this respect means that, in addition to its liability for redemption in gold on demand of $346,000,000 of legal-tender notes, it must also hold itself in readiness to redeem in like manner $114,000,000 of the Treasury notes of 1890, and to maintain through its Treasury the free interchangeability with gold any part or all of $470,000,000 in silver now current with our people. The aggregate of these liabilities amounts to $930,000,000.

But we do not stop here. The Secretary says the policy of the Government is to refund the present bonded indebtedness of the United States by issuing bonds payable in gold and exchange them for the outstanding bonds now payable in coin—now payable, at the option of the Government, in either gold or silver. The amounts of the several series of bonds, Mr. Gage, in his statement before the Committee on Banking and Currency, says, is $659,000,000. Add this to the $930,000,000 redeemable money and you have a total burden on our limited gold supply which is appalling. You have $1,589,000,000 resting on a single-standard redemption basis of less than $200,000,000 of gold held by the Government, and with less than seven hundred millions total gold supply in the country.

I will not stop now to make the calculation, but it is an easy matter of arithmetic. The Government, with its redeemable currency and its bonded indebtedness, carries a liability of more than a billion and a half of dollars, all of which it is proposed now by the Republican Secretary of the Treasury to bring to a gold basis. We have only $178,649,328 of gold to redeem and pay with. What, therefore, is the proportion of gold to the amount of liability? When we make the gold standard irrevocable we make it the measure by which all wealth is estimated and all obligations, whether of the Government or of the citizen, will be gold obligations in their last analysis.

I do not argue that our standard money need necessarily be adequate to the instantaneous redemption of every paper dollar or the instantaneous payment of every Government obligation. I do not argue that the volume of money need necessarily be adequate to the instantaneous payment of every debt, public and private. But I do argue that the volume of money should be large enough to give it an easy flow into every part of the country and to easily sustain every industry. I do argue that the standard of this money should not be so rigid as to cause values of commodities or the earnings of a day's labor to shrink before it.

We called attention to all these things during the memorable campaign of 1896. We said then that the financial condition of the country was bad and growing worse. We showed then that it was in the power of the speculators in stocks and bonds to fatten upon our misfortunes. They called us agitators and spoke of us as anarchists. They told us that there was no trouble about our financial affairs and that we had diseased imaginations. Now, presto, change! The President in his message tells us that our monetary affairs are indeed out of joint, and cries, "Help me, Cassius, or I sink!" And what remedy is proposed? Why, that we shall "get out of the banking business" and turn over to the national banks the sole power to furnish money to the people, but that we shall indorse the notes of the banks and become liable therefor; that we shall refund our obligations with gold bonds only and that then we shall declare that gold alone is the standard of value; that a gold dollar shall be the unit of value; that the farm and its products, the loom and its products, the forge and its products shall be measured by our limited supply of gold; that all commodities, all labor, shall be so measured. We hear much of commerce nowadays. We are told that this is a commercial age and that nothing must impede or clog the wheels of traffic. We hear much of foreign investment in American securities and are told that any effort on our part to maintain a double standard of value will frighten away those who would invest in our stocks and bonds.

Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to disturb these relations or diminish or hamper or hinder our foreign commerce, nor do I believe the maintenance of a double standard or the free coinage of silver would disturb it. I do know, however, that the maintenance of a single gold standard in the United States, in view of our contract obligations and in view of our domestic conditions, will enthrall this Government and oppress its people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LITTLE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] has just referred to Gomez and other conspicuous figures in the ranks of the Cuban revolutionists. Apropos of this, I desire to submit a few words concerning another important character not alluded to by the distinguished gentleman, one who is acting an important rôle in the struggle now going on in Cuba.

I make this reference to him especially because of the unwarranted charges so recently made in some of the publications of this country against him, and because it was reported that some members of this House, not fully aware of the facts, as I believe, have indulged in severe criticisms, which not only related to his military proceedings, but reflected upon the character of the insurgents and the mode of warfare conducted by them. I think the denunciatory words employed did a great injustice to the heroic, faithful, suffering officer who is so zealously struggling for the cause of liberty in our neighboring isle.

I refer to Nestor Aranguren. And it will be remembered that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] recently introduced into the House a resolution which had for its object the obtaining of information bearing upon the death of Ruiz, the Spanish officer who visited Aranguren's troops, and also such facts explanatory of Aranguren's connection with the unfortunate affair.

It has been charged that Ruiz went into the insurgents' camp under the protection of a flag of truce, and that while there he was foully murdered by order of Aranguren; that he went as a messenger of peace, and that his killing was wanton and wholly without justification.

It is my firm conviction, based upon personal investigation while in Cuba, and admissions made by Spanish officials, that never in the history of this desolating, sorrowful contest now being waged, except upon one occasion, has a flag of truce been employed. The occasion referred to was when a few insurgents, who were desirous of surrendering, raised a white flag, and were cut down by Spanish guerrillas.

Ruiz did not go into the camp of General Aranguren under a flag of truce. He went pursuant to Sagasta's plan of bribing the insurgent leaders to desert their cause, for the purpose of inducing Aranguren to violate his sworn duty as an officer of the Cuban Republic. Ruiz was warned against going if his purpose was to advocate the acceptance of autonomy, and he was aware of the fact that under the Cuban constitution propositions looking to peace must be submitted to the civil authorities.

The policy of General Blanco, it was publicly known, was to disintegrate the insurgent forces, if possible, by sending into their camps persons who were to offer inducements to the men and their leaders to leave the revolutionary forces. When General Gomez learned of this plan, he issued an order to the insurgent army, in which attention was called to the provision of the constitution referred to; and the officers were commanded to arrest all emissaries coming for any such purpose, and try them immediately before a military court.

They were to be regarded and treated as spies, as persons engaged in highly dishonorable and execrable work. This order had been received by Aranguren from his commanding officer. There was but one course open for him, viz, to enforce it. Ruiz knew of the order; was advised of the danger; and knowing this persisted in going, in violating the order as well as the organic law of the Cuban Republic.

He knew that if General Aranguren performed his duty he (Ruiz) would be tried and executed as a spy. That his mission was to use every effort to persuade his friend Aranguren to become a traitor to the republic and desert his men and the cause for which they had so valiantly contended is not controverted. After reaching the insurgents' forces he began the advocacy of autonomy. He was arrested by order of General Aranguren, a military tribunal was convoked, and after being duly tried and found guilty was executed.

Within a short time I hope to be able to present to this House a copy of the court-martial proceedings, which will fully sustain the statements now made.

I ask, gentlemen, what other course could the Cuban general have pursued? His friendship for Ruiz could not justify him in omitting to obey the orders of Gomez.

Now, gentlemen, the Cubans have a civil government. It controls the army, carries on the war, occupies one-half of the island, and has troops in the remainder. It has survived for three years and is supported by patriotic, devoted people. They desire freedom and the overthrow of the despotism of Spanish imperialism. The efforts made to pass the resolution according belligerent rights to the insurgents ought to have received the unanimous support of the members of this House. I am not a jingoist; I would deprecate the taking of any step by our Government which might produce war.

But there would be no war as a result of such a step.

Our relations with Cuba and her people have been such that we have an interest in her welfare. The President has declared in effect that this nation may be required to go further than the accordance of belligerent rights; that intervention in the interest of the American people and the peace of our country may be essential. Of this I am convinced. Sooner or later the hand of the United States must be stretched out to restore peace. Even if we would, the responsibility can not be shirked. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, may I ask how much time I have remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has about fifteen minutes.

Mr. LITTLE. I yield that to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, when the heart of the American people is beating, like my friend from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] has said, to the tune of 1776, when the American people from one end of this land to the other are filled with the desire to aid the patriots of Cuba, who are struggling near our borders for their liberty, it is time for the great Republic to consider whether it is prepared for war.

This Congress has on two occasions, and the last Congress, I believe, on more than one occasion, refused to make an appropriation to complete the battle ships now resting on the stocks in our navy-yards. And why? Because in their sober judgment they believed that the contractors who had been furnishing the armor plate for the ships were asking from the Government an extravagant and unreasonable price. And yet you are standing here today, when a war may be imminent, when it may be forced upon us at any moment, cherishing an idea of false economy, because you fear the representatives of certain great contractors may get a little more money and gain the benefit of the enhanced price, and are failing to complete the great battle ships that would enable us to be prepared for war and to protect the doctrines that have always been maintained by the people of our Republic. [Applause.]

Now, I would not make these remarks if it was not for the fact that I have noticed that some unknown and mysterious source has been interjecting into the newspapers of this country continually, since this Congress met, false statements as to the condition of this armor-plate business, a false idea as to whether it is advisable for the Government to take hold of this matter, or whether we shall continue to leave ourselves helpless in the hands of these contractors, who refuse to furnish armor plate at the price that this Congress has determined to be a reasonable one. I send to the desk a clipping from the Washington Post of last Thursday and ask that it be read. I have seen the same statement in a number of other papers, and only ask that this be read as a matter of convenience, as it makes statements that I wish to deny.

The Clerk read as follows:

ARMOR AT $400 A TON—SECRETARY LONG SAYS THAT CONTRACTS AT THIS PRICE CAN BE MADE.

Secretary Long, accompanied by Chief Constructor Hichborn, Chief O'Neill, of the Bureau of Ordnance, and Judge-Advocate-General Lemly, appeared before the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs yesterday. The Secretary said, in response to questions, that the Navy Department had prepared full plans and specifications calling for an armor plant under the last naval appropriation bill and that estimates on the cost of land, tools, and machinery necessary to equip the plant had been made. The bids were to be opened on the 29th instant, and he thought several bids would be made.

Secretary Long said also that in view of the report of the committee which he had appointed to consider the question of a Government armor plant, and their report upon the great cost and delay it would involve, he had entered into further negotiations with private armor plants now furnishing armor for other ships, and he believed that he could make a contract for the supply of armor plate for the Illinois, Alabama, and Wisconsin, now under course of construction, which would be ready whenever the ships were ready to receive it, at the rate of $400 per ton. The Secretary recommended, in view of the circumstances, that an arrangement to this effect should be made.

From the Secretary's statement, corroborated by statements by Commodore Hichborn and Captain O'Neill, it appears that the cost of a Government plant properly equipped would be from $3,500,000 to $4,500,000. He said this estimate included all machinery for making armor plate, guns, and projectiles, and added that if the Government adopted the policy of providing its own plant, no armor could be expected from such plant for about three years. The committee has taken no action upon the armor-plate matter, and it is considered probable that the whole question will receive attention in that connection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, Mr. Chairman, some persons—I do not know who, but probably the owners of the present plant—have tried to give the impression to the country that the fact that this armor-plate committee have reported to Congress that it will cost three and one-half million dollars to build an armor-plate factory, has demonstrated to the country that we can not afford to build one, that it is absurd to attempt it, and that the Government will lose money if we attempt to make our own armor plate and build an armor-plate factory.

Now, what are the figures? When we had this question up for discussion last summer, the argument of the gentleman who was speaking on the side of the contractors, who desired a renewal of the contract at $400 a ton, was based on the report of Lieutenant Rohrer, of the Navy, in which he estimated that armor plate would cost $423.

The entire argument and contention was based on this report. Well, now, what does this report show? He makes an estimate on 3,000 tons of armor plate. That estimate shows that the ingots to make 3,000 tons of armor plate cost $90,390; that the materials consumed in the manufacture of that armor plate cost $170,250; that the labor cost is $130,500; that the keeping of the plant ready for use is $29,400; that the shop expenses amount to $7,140.

Now, mark you, those are all the expenses that go into the making of armor plate, except the interest on the cost of plant and items that are not concerned in the material itself. The other expenses are offices expenses, which will not be increased whether you enlarge the plant or diminish it. They are as follows:

Office expenses and contingencies, $3.34 per ton of plate	$10,020.00
Experimental work, $1.67 per ton of plate	5,010.00
Administration, superintendence, and engineering, $21.40 per ton of plate	64,200.00
Add 6 per cent of working capital ($519,360) as charge to cover losses, etc	31,161.60
Add annual dividend on capital stock ($4,087,521.60), 6 per cent	245,251.30
Add taxes, insurance, interest, etc., 10 per cent of cost of plant	353,700.00
Annual sinking-fund charge to cover depreciation in value of plant, owing to completion of battle ships required	133,211.00

This makes a total of $1,270,333.90 as the cost of 3,000 tons of armor, or $423.41 a ton. The value of the plant, on which these calculations of interest, etc., are made, is estimated at $4,087,521.

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question right there?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have but five minutes in which to finish this.

Mr. GAINES. Very well.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The present estimate is that the plant will cost from three and one-half million to four and one-half million dollars. Taking the average, say $4,000,000, it is within the estimate of what they say this plant would cost; but the plant for which the Government engineers have estimated is a plant to manufacture 6,000 tons of armor and all the ordnance supplies that the Navy uses, whereas the plant for which I have read this estimate is a plant to manufacture only 3,000 tons of armor. Now double the amount stated in this report as the cost of materials used, and what do we have? Doubling the cost of the ingots, we have $180,780. Doubling the next item, the materials consumed in manufacture, we have $340,500. Doubling the item of labor gives $261,000. Doubling the item of keeping the plant ready for use we have $58,800. Doubling the next item, shop expenses, and we have $14,280. Those are all the additional expenses that will be incurred by reason of doubling the amount of product of the plant. The balance of the charges, for interest, and so forth, would be no more on the Government armor-plate plant costing $4,000,000 than on this plant costing $4,000,000. Yet the Government plant would produce 6,000 tons of armor, and this plant only produces 3,000 tons of armor. Then add the other charges which this board said were proper; and the findings of this board have been accepted by the gentlemen who contend that the contract should be given back to the Bethlehem and Carnegie plants.

Add all these items and it makes a total of $1,693,903, and divide it by 6,000 tons, and it makes armor plate cost $282.31 a ton. Two hundred and eighty-two dollars and thirty-one cents a ton in this new Government plant, according to their own calculations! And yet it seems from these reports that are going out that even the Secretary of the Navy has caught the infection, and says that we ought to recede from our position and give these men, after allowing them this enormous interest of 10 per cent and allowing them all that they claim in this report—over and above that allow them the difference between $282.31 and $400 a ton as an additional profit.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that this report that they have based all their argument upon proves conclusively that the Government should at once take steps to build a plant and make the armor for these three ships. I understand it will take 3,000 tons of armor plate to equip each one of them. That would be 3,000 tons each for the Illinois, Wisconsin, and Alabama, or about 9,000 tons. The saving of the difference between $400 and $282 would be $117 a ton. On 9,000 tons that would be a saving to this Government of $1,059,210. One-third, or nearly one-third of what this plant will cost, will be saved by us building the plant now on the ships now in course of construction if we do not let out this contract.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I say it is our duty to at once go to work to build a plant, to cease this hesitation in reference to whether we shall let out the contract, after the House of Representatives of the United States have on four occasions within a year distinctly, by an overwhelming vote, refused to let out this contract at $400 a ton.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman a question before he sits down.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LITTLE. I yield sufficient time for the gentleman to ask his question.

Mr. ROBBINS. I would ask the gentleman whether in these estimates he has taken into consideration the patents and the machines which are covered by patents now in the possession and ownership of the present armor-plate plants in the country?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I could not take into consideration, of course, what the value of these patents would be; but if it is necessary, the Government could buy these patents much cheaper than pay this enormous price. To-day we are paying a certain percentage over and above these figures for the use of one of these patents, and I presume we can continue to do that if we make our own armor. If the parties do not consent to that, the Government would have the right to condemn that patent, if it was a valid one.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was in error in stating the time the gentleman from Arkansas was entitled to. The gentleman has now nine minutes remaining.

Mr. LITTLE. That is my understanding. I yield five minutes of that time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Chairman, I am reminded by the questions asked my friend from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] who has just addressed the House of a subject to which I did not intend to allude. But since he has been interrogated on the matter in a serious way, I take this occasion to say that the patent for the so-called Harvey armor process—a process by which the face of steel plate is hardened a certain number of inches—was issued under the most colorable circumstances, as shown by the official evidence and Senate report made thereon, filed by Senator CHANDLER in February, 1896, as well as by the recent developments in the Patent Office Department, if the press reports which I have read are true.

For several years there has been pending a suit in the courts to vacate the Harvey patents. As to whether this is being prosecuted in good faith I am not advised, but confess that from the public record of the matter I have my doubts. It seems now the Department, through the Patent Office, is industriously looking into the matter, and especially so since the Krupp, a competing, process has been recently purchased and brought to this country.

It seems the Harvey process routed the Krupp process in Europe, and now the Krupp process, in turn, has come to the United States to rout the Harvey process. It would be naturally inferred, if the Harvey patent is held valid, we will have at least two competitive processes in the future, though practically and admittedly the parties who have furnished the Government with armor plate have not competed with each other. To this they have sworn before several Congressional committees.

I desire in this same connection to cite this fact, to call it to the attention of Congress, and to the nation: That this Harvey process, although patented in America, is to-day being used by the European Governments in equipping their men-of-war with armor plate. We permitted Mr. Harvey to come along and at least get some sort of a patent on this process, and then he went to Europe, after having clad our vessels with the harveyized armor plate, and sold six-sevenths [I believe it is six-sevenths] to the enemy, while the other seventh, or a small portion of the whole, a minority, is owned by parties in America.

In other words, he, Mr. Harvey, equips our men-of-war with harveyized armor plate so that we, as he contends, can turn the missiles of the enemy, and then he goes over to the enemy in Europe and fits the European men-of-war with the same kind of plates, so that they may be able to turn our missiles to naught. And not content with this, he sells out a controlling interest of this process to the enemy. This policy, it seems to me, could well be denominated an international armor-plate policy, the very thing, I submit, we do not want, and to avoid which we must presume our Government patented and adopted this armor-plate process in the first place. Such a policy, it seems to me, must put us on a level with the enemy in armor-plate making, armor-plate using, and on an equality in actual combat so far as the armor plate could do so.

We know, Mr. Chairman, that in the past we have whipped the enemy when we did not have armor-clad vessels. We made our vessels out of wood, and in our way, without letting the enemy know when or how we did it or how we used them, save in actual combat. We made them and kept all the manner of making and using them to ourselves. We filled them with patriots, and explained to them at the mouth of the cannon how we used them. But now the enemy must know all about at least just what this armor plate will stand, its virtues, its uses, and how to use it, since all this must have been explained by Mr. Harvey when they purchased the patent in part from him. We do not know, and can not know, what we could do in combat under such circumstances as this sort of policy may place us. And it is this that must challenge the attention of considerate Americans.

What would we think if the commander of the Army of the United States should go over to Europe and explain to the enemy our arms, the way to use them, and the way they are made? Or what would we think of that general who should write a book on military tactics, and then sell the copyright to the enemy?

Bear in mind that the armor plate is a war process, a war machinery. It is not an every-day patent that is used in the walks of private life in time of peace. Hence the rules that would apply to the latter are questionable with the former.

And just here I am reminded of our "disappearing gun" now in use at Fortress Monroe by the Government. What policy is pursued with it? It is mounted within and operates from within the fort. The public is excluded from even seeing, and does not know and is not allowed to know the manner in which it operates, how it looks, or how it is made. None but Government officials, by a special permit, and then under guard, are allowed even to see it. Being a Government official, I examined it last summer, and know that I correctly state the rules that govern seeing it.

Now, compare the disappearing-gun policy or rules with the disappearing and appearing policy or rules which govern our men-of-war. Mr. Harvey has gone to Europe, having clad our vessels with harveyized plate, and sold his so-called patent to the enemy, who now knows all about how to make and use harveyized plate and how to control the patent.

I thought, and think yet, knowing these facts and getting them officially, that it is my duty to call them sharply to the attention of Congress, and if possible rivet the eyes of the Secretary of the Navy on these two irreconcilable policies—at all events, apparently irreconcilable.

In brief, we exclude the public from even seeing or knowing anything about the disappearing gun which guards our shores and these armor-clad men-of-war upon our shores, but allow not only the public but the enemy to know all about our men-of-war which guard not only the disappearing gun and our shores, but our sea commerce, our lives, and our liberties. These are policies about which we certainly should think more seriously. As stated, our armor plate is war machinery per se. Now, should we patent and then permit the patentee to sell that patent to the enemy—sell war machinery to the enemy? Can we afford to create engines of destruction—create machinery to destroy us? These are serious questions; as to how they can be remedied is another question. I call these facts to the attention of the public, I believe, for the first time.

In addition to this I want to say another thing just here: That it is remarkably strange that the two resolutions referred to the Navy Committee, the chairman of which is the distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE], have not been reported, although some weeks have passed since they were referred. These resolutions touch upon important matters. They call for the publication for the benefit of Congress of the valuable data obtained at the expense of a tedious visit, South and West, made last fall by the Armor Factory Board under the supervision and direction of the Secretary of the Navy.

That board visited the mineral regions of the South, in Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama, Virginia, and Illinois, while other data which was mailed to the committee from many other States is also valuable. I was with this board in Alabama and a portion of Tennessee, and know that the data touches upon the value of the raw material which is used in making armor plate and which has been used by those who have been furnishing such to the Government, who have been making it.

This testimony is invaluable as advising Congress as to the cost of the raw material, and what should be the ultimate cost of armor plate furnished us. It seems to me, in all fairness to all parties, that this data should be printed and placed before Congress and the country.

I am informed, in a "grapevine" sort of way, that the distinguished chairman of the Navy Committee says that the Armor Factory Board, although under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, in making this visit and investigation exceeded their powers; and that, therefore, their action is void, and for that reason the resolutions will not be even reported to this honorable body.

If this is the position of the distinguished gentleman on that committee, I take issue with him and the committee on the law of the case as well as the right of the committee or its distinguished chairman to so act. I submit that if his position is correct he should have reported such conclusion to the House so that we might pass on the fact.

It seems to me that it would be entirely proper, before we enter into a new contract for armor plate at any price, that we should have the light that this testimony might—indeed, I know, will—throw on the cost of armor, to the end that we may see whether or not three hundred, or four hundred, or four hundred and twenty-five, or five hundred, or six hundred and five dollars, which last amount is the average we have paid under contracts heretofore made for armor plate, are reasonable or unreasonable prices per ton for this plate.

We prefer to have the right of exercising our judgment as court and jury, as we have the right to do under the Constitution in these matters, rather than have it confined exclusively to the gentleman from Maine or to the Secretary of the Navy or to any other one man. I am not a one-man-government man. I believe in that kind of a government which sticks closest to the majority of the people, and which yields, at least for the time being, to the honest will of an honest majority honestly expressed by that people. This is the Jeffersonian and Jacksonian Democracy of which I claim to be an humble representative here.

I desire to insert in my remarks to-day the colloquy between the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE], who introduced one of these resolutions, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] and myself, bearing upon the interrogatories which passed between the two, and which I undertook to answer, and I think did answer, but which were omitted from the RECORD. Mr. STEELE said:

Mr. STEELE. I would like to ask the gentleman if the Democratic party in the House has not stood out against any proposition to purchase armor plate for our vessels unless it could be purchased for a price less than $500 per ton?

Mr. GAINES. Because we have been dealing with people who were perpetrating a fraud upon the Government.

Mr. STEELE. My question was that "unless they could purchase $500 armor plate for $300"——

Mr. GAINES. Well, the Democrats and a good many Republicans voted against that proposition, and those Democrats who voted against it would do the same thing to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. LITTLE. I yield three minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. GAINES. But turning aside from this subject thus casually but nevertheless sincerely referred to, about which much could be said, I am delighted that the distinguished tariff maker from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] has concluded that the next time he undertakes to make another move toward making a tariff incidentally for revenue and deliberately to build up private fortunes for the few at the direct expense of the many, as he did in the Dingley bill, that he has determined to amend the Constitution beforehand.

I am delighted to know that before he undertakes to bend or inveigh that sacred instrument and the natural rights of the people of this country, which they reserve to themselves, that he will rather amend first the Constitution to cover the evil of which he complains.

He says he wants the Federal Constitution amended so as to limit in each State the number of hours that shall constitute a day's labor.

I am as much in favor of assisting the laboring man as any man. I know what it is to labor long hours and short, day and night. I have never failed to respond, and shall never fail to respond, to the petition of the laborer to relieve him by just laws. I believe in just labor laws, and so does the Democratic party, which was first to recognize the labor unions of this country in its platform. [Applause.]

I suppose the gentleman from Maine wants to enact this sort of a law, making this question a Federal question that the Federal courts may take charge, not only of the manufactories of this country and run them, but of the wage earners, too, by writ of injunction. [Applause.] By making such a change in the Constitution it would turn the laborer of this country over to the Federal courts, whose judges are appointed for life, rather than to the State courts, whose judges are elected by the people and who have to appeal to the masses in a limited number of years for reelection.

I must be permitted here to observe that it is passing strange that for a hundred years we have not had such a proposition suggested; certainly none to my knowledge. Why did not the distinguished gentleman call this question—that is, short hours in the East and long hours in the South, which he says is the cause of the distressed condition of the cotton mills in the East—to the attention of Congress last summer when the Dingley tariff was being acted upon by Congress? We were here nearly six months, and at no time that I recall was this question even mentioned.

Not a single word was uttered upon that question. Again, the New England States shortened their number of hours of labor, many, if not all of them, years ago—Maine as early as 1871 and 1887; New Hampshire, 1887, the law being originally passed in 1847; New Jersey, in 1883; Rhode Island, 1885, and Massachusetts, 1871, which information I get from Mr. Carroll D. Wright, Commissioner of Labor. Now, why was not this question raised when the McKinley tariff was being discussed? Why not when the Wilson tariff was being discussed? Why not when the Dingley tariff was being discussed?

If the Wilson and McKinley tariffs worked under such uneven hours of labor, how is it that this, the present tariff, the highest of all our tariffs, is a failure in the cotton industry? Does it not show the Dingley tariff is deficient?

Ah, Mr. Chairman, it was said in 1893 by the Republicans, particularly in the East, and President Cleveland and his followers, that confidence and prosperity would be immediately restored by the repeal of the Sherman silver law—by the unconditional murder of silver. It was said last year, "Give us a protective tariff, and prosperity and confidence will appear; the shafts of industry will start throughout the country."

A protective tariff and the gold standard were all we needed, was the cry last spring, and Congress was prohibited by the iron hand of the Speaker of this House from passing any general legislation save the Dingley tariff bill. And yet the cry comes now that the Constitution must be amended to restore wages recently cut in the East, in the New England cotton mills, still shouting all the time that prosperity has actually come.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this distressing and chaotic condition of things was prophesied in 1868, before the gold standard had been adopted here or there, and as a natural result of the gold standard. It was then said the gold standard would reduce prices and paralyze the fruits of labor, and depreciate the profits of the bondholder in any country that adopted it. It was declared in 1873, as I have before stated, by high Republican officials, that it would cause a fall in the prices of articles measured by the gold standard, which has been our measure since 1873, the deadening effect of which was in part overcome by the coinage laws of 1878 and 1890.

The trouble is the deadening effect of the gold standard. You may look here and there; to the North, East, South, and West, for the cause of the trouble, just as the prophets of '68 said you would do; but after all, I say, and I honestly believe it, the trouble is the gold standard, and I further declare seriously that we will never have that "general prosperity" that this great people in this great country are entitled to have until we return to a low tariff and genuine bimetallism; until we return to the money of the Constitution and to the people their reserved right to have coined both metals as we had it for eighty years before 1873, and until it was in that year by fraud demonetized by the Republican party, and that, too, if the record is to be believed, by imposing upon the Republican Speaker of this House, Mr. Blaine, who, it is said, did not know when he approved the bill which did the foul deed that it contained the clause that demonetized silver. [Applause.]

I want the gentleman to remember that what I say as to a low tariff is not a dictum of mine, but a fact. And more, a great Republican who was afterwards President of the United States, and others who were candidates, each and all of them have testified in effect to the fact that from 1846 to 1860 was the most prosperous period in the history of this country. It was then we had the lowest tariff since 1812, as Mr. Blaine said, and under which, said Mr. Garfield, we had "general prosperity."

The laws were then democratic. They were made for the masses and by the masses, and not for the few nor by the few. They were formed according to and within the limits of the Constitution. They were made so that any man, highland or lowland, far or near, could take his gold or his silver to the mint, have it made into full legal-tender money under free coinage, and then take that money and pay his debts, get something to eat, and keep himself and his family from shivering in the cold blasts of winter. [Applause.]

Give us back those laws and those happy conditions will return. Give us back such times as we had during those years of the free coinage of gold and silver and prosperity will come. It will be "general prosperity," and all will be well. [Great applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Chairman, I have not gotten to the best of my speech yet. [Great laughter and applause.]

Mr. SHERMAN. How much more time does the gentleman want?

Mr. GAINES. Just long enough for me to quote a little more Republican authority against you gentlemen.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will give the gentleman three minutes.

Mr. GAINES. I am specially grateful to the distinguished gentleman from New York for his kindness, because I know he differs with me in politics. Now, let me turn for a moment to some surprising statistics of recent date. They were originally compiled by Henry E. Tiepke, commissioner of Rhode Island, and appear in the September Bulletin, 1897, issued by the Commissioner of Labor, Carroll D. Wright, a Republican, as is, I suppose, the commissioner of Rhode Island.

The title to the report is, "The Ninth Annual Report of the Commissioner of Industrial Statistics, made to the General Assembly (Rhode Island) at its January Session, 1896." The table covers the years 1894–95, and shows a continuous increase in every department except the number of firms which decreased. Bear now in mind that the Wilson tariff took effect August, 1894, and was in full operation in 1895. It shows the number of employees increased in 1895 over 1894 6 per cent; wages over 18 per cent; capital invested nearly $7,000,000, or 17 per cent; output, $5,000,000, or 13 per cent, while the amount of wages increased $1,607,935. Such is the record of a low tariff, even under the paralyzing influence of the Cleveland-Sherman-Republican gold-standard policy inaugurated in 1893. [Applause.]

I insert the whole table with the author's explanation thereof:

STATISTICS OF MANUFACTURES, 1894, 1895.

This information relates only to the textile industries. Reports covering complete statistics for both years were received from 123 establishments. Of these, 60 were engaged in the manufacture of cotton goods; 8, hosiery and knit goods; 9, printing, dyeing, and bleaching; 3, silk and silk goods, and 43, woolen goods. The information is given in detail for each branch of the industry.

The following is a summary of the figures presented:

a Decrease.

The hours of labor in Rhode Island in 1895 were ten, just as they are now and have been since 1885. It is surprising that the gentleman from Maine did not allude to these facts, and that the Republicans studiously avoid any reference to them. These increases under a low tariff occurred under short hours in the East, and long hours in the South. Now, then, why were wages not cut in 1895, under a low tariff and the gold standard, in Rhode Island, and cut under a high tariff and the gold standard in 1898? And not only this, but many of the mills of Rhode Island and the East being moved to the South. The hours were just as long, as a rule, in the South in 1895 as they are in 1898. It should be remembered that Rhode Island is the home of Senator ALDRICH, who led the fight for the Dingley tariff last year.

It would seem that the Dingley tariff has started the industries of Rhode Island, but started them South, and we give them a hearty welcome.

These figures speak for themselves. They are an exemplification of the unwisdom of a high tariff even with a gold standard, the rich fruits of which are now before our eyes—distress, woe, starvation, cut wages, no clothing in the cold winter, closed mills, with a general move of these mills from the East toward the South, where they can get the very best labor in large quantities, with raw material growing around the mills as we have it in the South.

And right here let me make another comparison with another period, the low-tariff period of 1846 to 1860. Admitting for the present that there is prosperity in the cotton mills in the South and that there is distress in the cotton mills in the East; that there is weal in the South and woe in the East under the gold standard and protective tariffs; what conditions do we find under the low tariff and the free coinage of silver in the period from 1846 to 1860? I quote:

The fact is, Mr. Chairman, the decade from 1850 to 1860 was one of peace and general prosperity.

"General prosperity," Mr. Chairman; not prosperity in the South and distress in the East, or distress in the South and prosperity in the East, but "general prosperity" all over the country. From whom do I quote? Do you Republicans want to know? I will tell you. I quote from General Garfield in his speech made in this House in 1878. [Applause.]

Again I quote from another authority:

Moreover, the tariff of 1846 was yielding abundant revenue.

Which is not the case with the Dingley tariff, Mr. Chairman, because the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] says that "the Treasury needs money." And "the business of the country," not of a part of the country, but the whole country, "was in a flourishing condition." I quote further:

Money became very abundant in the year 1849; large enterprises were undertaken; speculation was prevalent, and for a considerable period the prosperity of the country was general and apparently genuine.

From whom do I quote? The "Plumed Knight," the "Idol of his party," Hon. James G. Blaine, in his Twenty Years in Congress. [Applause.] One or two more quotations:

The tariff of 1846, though confessedly and professedly a tariff for revenue, was, so far as regards all the greatest interests of the country, as perfect a tariff as any that we ever had.

These were the words of the present Senator ALLISON, in this House, in March, 1870. Just one more quotation:

Men who have looked with hungry eyes upon an overflowing Treasury with surplus millions do not wish to see the sources from which these coveted millions are derived dried up.

This, Mr. Chairman, was another Republican, afterwards Vice-President, Henry Wilson, then Senator from Massachusetts.

"The Treasury" was not then "in need" of funds.

I hold in my hand the New York World of to-day, which I have just picked up from my desk, containing a letter from the cotton factories of a certain Southern State. It is dated January 21, 1898. [Cries of "Who wrote it?"]

Mr. GAINES. I will tell you directly. I will insert it in my remarks.

I quote:

In 1886 this State had 80 cotton mills, 4,071 looms, and 199,433 spindles.

We had then, recollect, a high tariff, but were coining large amounts of silver dollars under the Bland-Allison law. I read again:

In 1894 this had increased to 156 mills, with 14,908 looms and 700,497 spindles.

We had to help us out from August, 1894, the Wilson low tariff, and, up until the repeal of the Sherman law in the summer of 1893, a large silver-dollar coinage to also help. With what result? We had an increase in cotton mills in this State from 1886 to 1894 of 76, or 9 per year, and an increase in looms of 9,837, or 1,229 per year, and 501,064 spindles, or 62,633 per year. I again quote:

Eighteen hundred and ninety-seven has witnessed a wonderful increase in cotton manufactories, for there are now in this State 1,010 cotton mills, with 14,010 knitting machines and 24,517 looms and 1,144,385 spindles.

This shows what we can do under a low tariff.

[Here the hammer fell.]

[Cries of "Who is he?" "Give us his name!"]

Mr. GAINES. The Republican governor of the State of North Carolina, and his name is Daniel L. Russell.

NORTH CAROLINA'S GOVERNOR TO THE WORLD.

[By telegraph to the editor of The World.]

RALEIGH, N. C., January 21, 1898.

In 1886 this State had 80 cotton mills, 4,071 looms, and 199,433 spindles.

In 1894 this had increased to 156 mills with 14,908 looms and 700,497 spindles.

Eighteen hundred and ninety-seven has witnesses a wonderful increase in cotton manufacturing, for there are now in this State 1,010 cotton mills, with 1,410 knitting machines, 24,517 looms, and 1,044,385 spindles.

The average daily wages paid skilled men (exclusive of machinists, engineers, firemen, and superintendents) was $1.11; unskilled, 66¾ cents; skilled women, 67½ cents; unskilled, 46 cents, and children 34½ cents, or a general average of 65 cents a day.

The prospect for a rapid extension of our cotton-mill industry is excellent, for within our borders are water courses with an aggregate of 3,500,000 horse-power, capable of running 140,000,000 spindles.

Here is the cotton grown, and its transportation to the Northern mills is saved by its manufacture here. Our mills are in excellent condition, and some are declaring as high as 15 per cent dividend on the capital invested.

Pierpont Morgan seems to control some of our railroads and wants the rest of them. We have a railroad commission a majority of whom can not be bought by Morgan or his clique. Hence we have assurance of reasonable transportation rates inside the State from the fields to the factories and from the mills to our own seaports, unless by the usurpation of Federal judges we shall witness the success of the impending conspiracy to revolutionize this Government by the destruction of the reserved rights of the States.

DANIEL L. RUSSELL,
Governor of North Carolina.

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Chairman, I have been asking some of the older members as to what latitude of subjects are allowed in the general debate of a pending bill. They told me we were at liberty to talk about anything outside of the bill, being careful not to talk of the pending bill. If in the short time allowed me I should encroach upon the bill, I hope I shall not be called down as being out of order. I have not said that with the intention of reflecting upon any gentleman who is taking part in this discussion. I have been entertained with their speeches, and I have been entertained by what has been said about armor plate.

One important feature of that subject has not been mentioned, and that is the danger we have found ourselves in by depending upon private companies to furnish, under contract, armor plate, much of which has proved defective. We do not know to-day what is the real condition of the plate upon our vessels, nor will we know in the future if we have to get armor plate only of contractors and not under the immediate management and direction of Government officials working for the Government, where faithfulness and perfection shall be the highest claim to the holding of their positions.

I think that this feature of the case alone, aside from the consideration of the particular question whether it would cost the Government more to make its armor plate for itself than to get it under contract—I think that the consideration of the perfection of the plate and the consequent safety of our vessels is sufficient to warrant the Government in going into the business of making not only this but all other materials necessary in such critical times as war.

Now, as to the question under consideration, the Indian appropriation bill, I have just one thought to submit bearing upon the general policy of this Government in its Indian affairs. Those of us who have lived near the frontier—along the borders of the Indian reservations—know that for years and years, as the white man has encroached and pressed upon the borders of the Indian lands, we have by means of treaties acquired the titles to their lands, crowding the Indians farther and farther west. My own district borders upon the northern line of the Indian Territory, and therefore I speak with knowledge when I say that there is a growing pressure to acquire from the Indians the last acre of their lands. There is a growing pressure for such legislation as will make it possible to acquire the title of these lands without any regard to what may become of the poor Indian. Hence my fear is that even before the Indian becomes extinct, if that shall ever be, all the Indian titles to land will have been extinguished and possibly all the Indian annuities also, so that the Indians of this country, the original possessors of all this land, will be as badly off as a very large percentage of our white citizens—poor and homeless.

Let us review briefly our land policy, both with the Indians and our white citizens.

The general policy has been to recognize the Indians as owning collectively all the lands of the nation. By degrees our Government has bought out the Indians; thus we have acquired title collectively, and by custom designate these lands "our public domain." For many years we were very reckless in parting with title to these lands, but as far back as 1852, in the first Republican platform, one of its planks declared that this careless disposal of the public lands should cease and no more sales be made; that the public lands should be given in small tracts as homesteads to our homeless citizens; and I well remember one of the most popular campaign cries of the Republican party was "Free homes for the homeless."

The policy was partially carried into effect by the legislation of the party when it came into power. The main feature of the policy was to insure a home inalienable to every family of our nation. The great mistake we have made is in failing to prevent the centralizing of the lands by transfer of title without limit, until to-day an alarming percentage—over half—of our own citizens are absolutely homeless, and the opportunities to acquire homes grow less and less each year. Mr. Chairman, while it is properly our duty to make these appropriations and protect the Indians, it is also our bounden duty to at once enact a land policy that will speedily place every family of our nation in possession of an inalienable home beyond the reach of speculators, debts, or taxgatherers. This can be done, and each year will increase the demand for such a policy until it is done.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, it is not often that a public man has his action on a public question vindicated within the course of a few hours; but it does occur to me (and I make the remark parenthetically before moving that the committee rise) that my course in insisting this morning that three hours would be sufficient for the general debate upon the Indian appropriation bill has been quite thoroughly vindicated by the discussion which we have had here since a quarter of 2 o'clock this afternoon. [Laughter.] I move the committee rise.

Mr. LITTLE. Allow me to say that quite a number of gentlemen who wanted to discuss this bill in connection with the question of Indian legislation abandoned the idea of making speeches when they found the time for debate had been limited to so short a period.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. SHERMAN, that the committee rise, it was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HEPBURN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration House bill No. 6896, the Indian appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCEWAN, one of its secretaries, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments numbered 1, 4, 7, 8, and 10 to the bill (H. Mr. WALTHALL. I present a joint resolution of the legislature of the State of Mississippi, favoring intervention by the United States Government in the war between Spain and Cuba. I ask that it may be read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Joint resolution favoring intervention by the United States Government in the war between Spain and Cuba.

Whereas the people of Cuba are engaged in the most desperate and heroic struggle of modern times to protect themselves from the cruel, inhuman, and barbarous tyranny and oppression of the Spanish Government, and to achieve and establish for themselves the divine right of self-government; and

Whereas there comes to this body reliable information through Maj. George L. Donald, jr., an honored and reliable citizen of this State, now in Cuba, that 90,000 persons, principally women and children, have perished by starvation in the province of Santa Clara alone since January 1, 1897; and that in thirty-two cities and towns visited by him the appalling fact was revealed that "one can not go 20 steps without some poor, starving woman or child begging him for something to eat; that one can not sit down in a hotel to eat a meal without being asked for bread by starving children;" thus disclosing the policy of the Spanish Government to exterminate the inhabitants of that beautiful isle, which wears the crown of the "Queen of the Antilles," by starvation, which is cruel, inhuman, brutal, and revolting to every sense of humanity, Christianity, and civilization: Therefore,

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the Mississippi legislature in special session convened, That, speaking for the people of Mississippi and in behalf of humanity and the Christian civilization of the world, we believe it to be the duty of the United States Government to at once intervene, peaceably if it can, but forcibly if it must, to save the people of Cuba from the cruel fate of annihilation by the barbarous and inhuman methods of the Spanish Government.

Be it further resolved, That a certified copy of this preamble and resolutions be forwarded to our Senators and Representatives at Washington, with the request that they be laid before the Congress of the United States.

Adopted by the senate January 12, 1898.

J. H. JONES,
President of the Senate.

Adopted by the house January 14, 1898.

JAMES F. McCOOL,
Speaker of the House.

Approved by the governor January 17, 1898.

PAYMENT OF GOVERNMENT BONDS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being concurrent resolution No. 22, offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] and reported from the Committee on Finance by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], on which the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MORGAN. Before the Senator from Indiana proceeds, I do not wish to interrupt him at all, but I desire to give notice that I shall ask the Senate for permission during the morning some time or during the day to make a personal statement in regard to what I conceive to be an attack which has been made upon my veracity or my character by the ex-President of the United States, Mr. Cleveland. I shall want to occupy the floor to-day for a while in order to set myself right and do myself justice upon that subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama desire to make a statement now?

Mr. MORGAN. No; I prefer to wait and let the Senator from Indiana go on.

Mr. TURPIE. I ask that the pending concurrent resolution may be read.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution, reported by Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Finance, on the 18th instant, as follows:

Whereas by the act entitled "An act to strengthen the public credit," approved March 18, 1869, it was provided and declared that the faith of the United States was thereby solemnly pledged to the payment, in coin or its equivalent, of all the interest-bearing obligations of the United States, except in cases where the law authorizing the issue of such obligations had expressly provided that the same might be paid in lawful money or other currency than gold and silver; and

Whereas all the bonds of the United States authorized to be issued by the act entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," approved July 14, 1870, by the terms of said act were declared to be redeemable in coin of the then present standard value, bearing interest payable semi-annually in such coin; and

Whereas all bonds of the United States authorized to be issued under the act entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," approved January 14, 1875, are required to be of the description of bonds of the United States described in the said act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt;" and

Whereas, at the date of the passage of said act of Congress last aforesaid, to wit, the 14th day of July, 1870, the coin of the United States of standard value of that date included silver dollars of the weight of 412½ grains each, declared by the act approved January 18, 1837, entitled "An act supplementary to the act entitled 'An act establishing a mint and regulating the coins of the United States,'" to be a legal tender of payment, according to their nominal value, for any sums whatever: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That all the bonds of the United States issued, or authorized to be issued, under the said acts of Congress hereinbefore recited, are payable, principal and interest, at the option of the Government of the United States, in silver dollars of the coinage of the United States containing 412½ grains each of standard silver; and that to restore to its coinage such silver coins as a legal tender in payment of said bonds, principal and interest, is not in violation of the public faith nor in derogation of the rights of the public creditor.

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President, I shall willingly vote for the resolution offered by the honorable Senator from Colorado. I think its introduction timely and opportune, especially when we are confronted with a measure commended to our approval and consideration which proposes to increase the amount of the national debt by three or four hundred million dollars by retiring the Treasury notes now in circulation among the people as money by funding them into national bonds.

Under these circumstances, sir, I think it is not only not in derogation of the national honor but in affirmance of the public faith that we should declare, and complete the declaration, that these bonds are payable in coin, not in gold, and that we should favor and enforce the policy of the free coinage of the standard silver dollars, in which, by the express terms of the contract, all the bonds of the United States are now payable.

It would, sir, be certainly an act of injustice to tax the people for the purpose of paying the national funded debt in gold. None of our taxes are payable in gold. Neither the internal nor external revenue is levied or collectible in gold. The only method by which we could procure gold to pay the bonded debt would be by the sale of other bonds for that purpose. Thus we should make an endless chain worse than the one we have, an endless chain of bonds and bondage, entailing upon ourselves and our posterity a perpetuity of debt and servitude.

Especially is this action unjust in a case where our present law provides that all bonds issued or to be issued shall be payable in coin, silver or gold. Prior to the passage of the act to strengthen the public credit in 1869, the bonds of the United States were payable in any lawful money. This is shown and conceded by the very passage of that enactment, since if they had been payable in silver or gold before the act there would have been no object in providing for their payment in coin. The bondholder was much benefited by the act making his obligations payable in coin.

It was a change in the contract made for his advantage, certainly not for the interest of the people or the Government. The public credit of the United States depends only on a single factor, the ability of the people to pay Federal taxes. What addition was made by the passage of the act of 1869 to the wealth or resources of this country? What did it add to the value of land or to that of the products of labor? How much did it increase or enlarge the ability of the taxpayer to pay the taxes levied against him? Not in the least—not to the extent of a penny's worth.

The act of 1869 did not and could not strengthen the public credit. It did strengthen the public creditor. It gave him the right to demand coin, which he had not before. It made him a preferred creditor. Pensions, salaries, and all other kinds of expenses of the Government are payable in any lawful money, in legal-tender paper currency. The bondholder can not now be paid in that manner. He has done nothing to earn or deserve this preference. But a bargain is a bargain. Let us stand by it. He is entitled to what the contract requires, nothing more, nothing less—the payment in silver standard dollars of the amount of the obligations which he holds against the Federal Treasury.

That the act to strengthen the public credit was an anomaly extraordinary in its tenor may well be conceded when it is considered that it was one wholly new, unheard of before in our financial policy. The great civil war had been fought and ended in victory. The public credit had successfully passed through the most prolonged and serious strain to which it had ever been subjected without any law that our bonds should be payable in coin. After the war, in time of profound peace, after all danger to the national credit had overpassed, this special novelty found favor. Coin was made synonymous with solvency. Coin, silver or gold, was declared to be the only money in the payment of our funded debt.

It is quite clear that this novel coin enactment was not to stand alone. It was the beginning of a series of enactments which had for its object to set apart the funded debt as a coin debt, to be paid not only in coin, but in coin of one kind, gold. That there is a close historical and yet closer financial connection between the act so called to strengthen the public credit and the act passed in 1873, which by fraud or stealth demonetized silver, is plain from a study of their common origin and the joint purpose of the two acts. The act of 1873 demonetized the standard silver dollar. In barely four years before, the act strengthening the public credit had made the bonds payable in coin.

The act of 1869 made the bonds payable in coin. This was one step taken, from lawful money to coin. There was one other step to be taken, from coin to gold. The act of 1873 closed the mints to the coinage of the standard silver dollar. There was at that time only an inconsiderable amount of standard silver dollars in existence—not enough to pay the interest on the bonds—and as the act of 1873 discontinued their further coinage, there was nothing left but the gold dollar and its multiples with which to pay the bonded debt.

After the passage and approval of the act of 1873 the whole amount of the national funded debt became payable in gold coin alone, because under the joint operation of the acts of 1869 and 1873—the former providing for payment in coin, the latter prohibiting the minting of any but one kind of coin, gold—the many millions of bonds then outstanding were not payable except in gold.

This transmutation of paper bonds into gold exceeded anything in the history of the Rosicrucians of the Middle Ages; it outstripped all the glowing romance in the search for the philosopher's stone, both in its celerity and effect. The transmutation was made in the incredibly short time of four years. It required little time and small movement. In one time and two motions the gold appeared alone, the silver vanished, and the debt so remained a gold debt for five years afterwards.

Public sentiment and the opinion of all political parties revolted against this condition of the funded debt payable alone in gold. In 1878 there was a restoration of silver to the coinage of the mint by providing for the coinage of the standard silver dollar, in which, under the act of 1869, the funded debt was payable. The movement was so far backed by the honest resentment of the people that this measure for restoration passed both Houses of Congress by a two-thirds vote against the veto of the President—of the President—showing the very early origin of that hard and fast solemn league and covenant between the gold power and the President of the United States. There is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother to the Treasury. It is the man in the golden mask.

In my judgment the coin bonds of the Government, payable now in silver, are a principal element in the financial question. The national funded debt held by the syndicate of debt and gold, which are the same in action and interest, is one of the main keys to the monetary position in the United States.

If we, on the one hand, were to abandon silver and permit a change in the contract so as to make the bonds payable in gold, the syndicate of gold would lose their interest to a certain and very large degree in the coinage question here. They would take their $800,000,000 in gold and quit. On the other hand, if we maintain the bimetallic standard in the payment of the funded debt and enforce it by opening the mint to the free coinage of silver, the syndicate of debt would change front immediately. They would become instantly as zealous and ardent friends of the standard silver dollar as the Senator from Colorado who introduced this resolution or the Senator from Missouri who reported it.

The syndicate would not allow the loss of one-half of their large investment of these bonds by any discount of the silver coin in which they are made payable. They would insist that the money in which by the contract their debts are payable should be deemed and taken as sound, honest, solvent coin worth its face value. Every fundholder in the world would join them in this demand.

The syndicate of national debt is a closely allied fraternity, few in number, but vast in influence and in the circuit of its power. Never since national debt was first invented in the last four centuries have they lost an investment or discounted its value in any quarter of the globe. They make common cause in the collection, security, and solvency of debt incurred by any and all governments. They would take a summary vengeance in their own way upon any government which would intervene to discredit the silver coinage of the United States in which their bonds are payable.

All these fund-creditors would concur in the policy of sustaining the paying and purchasing power of that coinage. Whatever might be the fortune of silver coin elsewhere, that silver coin of the United States in which the bonds of the syndicate are payable would by reason of the vast interests pledged and engaged in its behalf be counted at its full nominal face value. Debtor and creditor would alike unite in maintaining the silver coinage of our country, and would together join in a great act of justice, honesty, honor, and integrity in upholding and fulfilling the terms of the original contract, by which these bonds are payable in silver.

Both parties, the Government and the people of the United States, by their obligations, the holders of the funded debt with the enormous amount of $800,000,000 at stake, would be pledged to the maintenance of the silver-dollar coinage of this Republic.

Two hundred million dollars of that debt was contracted quite recently, and it is not only payable in silver by the text of the act of 1869, but expressly announced as payable in silver by the contemporary action of Congress at the time when the loan was made.

There was an effort by direct bill to make future issues and the new issues of which I have spoken payable in gold. It was defeated in the Senate by a very large majority. And yet, not satisfied with this discomfiture, the President of the United States then in office, backed by all the prestige and power of the Treasury, came here with his message to advise us that these bonds, the recent bonds, should, for reasons which he gave at the time, be made payable in gold, and in gold only. The Senate rejected that advice, as it had defeated the bill which attempted to make the bonds payable in gold.

What, then, did the bondholders do when they bought the first, and especially when they bought the last and recent issue of United States bonds? They paid in gold above par for the face value of those $200,000,000 of bonds payable in silver coin. In other words, they bought the right, thirty years after the date of those bonds, to demand and receive from the Treasury of the United States the nominal face value of the bonds in standard silver dollars, and the whole $800,000,000 is subject to the same covenanted condition.

What, then, is the estimate, what is the judgment and the belief of this syndicate of gold as to the real value of the standard silver dollar? They believe, and they have backed their belief with their money, that the standard silver dollar is now a lawful, sound coin, worth its face value, and that thirty years from now it will be of the same value—an equivalent for the gold that they gave in the purchase of their bonds when they paid their bids.

How this estimate and judgment and action of the syndicate of gold is contradicted by their utterances elsewhere is immaterial. We know what they did. What they say is different. What they say is also wholly indifferent. Actions, investments, the deposit of money in exchange for another kind of money—silver—as defined by law; these are louder and stronger than any words. How this judgment, opinion, and action of the syndicate give the lie to that perfidious falsehood, which they have taken the pains to publish in every form of mendacity, that the standard silver dollar is only worth half its face value, and is bound to be at some time in the future, thirty years from now, worth even less than that. Their own action is a denial of this untruth.

Sir, I return to a consideration of that partial restoration of silver in 1878 of which I have spoken. There were in that enactment two limitations—one on the amount to be coined, the other on the legal-tender quality of the dollar coined. Both of these limitations were the result of the compromise between the friends and the enemies of free-silver coinage. The limitation on the legal-tender quality of the dollar is contained in the phrase making it a legal tender for the payment of all debts "except where otherwise expressly provided in the contract."

There is no doubt that at the time of the passage of this enactment the syndicate of gold designed to have a section in it similar to the section in the statute of frauds, requiring all contracts above the value of $50 to be in writing, and requiring in that instance all debts above the value of $50 to be payable in gold, and gold only. This would have included, inclosed, and shut down the national bonded debt to its compulsory and perpetual payment in gold. The syndicate were not successful in procuring that legislation.

They were compelled to accept, because they were driven to accept, the words instead "except where otherwise expressly stipulated in the contract." That is a limitation upon the legal-tender function of the silver dollar, but it leaves the silver dollar still a legal payment for any bond of the United States, because no bond of the United States is included in the phase "except where otherwise expressly stipulated in the contract." We have made no bonds payable in gold. The gold notes and bonds provided for in the clause quoted are all contracts between private parties.

No bond of the United States is made payable in gold, and, therefore, under the act of 1878, the standard silver dollar was restored to its functions in the same manner as when the act of 1869 was passed, when it was declared to be coin—a coin in which payments of bonds could be made.

One of the many propositions submitted to us quite recently, and commended to our careful consideration, under the shape of monetary or financial reform, sets out with the proposal to make all contracts payable in gold. This, of course, includes the national debt, and I believe the language is purposely devised in order to include the national debt, without regard to its effect as to other debts. It would have seemed harsh to state that "all bonds issued by the United States shall be payable in gold;" but it would seem not so selfish and exclusive to say, on the other hand, as this proposed enactment does, that all contracts shall be payable in gold. That effects the purpose of gold payment of the national debt without exposing the exclusiveness of which I have spoken.

In a further section of this same proposed enactment, indorsed by one of these monetary commissions, they say that they leave untouched the status of the standard silver dollar and of the currency now in circulation in this country.

Let us compare these two sections together and see what truth, or what honesty, or what provision for a sound monetary system there is in a comparison of these two sections. The first section provides that all contracts shall be payable in gold.

The subsequent section pretends that it would not disturb the status of the standard silver dollar; but the debt-paying and legal-tender status of the standard silver dollar depends upon the observance of the act of 1878. It is legal tender in all contracts "not otherwise specially provided for;" but when you provide that all contracts shall be payable in gold, the national debt, as well as all other obligations, come in under the phrase "except where otherwise expressly stipulated in the contract," and the silver standard dollar is left without the debt-paying quality in relation to the national debt or any other obligation. Such is the effect of the duplicity plainly set forth in one of these proposed enactments.

There is one mark, Mr. President, one indication, one sign for all generations, of the true relative value of the precious metals, silver and gold, and there is but one sign of such real value at any given time—it is the ratio. The ratio is the official expression, the deliberate legislation, or administrative opinion of the Government making and maintaining it, upon the proportionate value of silver and gold compared with each other at the time when it is made for purposes of coinage.

The ratio is not, and never has been, affected by the current prices in the market of either gold or silver bullion, subject as they both are to constant changes, but it has always been fixed by taking careful account of the stock of silver and gold in use in the world at the time of any proposed change, waiting patiently for the effect of the gradual distribution of this stock, taking into account the added product of both silver and gold during the period since the establishment of the last ratio, and averaging the value of each in the long period of a century or two centuries.

No ratio has ever been established for any other reason or for any other cause. But the ratio, although adopted independently by different countries, has always shown, without real concert of action, the appearance of common consent; but it is only an appearance. The differences of ratio constantly appear even between governments where their territories join, as France and Spain. The differences are very small, but they are real, existing, and have not disappeared in four centuries, and there never was a time when these differences in the ratio did not exist.

If our forefathers or grand forefathers, if you will allow me the expression, in France, in England, in Germany, and the other countries of the Old World had waited for an international agreement upon the subject of ratio, no silver would ever have been coined up to this day; and the man who now bases his support of free coinage upon the condition that there shall be an international agreement as to ratio makes a condition which the past has shown to be wholly unnecessary and which the future will show to be impracticable.

I have a profound conviction that silver will be restored to its free and full functions as money, not by any international unit ratio, but by each country upon its own ratio and for its own reasons, as it has been coined for centuries before our time.

The differences in the ratio have been so small because they are fixed upon the consideration of the same natural causes—production, increased or decreased, of both metals with the incidents of distribution in the world of coined money. For this reason changes in the ratio have been so slow and gradual that no man in any ordinary business has ever lost or gained anything by such changes, whether he did business in the nineteenth, eighteenth, or seventeenth century. Only the very largest dealers in gold or silver bullion have been either gainers or losers by any change in the ratio made for these normal and natural causes.

Arbitrary legislation or action for the direct purpose of artificially affecting the price of silver or gold bullion, such as that of 1873 in this country and others, had not before our day been resorted to. There is no such act in any former age, and such arbitrary hostile legislation has never affected any change in the ratio, not even in our day, because it is not founded on natural causes and has no connection with either the increase or decrease of the gold or silver product.

The ratio was advanced from 3 to 4 points during the twelve hundred years from the Christian era to the century immediately preceding the voyage and discovery of Columbus, from 9½ or 10, which it was at the time of the Christian era, to 11 and 11½ in one or two countries, to 12 at the time of the discovery of America.

At the beginning of the sixteenth century, in 1500, near the time of the Columbian voyage, but after it, the ratio stood at an average of 12 to 1. That was the general average. It was not precisely the same in any three countries. The ratio changed afterwards, in the period from 1492 to 1792, the year of our first coinage, in three hundred years, from 12 to 1 to 15 to 1—only 3 points.

In our own national life of one hundred years the ratio has changed 1 point, and that change has been half a point at a time—first from 15 to 15½, and lastly from 15½ to 16, where it stands to-day and will stand. But Europe, in this same period of one hundred years, from 1792 to 1892, has changed the ratio only one-half a point, the average ratio being there 15½ to 1. It has changed the ratio in one hundred years from 15 to 15½.

The two centuries immediately succeeding the discovery of America witnessed the largest addition to the world's stock of silver that has ever occurred. For a long period of years the treasure ships of Spain, sailing twice a year—every six months—carried not only large amounts of silver in the hands of officers, crew, and passengers, but those ships were freighted with silver bars, with silver plate, and with silver ingots on public, royal account, as we freight ships to-day with lumber or with coal.

This large transmission of silver, the semiannual voyage of the treasure fleets from the Americas to Spain, lasted about forty years. It represented not only the mining and the smelting of that time, but the silver hoards of ages accumulated by the Aztecs and other native American tribes, which had become prize of war to the Spaniard. The consequence was that the coinage of silver, the Spanish milled, pillared dollar, became cosmopolitan in its character.

It went to China, to India, to every part of Europe, carrying with it, as the historian testifies, new life and vigor into every department of business and enterprise. It came to the colonies, now the United States, and to the colonies then of Spain in Central and South America. It was everywhere distributed, and this distribution was permanent. I recollect in my boyhood, as gentlemen of my age here may recollect, and even younger manhood, seeing occasionally this Spanish milled, pillared silver dollar. It was rare, but it was a testimonial of the world-wide circulation which had been given to the post-Columbian coinage of silver by Spain in the mints of the Old and the New World.

What was the effect upon the ratio of this large increment of the stock of silver of the world, exceeding in quantity and value all succeeding additions to the world's silver? It has been heretofore noted, but I will restate it. Taking into account, as the fixation of the ratio always does, the contemporaneous supply of gold, and waiting patiently the effect of distribution, the ratio, as before noted, changed three points in three hundred years—one point in one hundred years—one point in each of the two centuries wherein this vast transmission of silver had been made from the New World to the Old. This was the sum total of the effect on the ratio.

Mr. President, it is useless, it is almost absurd, to talk about the present product of silver being an overproduction, or to assert that silver in its value has declined from any such natural cause. The unchanged ratio of 16 to 1, the unchanged ratio of 15½ to 1 untouched, makes this demonstration clearly apparent, and confounds the falsifier who attempts to justify his pretension that the true value of silver has fallen by overproduction. Silver was not demonetized on account of its fall in value.

It was first demonetized by Great Britain in 1816; but had silver fallen at that time? The product of gold and silver was normal and natural at that time. Silver was demonetized in 1816 in the interest of the gold syndicate of Great Britain, standing at the head of the credit and commerce of the world, for the purpose of compelling the payment of their debt and the payment for their commodities to be made in that kind of money—gold—which they owned and controlled. Demonetization was made without any reference to the value of silver.

Silver was not demonetized because of any fall in its value. In 1870, and from 1870 to 1874, when the United States and European Governments closed their mints to its free coinage, it was demonetized by those Governments through the interest of the syndicate in gold to create that monopoly of money which would enable that syndicate to control the debts and credits of the world. Silver was not demonetized because its value had fallen at that time; but the price of its bullion was afterward depressed, and continues to be beaten down by the artificial and forcible exclusion of it from the mints and its lessened demand for money use, egged on by the bulls in gold, who for the last hundred years have beared silver in every market.

The fall in the price of silver bullion is an effect of demonetization, and of that other influence in aid of demonetization which first originated the policy of the single gold standard. If silver bullion was to-day at its former full price, $1.29 per ounce, or if it was 3 per cent above that price, as it was when the Government of the United States demonetized it, those interested owners of the gold and the debt of the world would still be unalterably opposed to its remonetization. In fact, the more it is worth the more deadly is their hatred and hostility.

The syndicate of gold, seeking thus the absolute control of the finances of the world, is not in any way primarily concerned about the value of silver bullion nor in the slightest degree about the ratio. They care nothing for either. They commenced now nearly a century ago to destroy silver coin as money without regard to its value, relative or absolute, and they continue in that course.

That was their purpose in the beginning, and it will be their purpose to the end. To remonetize silver is to abandon their scheme and to destroy the policy of the syndicate, which has been from the beginning, and is now, to compel the payment of all debt in gold. Thus they may inaugurate that state of bondage which I have spoken of and levy taxes upon mankind forever. The millionaire owners of gold and bonds, those who compose the syndicate, the gold trust, will take no serious account of the present artificial or forced price of silver bullion in determining its real value.

So long as silver is or can be held down in duress, in chains, in fetters and captivity, and its condition can be shown as an argument for its destruction, they will continue to prolong this violent depression; but they know and believe, and have affirmed this belief with their money in gold, that this price of silver bullion is not its real value. That is very evident from their own action when we get a glimpse, which is not very often, of their action in the premises. Let us now look at some of their recent actions.

In that very eloquent but informal report, as he called it, of the honorable junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] the other day, we learned that there is a public law of England authorizing the Bank of England to keep one-fifth of its reserve in silver, and that there was a proposal by the bank, assented to by the Government a few months ago, that they would act upon this law and keep one-fifth of the reserve in silver. When the knowledge came to the public that this proposal had been made and accepted, the syndicate of gold took the bank and the Government both by the throat and said, "This shall not be done."

Would such a proposition be for a moment entertained either by the bank or the Government of England, would such a law be allowed to remain on the statute book of Great Britain a single day, if the Government or the bank believed that silver bullion had lost half of its real value?

Would the Bank of England—that ancient maidenly spinster in finance, who issues no bills the second time, but once redeemed keeps them always behind the counter, who would be startled from her propriety by a mere suggestion of suspension, or nonpayment, or of payment in discredited coin—make such a proposition, would it permit a law allowing it to be made, if its reserve in silver were not believed to be the equivalent of its reserve in gold?

The Bank and the Government of England both know of verity and in truth that the bullion and the silver coin of the United Kingdom, coined at the ratio of 15½ to 1, is as sound money to-day and worth as much as it was in 1816, when they first demonetized silver. That is the only reason why they allow silver to be part of the reserve. It is part of the authorized reserve of the Bank of England provided by public law, not redeemable in anything, thoroughly independent, of essential value, the equivalent of gold, used to redeem the Bank of England's notes in silver, authorized by a public law of the Empire to be used and paid for that purpose.

The bank, that venerable mistress of the world's finance, has perhaps not forgotten certain passages in her own history. Twice she has paid over the counter in silver her notes presented for redemption. Not only has she paid in silver, but she has paid in shillings and sixpences, the very lowest denominations of that coin. And even in times quite recent, upon the failure of the Barings and the bankruptcy of the Argentine credits, the Bank of England would have ceased payment in gold if that of France had not come to her assistance; would have paid then in silver but for French aid.

This is the reason why the English Government allows the bank by law to cast an anchor to the windward, and provides especially for the silver reserve in its vaults. The Bank of France came to the rescue of that of England by heavy shipments of gold coin, sorely needed across the channel. This gold, in the very moment of the British bank's emergency, was sent from France, bimetallic France, which had at the time a very large coinage of gold, a still larger silver coinage than ours, alike receivable and payable for its own paper and public dues, payable at the option of the payer, and not at the option of the note holder.

According to theorists, so prominent in leading articles in the gold press, in reviews, magazines, leaflets, and pamphlets so full of the motley unwisdom of the gold standard, there could have been no gold in France at that time and there should be none there now. With more than a century's free coinage of silver, and with the present coinage, full coinage to-day on government account of silver at the European ratio, less than our own, gold, according to their theory, should leave France, should be driven from France, should not be found in France. France should have lost all her gold long ago.

But gold did not leave France. It was neither carried nor driven away by the presence of silver, this immense mass of silver, which supported and surrounded it; and at the time of the Argentine failure France had millions of gold to spare for a needy sister in England. The only time when gold in any large quantities left France was when it was sent to the relief of the English Bank and Government. Then it was led away.

The gold standard, the sound money, the stable currency prevalent in the British financial zone, so much belauded by worshipers of gold, had all failed; totally, utterly failed. French bimetallism came to the rescue. France came with her gold—gold and silver, not gold without silver—to save the Bank of England in her extremity.

Again, we listened, in the very able and interesting report of the ex-member of the International Monetary Commission, to a detail of the facts of their negotiations, in which it appeared that the Republic of France had offered to go to the free coinage of silver, and preferred to do it, on their old ratio of 15½ to 1. That was a solemn public proposition by the Government of the Republic of France, made only a few months ago. I will not enter into formal laudations of the French financial system.

It is bimetallic. It is founded upon the coinage and use of both of the precious metals as full money of final payment. It is sound; it is honest; it is a stable system, one which has stood the severest tests and the highest, heaviest, and most prolonged strains successfully. It has been subject even to extraordinary perils, owing to the misfortunes of the war with Germany.

Now, I do not believe, and no rational man not blinded by the ophthalmia of the gold dust can believe, that the Government of the French Republic would offer to open their mints to silver at the existing ratio if they entertained the opinion that the forced decline in the price of silver bullion had at all affected its real worth and use as money.

If they believed that the fall in the price of silver was due to its overproduction, or to any other natural cause, they would not and could not either allow its further coinage or its free coinage upon any condition, either of operation or cooperation. To admit or to retain in the circulation of France, with cooperation or without cooperation, many millions of silver coin, and at the same time declare that this vast volume of money was worth only half its face value, is a blasphemy against the people and the Government of the Republic of France.

Such action would disturb their whole system. Such a currency would be unsound, unstable. They have no such currency and never had any unsound money in France under the present Republic. The French Government declares and asserts in the act and fact of payment and redemption of its notes that its silver coin is in all respects solvent at its full face value. In so doing it squarely contradicts that monstrous falsity of the gold trust that there is any true cause or genuine reason for a change of ratio, or for the nonuser of silver as money at the existing ratio in this country or any other.

It is no wonder, under these circumstances, Mr. President, that the United States still makes and continues to utter its bonds payable in coin, not in gold, and that those silver bonds of the United States bring a premium in the market.

It will be noted in the same address of the late member of the International Monetary Commission that noncooperation, and that by a single power, is the obstacle in the way of the European remonetization of silver. It is not the artificial and compulsory reduction in the price of silver bullion.

That is not once spoken of. It is the intense opposition of the syndicate of gold to the abandonment of their long-matured scheme for the spoliation of the wealth of the world by the debasement of one-half of its specie currency. It is not in the mine or in the miner, or his silver product, less or more, that the hindrance to free coinage is found. It is in the mint, the British, foreign mint, which is owned, controlled, and enslaved by the gold interest and influence.

In the same able speech of the honorable ex-commissioner there are some detailed accounts of the recent English financial policy in relation to their extensive and very populous province of India. Some time since in India the British Government demonetized silver and adopted the gold standard. But quite recently they have made a change in the ratio, conceded to be wholly local and provincial, and have commenced recoinage of silver. They have changed the ratio from 15½ to 1 to 22 to 1.

And they have made an order in council that this change shall operate upon current payments into the Indian treasury, thus compelling the 300,000,000 people in that province to pay an immense sum in dues, taxes, and in debts in silver, at a less value than they had received it, at a less value than the British Government had before coined, uttered, and paid it to the inhabitants of India. Sir, this is an act replete with every element of injustice and misrule. This act has behind it the right of force, but not the force of right.

For ages the people of India have used silver as money, not because they have no gold, but they will not use gold as money, even when it is coined and offered to them. They have the silver habit, as many people in the United States have. They like to see and handle that coin. For ages and generations they have preferred it, they have hoarded it, so that it is an axiom among writers upon coinage that silver flows constantly to India and that it never returns.

Perhaps in this order of the British Government there may be some slight admixture of patriotism with pelf. They perhaps have availed themselves of present circumstances to counteract this historical current of silver to the Indies, and to say that they will make silver flow back, at least so far as the coffers of the Indian treasury. It may be so.

But the spoliation of India has been such a familiar and often-recurring feature in English policy as scarcely to attract attention. India is not a constituency. It is only a dependency. It has no representation in Parliament. Its people have no vote or voice in the administration of its financial affairs. It falls an easy prey to English tyranny and oppression. But just now India, in the zone of finance and in the wide horizon of the money theme, occupies a very distinct and prominent position.

India juts out like a promontory of rock into the sea of this debate, because it is the first and only place in the world where, to use the language of the honorable Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, the gold standard is more plainly declared and applied in the financial policy of the country. It is the only place where the full programme of the gold standard has been begun and entered upon; a programme which arrogantly demands not only that the world shall be deprived of the further use of silver as money of final payment, but that the silver now in use shall be discounted and discredited for the profit of the gold trust.

And yet the British Government of to-day might say, as Lord Clive said in his time, "Charge me with fraud and peculation! My God, sir, I am astonished at my moderation." The millions of India are in hopeless, helpless subjection to foreign rule. They are in the attitude of waiting—waiting to be pillaged. Why did the English gold-standard rulers stop at 22 to 1? Why did they not fix it at 32 to 1, so that they might clip the roupee one-half and make an end? They had the power absolute. They had nothing to fear.

The military and naval forces of Great Britain, under the flag of England, were there at their service to enforce the gold standard, to make it more plainly applicable to the financial policy of India. No, they had nothing to fear. However, the British Government did have a remnant of shame. They were loath, very loath, to face the people at home, to face the public of all Europe upon such a grand-larceny proposition as 32 to 1. Why does not the British Government change the ratio at home in the United Kingdom? Why does it not clip its own coinage, the crown, the shilling, and sixpence, as it has clipped the rupee of India?

Many a time and oft have the Princes of the Palace of Gold met in conclave to consider this question. How can we ever persuade the people of the United States to discard their standard silver dollar and to issue their bonds payable in gold as long as we allow in every country in Europe this vast amount of silver coin, coined at a half point below their own, to circulate at its full face value? Often have they considered that. Many a time has this golden cabal discussed the proposition of changing the ratio and of clipping the silver coinage of Europe. As far as legislation is concerned, they can entirely control it. Why have they not made the change in ratio and why have they not imposed the clipping of the coin?

The powers of the gold trust pretend that patriotism, honesty, and righteousness demand the permanent demonetization of silver and its perpetual debasement. The powers with those motives behind them should have no fear. Yet the gold rulers of Europe have fear—naked fear and trembling. It is not conscience which makes cowards of these chieftains. Neither is it shame which makes them hesitate. They know that this pretense of a fall in the real value of silver, based upon the salted and bogus price which they have fastened by their own action and procurement upon silver bullion, is a spurious and base pretense.

They know this, but what hinders them in the further movements of the gold campaign is that they also know that the masses of the people of Europe are fully aware of the falsehood contained in this pretension. The day that the gold trust might decree a change in the ratio and the rate of discount upon the current silver coinage, the countless multitudes of silver users having these coins in their pockets and in their purses, small in detail, but millions in the aggregate, would rise in every market of the world to defy and defeat this gigantic act of rapine.

For a few days there would be no coin quotations; but when the quotations reappeared, those of silver coinage would be at par at the old ratio. The money changers would be driven from their position, and the raid of the gold trust would be heard of no more. But this would give to the syndicate and all others a most terrible distrust and suspicion of the miscarriage of their scheme.

Justice, honor, patriotism have very little natural kinship with gold. They have a very old and innate relationship to the multitude of mankind, one which the history of our race, in the course of God's providence, has often shown and vindicated. Why do not the followers of the gold standard in this country propose a change of ratio and a discount upon the current coinage? Our ratio is 16 to 1. There it stands. The world has its history by heart. We all know it was a growth and is a growth—the growth of better times than these, founded upon the action of better and abler men than in the last ten years have darkened with their shadows the doors of the Treasury.

The gold trust has circulated the falsehood that our coin is worth but half its value. Why not propose a change in the ratio? Because the ratio is established by the averages of centuries, and the ratio takes no notice except of natural causes; and, like the Pharisees of old, they fear the people.

Seeing, then, that the syndicate of gold in Europe, the lords of its whole life and action, fear to take any step in the direction of changing the ratio or reducing the coin value of silver in the United States or elsewhere, we should here in all confidence restore silver to its full free function as money, and retain our bonds for the present and in all the future, if, unfortunately, we have ever to give any others than those now in existence, payable in coin, not in gold, and this policy we may pursue without let, loss, or hindrance from any foreign power or foreign interest. We are entitled to the freedom of the mint within the constitutional limitations of gold and silver as we are entitled to the freedom of speech and the freedom of the press. We can not rightfully be deprived of this liberty of the mint by domestic legislation, much less by foreign laws or alien and foreign influence.

The foreign magi, the high priests in the innermost shrine of the temple of gold, aliens to this Government and enemies of this Republic, the rulers in the synagogue of millionaires, do not deign to argue the question of free coinage. Their contempt of the opinions of the people and their representatives is not concealed. It is manifest. These high priests, such as those who dictated to the British Government its recent policy of rapine in India, are men of few words and of many dollars.

When they speak, they lie. When they are silent, they steal. Their position is not one of argument; rather of naked, swollen insolence. They say to the people of the United States, "Pay your debts in gold or we will withdraw credits and enforce collections." Neither the people nor the Government of the United States need pay the slightest attention to this menace.

The United States have only to act, in answer to this threat, by standing by the existing contract, to freely coin silver with which to fulfill that contract, to see these braggarts of the gold trust abandon their threats and insolence, to see them compelled by their own interests and by the prudential fear and care of their own investments to maintain the face value of the standard silver dollar as fully as we ourselves could wish or desire.

What have the people of the United States to gain by joining the unholy alliance which would exclude silver from our mints and make our bonds payable in gold alone? We produce within our own territory one-third of the silver bullion of the world. We have five hundred millions of standard silver dollars, either in coin or the paper representation of it, in circulation, in daily use as standard money.

We need much more, not only for the account of the national debt, but of the uncounted millions of private debt which must at some time be paid out of the profits of the business of the people now everywhere depressed and embarrassed by the threatened approach of the single gold standard, that standard of money and values which Hamilton and his illustrious contemporaries declared more than one hundred years ago to be too narrow and restricted for American policy.

Certainly we have thus far gained nothing by our approximate approach to or reluctant dalliance with the gold standard. Executive dalliance with this gilded peril has already cost the people sums almost incalculable. Our gains by this attempt to aid the gold trust have been on the minus side. Our losses from its further continuance and more plain application can not now be even estimated, when values of all kinds have shrunk to the lowest point, when prices have been shriveled to the uttermost farthing, when wages have been scaled down to the last extremity, when the great army of unemployed has received its last recruits, when the national honor has been disparaged by the debasement of our silver coinage, when a so-called stable currency has been issued, upon neither gold nor silver, but upon that mysterious and indescribable myth called "resources," then, and not till then, we can make some reasonable calculation of the losses incurred by the adoption of the single gold standard. For my part I shall vote for no scheme of pretended monetary or financial reform which is not founded upon the free coinage of silver and gold as full legal-tender money of the United States, and which does not provide that the standard silver dollar of the present fineness and ratio shall be lawfully payable and receivable in liquidation of all bonds of the United States and in satisfaction of all notes and obligations of the Treasury, whether they be funded or unfunded.

I shall join hands with no conference, with no commission, which seek by mere ex post facto verbal artifice and indirection to change not only the Constitution but the laws and contracts of the United States in the interest of foreign powers and of alien trusts. With all due respect for monetary conventions, conferences, and commissions, we of the Democratic party prefer to give our confidence to the people. We put our trust in the people for the past, present, and future, knowing that the people, as they are the most powerful, so are they the most pure, the most unsubsidized, disinterested, and constant guardians of the public faith and of the national honor.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—ANNEXATION OF HAWAII.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I desire the privilege of the floor for a personal explanation and vindication which I consider to be essential under conditions that exist now. I have prepared my remarks in writing in order that there might not be any inaccuracy in my statement or any misunderstanding of the subject in hand.

I feel called upon to make a statement to the Senate on the subject of the following article, which appeared in the Post of yesterday:

MR. CLEVELAND AND ANNEXATION—HE DENIES SENATOR MORGAN'S ASSERTION THAT HE WAS IN FAVOR OF IT.

[Special to the Post.]

PRINCETON, N. J., January 22, 1898.

In reference to the assertion recently made by Senator MORGAN that ex-President Cleveland was really in favor of the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands, the ex-President to-day made the following statement:

"Anyone who knows me, or knows anything concerning my Administration, is well aware that I was always opposed to the annexation of Hawaii. I regard such a proceeding as a violent departure from our traditional policy, and as soon as possible after my inauguration I withdrew the treaty providing for annexation, which had been drawn up by President Harrison. Actuated by a simple desire to ascertain the exact facts relative to the Hawaiian revolution, I dispatched Mr. Blount to the islands to thoroughly investigate the situation.

"From what he told me, I was satisfied that the part played by the United States in the revolution was simply disgraceful, and it was only with a desire to see a great national wrong righted that I made the recommendations which I did to Congress. Senator MORGAN knew, or ought to have known, that I have been utterly and constantly opposed to Hawaiian annexation, and I supposed that everyone else was under the same impression."

Evidently this statement relates to proceedings in an executive session of the Senate, which Mr. Cleveland, without calling the matter to my attention, assumes to be a correct account of some observation I had made in the discussion of the Hawaiian treaty.

Without abusing the rules of the Senate and the honorable confidence which the Senate reposes in all its members and officers I can not refer to anything that has occurred in an executive session, either to admit or to deny a statement about such a matter. Whoever has reported anything it is alleged that I have said in such confidential sessions of the Senate, if he has made even a true statement, is a betrayer of confidence; and a betrayer of a just and honorable confidence is necessarily a dishonest person and is unworthy of credit. Mr. Cleveland, in accepting such a statement and in replying to it in the press without inquiry from me, displays an additional willingness to act on ex parte evidence in Hawaiian matters, and in this case, as in his former action, to adopt the assertion of some self-impeached witness as to what I have said about him. I have never stated anything more than my opinion as to the attitude of Mr. Cleveland on this subject, and that was done in no fault-finding spirit, but rather in commendation of his motives.

I can not state what I have said in an executive session of the Senate, but inasmuch as Mr. Cleveland has taken the liberty, upon a false assumption, of imputing to me certain remarks and commenting on them in a censorious way and questioning my veracity, I will now state what I believe as to the matter in question and some of the grounds for that belief.

Feeling that he deserves the scourge, he applies it to his own shoulders and seeks for a pretext in what he asserts that I have said in the confidence of an executive session of the Senate. I suppose the above-quoted statements are his, as they are printed in marks of quotation. He says:

> Senator MORGAN knows, or ought to have known, that I have been utterly and constantly opposed to Hawaiian annexation, and I supposed that every one else was under the same impression.

I knew, because he gave me to distinctly so understand, that in the time of his first Administration he was decidedly favorable to the annexation both of Hawaii and Cuba. I was not then committed to either proposition, and am not now committed to the annexation of Cuba. Not considering this declaration confidential, I have stated it to others on several occasions, as much as ten years ago and later, and I again state the fact. I am not alone in this knowledge of his attitude on the Hawaiian question, even at the time of the recent revolution; and if he will ask me the question, I will give him at least one name among his most confidential associates who has stated that he was in favor of the annexation of Hawaii, but was opposed to the manner and circumstances under which Mr. Harrison had attempted to accomplish that result.

I can not accept Mr. Cleveland's statement that "anyone who knows me (him) or knows anything concerning my (his) Administration is well aware that I was always opposed to the annexation of Hawaii." I do not believe that it is true.

He next speaks of the "traditional policy" of the United States, and says: "I regard such a proceeding as a violent departure from our traditional policy." I do not know to what fact in our history he refers as establishing "our traditional policy" against annexation.

It can not be the annexation of Alaska, which is 800 miles away from our border at its nearest point, and 3,000 miles away at its farthest points, to the north and west. He can not base a tradition hostile to annexation on the five other annexation measures relating to territory acquired from Mexico, France, Spain, and Texas, or upon the Ostend manifesto, signed by three great Democrats, then foreign ministers—Buchanan, Mason, and Soulé—in 1854. That declaration is far more weighty in Democratic circles than any imaginary traditions that ever fretted the Democratic bosoms of Mr. Cleveland and Mr. Gresham.

He can not rest this alleged tradition upon the official declarations of Daniel Webster, or Edward Everett, or Abel P. Upshur, or William L. Marcy, or William H. Seward, or Hamilton Fish, or James G. Blaine, or Thomas F. Bayard, or upon any minister of the United States that ever wrote a dispatch from Hawaii, or Frederick T. Frelinghuysen, or John W. Foster, or Mr. Sherman. This alleged "tradition" is contradicted by the official diplomatic correspondence of all these statesmen, and in the messages of Mr. Tyler, Mr. Pierce, Mr. Fillmore, Mr. Johnson, Mr. Grant, Mr. Arthur, Mr. Harrison, and Mr. McKinley.

In fact, this "traditional policy" opposed to annexation has no support in the official acts or declarations of any American statesman, even in those of Mr. Cleveland and Mr. Gresham, until the appearance of this interview in a newspaper. Neither of them ever before took ground against the annexation of Hawaii on the ground of its being opposed to "our traditional policy" in any official paper or on any ground that related to the merits of the question. If all these great men I have mentioned, whose declarations I now have before me, were guilty of a "violent departure from our traditional policy" in declaring their willingness to accept the annexation of Hawaii and, some of them, in urging it, I do not understand how or when that policy originated which so unhappily brings them under the censure of ex-President Cleveland.

Mr. Cleveland has evidently mixed up the alleged "traditional policy" of the United States with his indignation at the destruction of the monarchy in Hawaii by the inauguration of the Republic. He is very sore over that event. He says:

> As soon as possible after my inauguration—
> Referring to his second inauguration—
> I withdrew the treaty providing for annexation which had been drawn up by President Harrison.

He would have been more accurate if he had said that the treaty had been concluded and signed by the accredited negotiators of both Governments, and had been laid before the Senate by the President of the United States in a message recommending its ratification.

This withdrawal of the treaty from the Senate was immediately upon his inauguration, under the evident apprehension that the Senate would ratify the treaty if he did not act "as soon as possible."

I have never believed that this hasty act was lawful or courteous, either to the Senate or Mr. Harrison, and I am only in line with the great body of the people in the opinion that it was intended as a rebuke to Mr. Harrison that was not justified by official decorum and was not founded in justice. It had all the appearance of a hasty and vindictive act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The Senator from Alabama will suspend for a moment. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution by Mr. TELLER, declaring that all bonds of the United States issued or authorized to be issued under certain acts of Congress are payable, principal and interest, at the option of the Government of the United States, in silver dollars, etc.

Mr. FRYE. I ask that the unfinished business may be informally laid aside, retaining its place, so that the Senator from Alabama may be permitted to go on with his speech.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Such will be the order, if the Chair hears no objection. The Chair hears none, and such is the order. The Senator from Alabama will proceed.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Cleveland proceeds to say that—

> Actuated by a simple desire to ascertain the exact facts relative to the Hawaiian revolution, I dispatched Mr. Blount to the islands to thoroughly investigate the situation.

He struck before he inquired. To justify his hasty assault on the treaty he sent out Mr. Blount to inquire about the facts. "Our traditional policy," from which annexation was a "violent departure," was no part of the pretext for Blount's "paramount" mission.

Then he proceeds to say:

> From what he (Blount) told me, I was satisfied that the part played by the United States in the revolution was simply disgraceful.

This, I am sure, is the first time that an ex-President or a President has made so grave a charge against the United States. It deserves no reply, because the conduct of the accuser proves that he could not have believed it. If he had believed this, he could not have recognized the Government of Mr. Dole. He adds:

> And it was only with a desire to see a great national wrong righted that I made the recommendation I did to Congress.

When he sent Mr. Blount to Hawaii, Mr. Cleveland made no recommendation to Congress. He did not even inform Congress about Blount's mission. He was afraid that Congress would arrest it. Nor did he make any recommendation to Congress as to Hawaiian affairs for many months after that event, and after Mr. Willis had failed in the effort, made under the directions of the President, to reestablish the monarchy and to place Lilioukalani on the throne.

Then he recommended that the whole subject be taken charge of by Congress. He had failed to reestablish the monarchy and was evidently disgusted at the Republic.

Congress has not the least responsibility for anything that was done in Hawaii from the time when Mr. Cleveland withdrew the treaty until Mr. Willis had ceased to be minister to Hawaii. This effort to transfer the responsibility to Congress is without any foundation in justice. Mr. Cleveland states in the sentence from which I have just quoted as follows: "And it was only with a desire to see a great national wrong righted that I made the recommendation I did to Congress." What "great national wrong" was it that he wanted to see righted?

Beyond question, it was the overthrow of the monarchy, and he desired the restoration of Liliuokalani to the throne in order that "the disgraceful part played by the United States in the revolution"—a great national wrong—might be righted.

That is what he says he wanted to accomplish. Congress could not rectify that wrong by legislation, because it had been done by the diplomatic representative of the United States in Hawaii, who had recognized the successor Government—the provisional republic—as a government de facto.

The remedy for this great national wrong, if it was such, was exceedingly simple, and it was exclusively in the power of President Cleveland to redress it. It was merely that the President should refuse further recognition of the alleged treasonable government de facto of the revolutionists, and to accredit Mr. Blount to the de jure government of the Queen.

This Mr. Cleveland was afraid to do openly, and he resorted to intrigue. Not only was this not done, but, with a duplicity that was then without parallel or excuse, Mr. Blount was accredited to the provisional government as minister paramount, and Stevens, who had been accredited to the Queen's Government, was retained to act as minister in conjunction with Blount, notwithstanding the fact that he had recognized the provisional government as a de facto government and was then charged with being the responsible author of "the part played by the United States in the revolution," which Mr. Cleveland says was "simply disgraceful."

But Mr. Blount was charged by Mr. Cleveland with still another duty, which could only be performed by the full recognition of Liliuokalani as the rightful monarch who had been temporarily driven from the throne. That duty was to confer with her as a Queen still entitled to the throne. In this triple involvement the President of the United States forgot his duty to his disgraced country, so easy to perform by simply recalling Mr. Stevens and by accrediting Mr. Blount to the Queen's Government.

He entered upon a course of intrigue into which he was led by his fear that the Senate would refuse to confirm Mr. Blount as minister to the court of Liliuokalani. That would have settled the matter once for all; and his fears were just.

I was not in the United States then, and could not have had any voice in the matter; so I am free to discuss it.

If this question had been left to the Senate, that body would never have voted that, in the state of facts that attended the revolution in Hawaii, "the part played by the United States was simply disgraceful."

But Mr. Cleveland did not stop at this deceptive, and secret, and ungracious interference with the domestic affairs of Hawaii. He went covertly into a second intrigue in Hawaii. He sent the name of Mr. Willis to the Senate, as minister to Hawaii, vice Stevens, resigned. Mr. Willis, as he deserved to be, was confirmed as minister to Hawaii, and was expressly accredited by Mr. Cleveland to the Dole Government.

But he also went with secret instructions that he should confer with Liliuokalani as the rightful sovereign as to the terms she would make with the revolutionists, as to life, property, and amnesty, if she should be reinstated as queen by Mr. Cleveland. He saw her, stated his credentials to her secretly and under a pledge to that effect, and she, feeling secure in her returning power, with savage frankness told him what she would do, as is stated in the following dispatch of Mr. Willis to Mr. Gresham:

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Honolulu, November 16, 1893.

SIR: In the forenoon of Monday, the 13th instant, by prearrangement, the Queen, accompanied by the royal chamberlain, Mr. Robertson, called at the legation. No one was present at the half-hour interview which followed, her chamberlain having been taken to another room, and Consul-General Mills, who had invited her to come, remaining in the front of the house to prevent interruption.

After a formal greeting, the Queen was informed that the President of the United States had important communications to make to her, and she was asked whether she was willing to receive them alone and in confidence, assuring her that this was for her own interest and safety. She answered in the affirmative.

I then made known to her the President's sincere regret that, through the unauthorized intervention of the United States, she had been obliged to surrender her sovereignty, and his hope that, with her consent and cooperation, the wrong done to her and to her people might be redressed. To this she bowed her acknowledgments.

I then said to her, "The President expects and believes that when reinstated you will show forgiveness and magnanimity; that you will wish to be the queen of all the people, both native and foreign born; that you will make haste to secure their love and loyalty and to establish peace, friendship, and good government." To this she made no reply. After waiting a moment, I continued: "The President not only tenders you his sympathy, but wishes to help you. Before fully making known to you his purposes, I desire to know whether you are willing to answer certain questions which it is my duty to ask?" She answered, "I am willing." I then asked her, "Should you be restored to the throne, would you grant full amnesty as to life and property to all those persons who have been or who are now in the provisional government, or who have been instrumental in the overthrow of your government?" She hesitated a moment, and then slowly and calmly answered:

"There are certain laws of my government by which I shall abide. My decision would be, as the law directs, that such persons should be beheaded and their property confiscated to the government." I then said, repeating very distinctly her words, "It is your feeling that these people should be beheaded and their property confiscated?" She replied, "It is." I then said to her, "Do you fully understand the meaning of every word which I have said to you, and of every word which you have said to me, and if so, do you still have the same opinion?" Her answer was, "I have understood and mean all I have said, but I might leave the decision of this to my ministers." To this I replied, "Suppose it was necessary to make a decision before you appointed any ministers, and that you were asked to issue a royal proclamation of general amnesty, would you do it?"

She answered, "I have no legal right to do that, and I would not do it." Pausing a moment, she continued, "These people were the cause of the revolution and constitution of 1887. There will never be any peace while they are here. They must be sent out of the country, or punished, and their property confiscated." I then said, "I have no further communication to make to you now, and will have none until I hear from my Government, which will probably be three or four weeks."

Nothing was said for several minutes, when I asked her whether she was willing to give me the names of four of her most trusted friends, as I might, within a day or two, consider it my duty to hold a consultation with them in her presence. She assented, and gave these names: J. O. Carter, John Richardson, Joseph Nawahi, and E. C. Macfarlane.

I then inquired whether she had any fears for her safety at her present residence, Washington Square. She replied that she did have some fears; that while she had trusty friends that guarded her house every night, they were armed only with clubs, and that men shabbily dressed had been often seen prowling about the adjoining premises—a schoolhouse with large yard. I informed her that I was authorized by the President to offer her protection either on one of our war ships or at the legation, and desired her to accept the offer at once. She declined, saying she believed it was best for her at present to remain at her own residence. I then said to her that at any moment, night or day, this offer of our Government was open to her acceptance.

The interview thereupon, after some personal remarks, was brought to a close.

Upon reflection, I concluded not to hold any consultation at present with the Queen's friends, as they have no official position, and furthermore, because I feared, if known to so many, her declarations might become public, to her great detriment, if not danger, and to the interruption of the plans of our Government.

Mr. J. O. Carter is a brother of Mr. H. A. P. Carter, the former Hawaiian minister to the United States, and is conceded to be a man of high character, integrity, and intelligence. He is about 55 years old. He has had no public experience. Mr. Macfarlane, like Mr. Carter, is of white parentage, is an unmarried man, about 42 years old, and is engaged in the commission business. John Richardson is a young man about 35 years old. He is a cousin of Samuel Parker, the half-caste, who was a member of the Queen's cabinet at the time of the last revolution. He is a resident of Maui, being designated in the directory of 1889 as "attorney at law, stock raiser, and proprietor Bismark livery stable."

Richardson is "half-caste." Joseph Nawahi is a full-blooded native, practices law (as he told me) in the native courts, and has a moderate English education. He has served twenty years in the legislature, but displays very little knowledge of the structure and philosophy of the Government which he so long represented. He is 51 years old, and is president of the native Hawaiian political club.

Upon being asked to name three of the most prominent native leaders, he gave the names of John E. Bush, R. W. Wilcox, and modestly added, "I am a leader." John E. Bush is a man of considerable ability, but his reputation is very bad. R. W. Wilcox is the notorious half-breed who engineered the revolution of 1889. Of all these men, Carter and Macfarlane are the only two to whom the ministerial bureaus could be safely intrusted. In conversation with Sam Parker, and also with Joseph Nawahi, it was plainly evident that the Queen's implied condemnation of the constitution of 1887 was fully indorsed by them.

From these and other facts which have been developed I feel satisfied that there will be a concerted movement in the event of restoration for the overthrow of that constitution, which would mean the overthrow of constitutional and limited government and the absolute dominion of the Queen.

The law referred to by the Queen is Chapter VI, section 9, of the Penal Code, as follows:

"Whoever shall commit the crime of treason shall suffer the punishment of death, and all his property shall be confiscated to the Government."

There are under this law no degrees of treason. Plotting alone carries with it the death sentence.

I need hardly add, in conclusion, that the tension of feeling is so great that the promptest action is necessary to prevent disastrous consequences.

I send a cipher telegram asking that Mr. Blount's report be withheld for the present, and I send with it a telegram, not in cipher, as follows:

"Views of the first party so extreme as to require further instructions."

I am, etc.,

ALBERT S. WILLIS.

The interview which I have just read was reported to the President, and it was a very wet blanket to his enthusiastic hopes for the monarchy. Mr. Willis made another effort and yet another, with the result which I will read. In a dispatch marked "confidential," and dated Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands, December 18, 1893, to Mr. Gresham, he says:

[Confidential.]

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands, December 18, 1893.

SIR: Your cipher instructions of December 2 were received as translated at 3 p. m. Thursday, the 14th instant. An arrangement was immediately made for an interview with the Queen for Saturday, December 16 at 9 a. m.

Mr. J. O. Carter was invited to be present. Mr. Carter, as stated in my dispatch No. 3, of November 14, is a brother of the late Mr. H. A. P. Carter, who was the Hawaiian minister to the United States. He is the president and manager of the incorporated company of "C. Brewer & Co.," which does a large general mercantile and commission business, and is agent for a number of large sugar plantations. He is conceded by all factions to be a man of great intelligence and strict integrity. He is a native Hawaiian, but of American parentage.

At the appointed hour the Queen and Mr. Carter came, and the interview was, with their consent, reported stenographically by Mr. Mills, our consul-general.

I inclose the report, verified by the Queen and Mr. Carter. I also send a copy of a part of the interview with the Queen, reported in my dispatch No. 3, of November 14, which is also verified by the Queen, marked A.

Mr. Mills's report includes all that was said. It will be observed that no restrictions were placed upon the Queen or upon Mr. Carter, the object being to secure a full and unreserved expression of views.

I will not go over that part of it which I have already read from another report. Mr. Willis, addressing himself to the Queen, says:

Mr. WILLIS. I wish to ask you now, and I ask you to deliberate well before answering, whether the views expressed at that time, as read to you now, have been in any respect modified since that conversation?

The QUEEN. They have not.

Mr. WILLIS. You still adhere to your judgment, as then expressed, that all of those persons should be punished according to the law under the constitution of 1887, which is that they should be punished with capital punishment and their property confiscated?

The QUEEN. I feel that if any change should be made that they must not be permitted to remain in the country, and that their property should be confiscated. That is my view.

Mr. CARTER. You do rescind so much of that interview as pronounced upon them the death penalty?

The QUEEN. I do in that respect.

Mr. CARTER. You feel that their remaining in the country would be a constant source of trouble to you and your people?

The QUEEN. I do. I think I mentioned at the time that should they be permitted to remain, that as they have once committed treason and this being the second offense, that the next time would be dangerous for the community and the people. I think I said that in the other conversation.

Mr. CARTER. In general terms, then, you feel that the continued living in this community of these persons who were guilty of the act of 1887 and the act of the 17th of January would be dangerous and a constant menace to your people?

The QUEEN. I do. I feel also that if they were sent away they should never be permitted to return—they or their children.

Mr. CARTER. Unless you exercised clemency; or would you pronounce against them definitely now?

The QUEEN. I feel so; that they should be permanently banished, and their children.

Then the conversation went on and referred to some other matters, and there was a continued reiteration of this same determination on the part of the Queen, who had attempted to do away, by a proclamation of her own, with the constitution of 1887, which she had sworn to support, and from which she derived her election, and she had no title to office except under that constitution. Then Mr. Carter called in again.

Says Mr. Willis, in a dispatch of December 19, 1893, to Mr. Gresham, marked "confidential:"

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES.
Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands, December 19, 1893.

SIR: In the forenoon of yesterday (Monday, December 18) Mr. Mills met the Queen and Mr. Carter at the Queen's private residence, Washington Place, when the report of the interview held at the legation on the preceding Saturday was read over and verified.

After the close of Saturday's interview and the withdrawal of the parties, Mr. Carter returned to inquire whether a supplementary statement by the Queen would be received. He informed me that he had held a conversation with her a few minutes after she left the legation, and he believed that on next Monday (this being Saturday) she would desire another interview. I told him that the object of the President was to ascertain her course of action in the event of restoration; that the United States could not dictate the policy of the Queen, if restored, nor interfere in any way with the domestic affairs of her Kingdom.

A certain status or condition of affairs existed on the 17th of January, 1893, which was overthrown by our unlawful intervention. If the President, within constitutional limitations, could remedy this wrong, he was willing to do so, and to this extent only and under these circumstances only he inquired as to the future policy of the Queen. Whatever she determined upon, however, must be her voluntary act.

With this explanation I consented to receive further communications from the Queen.

In these communications she modified to some extent, but not materially, her former statement. I introduce those also as part of my remarks without stopping now to read them to the Senate. I suppose Senators have already read them.

On the 20th day of December, 1893, another confidential dispatch was sent by Mr. Willis to Mr. Gresham, as follows:

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands, December 20, 1893.

SIR: On Monday afternoon at 6 p. m., before the report of the Washington Place interview, referred to in my dispatch, No. 15, of December 19, had been written from the stenographic notes, Mr. Carter called at the legation and read to me a note to him, just received from the Queen, in which she unreservedly consented, when restored as the constitutional sovereign, to grant amnesty and assume all obligations of the provisional government.

On yesterday (Tuesday) morning at 9 o'clock Mr. Carter brought a letter from the Queen, a copy of which I inclose, and an agreement signed by her, binding herself, if restored, to grant full amnesty, a copy of which I inclose.

Very respectfully,

ALBERT S. WILLIS.

This is the Queen's letter:

[Inclosure 1 with No. 16.]

WASHINGTON PLACE, HONOLULU, December 18, 1893.

His Excellency ALBERT WILLIS,
Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary, U. S. A.

SIR: Since I had the interview with you this morning I have given the most careful and conscientious thought as to my duty, and I now of my own free will give my conclusions:

I must not feel vengeful to any of my people. If I am restored by the United States I must forget myself and remember only my dear people and my country. I must forgive and forget the past, permitting no proscription or punishment of anyone, but trusting that all will hereafter work together in peace and friendship for the good and for the glory of our beautiful and once happy land.

Asking you to bear to the President and to the Government he represents a message of gratitude from me and from my people, and promising, with God's grace, to prove worthy of the confidence and friendship of your people, I am, etc.,

LILIUOKALANI.

I will insert that, and also the letter, without now stopping to read it:

[Inclosure 2 with No. 16.]

I, Liliuokalani, in recognition of the high sense of justice which has actuated the President of the United States, and desiring to put aside all feelings of personal hatred or revenge and to do what is best for all the people of these islands, both native and foreign born, do hereby and herein solemnly declare and pledge myself that, if reinstated as the constitutional sovereign of the Hawaiian Islands, that I will immediately proclaim and declare, unconditionally and without reservation, to every person who directly or indirectly participated in the revolution of January 17, 1893, a full pardon and amnesty for their offenses, with restoration of all rights, privileges, and immunities under the constitution and the laws which have been made in pursuance thereof, and that I will forbid and prevent the adoption of any measures of proscription or punishment for what has been done in the past by those setting up or supporting the provisional government.

I further solemnly agree to accept the restoration under the constitution existing at the time of said revolution and that I will abide by and fully execute that constitution with all the guaranties as to person and property therein contained.

I furthermore solemnly pledge myself and my government, if restored, to assume all the obligations created by the provisional government, in the proper course of administration, including all expenditures for military or police services, it being my purpose, if restored, to assume the government precisely as it existed on the day when it was unlawfully overthrown.

Witness my hand this 18th of December, 1893.

LILIUOKALANI.

Attest:
J. O. CARTER.

Then, when it was supposed that this savage monarch had been outwardly subdued until she could be made to play her part, Mr. Willis saw Mr. Dole and his cabinet and put his insulting but authorized question to them. Up to that time Mr. Willis had given to Mr. Dole and his cabinet no information of his movements in reference to this secret dealing with Liliuokalani, but, on the contrary, had received from him on the 18th of December, 1893, the note which I now read:

DEPARTMENT OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands, December 18, 1893.

SIR: I am informed that you are in communication with Liliuokalani, the ex-Queen, with a view of reestablishing the monarchy in the Hawaiian Islands and of supporting her pretensions to the sovereignty. Will you inform me if this report is true or if you are acting in any way hostile to this Government.

I appreciate fully the fact that any such action upon your part in view of your official relations with this Government would seem impossible; but as the information has come to me from such sources that I am compelled to notice it, you will pardon me for pressing you for an immediate answer.

Accept the assurances of distinguished consideration with which I have the honor to be, sir,

Your excellency's obedient, humble servant,

SANFORD B. DOLE,
Minister of Foreign Affairs.

To this note no answer was given. It was merely evaded.

Then, on the 19th day of December, after this drilling and final subjugation of Liliuokalani, through the joint efforts of Mr. Willis, Mr. Carter, and four or five other men in Hawaii, the Queen consented to the agreement I have just read. Mr. Willis, taking that agreement with him, invited the Dole Government to an interview at their place of business, and with that interview he gives a memorandum, to be found on page 1274, containing the address that he made to them. He goes on in his address to review the situation and to denounce the provisional government as having been established by fraud and force. He states what had been done in respect to the treaty; that it had been withdrawn by the President of the United States, and denounces the provisional government as one that did not exist according to any law or usage which could be tolerated; and says this:

In obedience to the command of the President I have secured the Queen's agreement to this course, and I now read and deliver a writing signed by her and duly attested, a copy of which I will leave with you.

That is the agreement I have just read.

He then said, addressing Mr. Dole:

It becomes my further duty to advise you, sir, the executive of the provisional government and your ministers, of the President's determination of the question, which your action and that of the Queen devolved upon him, and that you are expected to promptly relinquish to her her constitutional authority.

And now, Mr. President and gentlemen of the provisional government, with a deep and solemn sense of the gravity of the situation, and with the earnest hope that your answer will be inspired by that high patriotism which forgets all self-interest, in the name and by the authority of the United States of America, I submit to you the question, "Are you willing to abide by the decision of the President?"

The answer of President Dole to Mr. Willis is a very extensive paper, and I will only put in extracts from pages 1276 and 1282. Mr. Dole says to Mr. Willis:

DEPARTMENT OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
Honolulu, December 23, 1893.

SIR: Your excellency's communication of December 19, announcing the conclusion which the President of the United States of America has finally arrived at respecting the application of this government for a treaty of political union with that country, and referring also to the domestic affairs of these islands, has had the consideration of the government.

While it is with deep disappointment that we learn that the important proposition which we have submitted to the Government of the United States, and which was at first favorably considered by it, has at length been rejected, we have experienced a sense of relief that we are now favored with the first official information upon the subject that has been received through a period of over nine months.

While we accept the decision of the President of the United States, declining further to consider the annexation proposition, as the final conclusion of the present Administration, we do not feel inclined to regard it as the last word of the American Government upon this subject, for the history of the mutual relations of the two countries, of American effort and influence in building up the Christian civilization which has so conspicuously aided in giving this country an honorable place among independent nations, the geographical position of these islands, and the important and, to both countries, profitable reciprocal commercial interests which have long existed, together with our weakness as a sovereign nation, all point with convincing force to political union between the two countries as the necessary logical result from the circumstances mentioned.

This conviction is emphasized by the favorable expression of American statesmen over a long period in favor of annexation, conspicuous among whom are the names of W. L. Marcy, William H. Seward, Hamilton Fish, and James G. Blaine, all former Secretaries of State, and especially so by the action of your last Administration in negotiating a treaty of annexation with this Government and sending it to the Senate with a view to its ratification.

We shall therefore continue the project of political union with the United States as a conspicuous feature of our foreign policy, confidently hoping that sooner or later it will be crowned with success, to the lasting benefit of both countries.

The additional portion of your communication, referring to our domestic affairs with a view of interfering therein, is a new departure in the relations of the two Governments. Your information that the President of the United States expects this Government "to promptly relinquish to her (meaning the ex-Queen) her constitutional authority," with the question "Are you willing to abide by the decision of the President?" might well be dismissed in a single word, but for the circumstance that your communication contains, as it appears to me, misstatements and erroneous conclusions based thereon that are so prejudicial to this Government that I can not permit them to pass unchallenged; moreover, the importance and menacing character of this proposition make it appropriate for me to discuss somewhat fully the questions raised by it.

We do not recognize the right of the President of the United States to interfere in our domestic affairs. Such right could be conferred upon him by the act of this Government, and by that alone, or it could be acquired by conquest. This I understand to be the American doctrine, conspicuously announced from time to time by the authorities of your Government.

President Jackson said in his message to Congress in 1836: "The uniform policy and practice of the United States is to avoid all interference in disputes which merely relate to the internal government of other nations, and eventually to recognize the authority of the prevailing party, without reference to the merits of the original controversy."

This principle of international law has been consistently recognized during the whole past intercourse of the two countries, and was recently reaffirmed in the instructions given by Secretary Gresham to Commissioner Blount on March 11, 1893, and by the latter published in the newspapers in Honolulu in a letter of his own to the Hawaiian public. The words of these instructions which I refer to are as follows: "The United States claim no right to interfere in the political or domestic affairs or in the internal conflicts of the Hawaiian Islands other than as herein stated (referring to the protection of American citizens) or for the purpose of maintaining any treaty or other rights which they possess." The treaties between the two countries confer no right of interference.

Upon what, then, Mr. Minister, does the President of the United States base his right of interference? Your communication is without information upon this point, excepting such as may be contained in the following brief and vague sentences: "She (the ex-Queen) was advised and assured by her ministers and leaders of the movement for the overthrow of her government that if she surrendered under protest her case would afterwards be fairly considered by the President of the United States. The Queen finally yielded to the armed forces of the United States then quartered in Honolulu, relying on the good faith and honor of the President, when informed of what had occurred, to undo the action of the minister and reinstate her and the authority which she claimed as the constitutional sovereign of the Hawaiian Islands." Also, "it becomes my further duty to advise you, sir, the executive of the provisional government, and your ministers, of the President's determination of the question which your action and that of the Queen devolved upon him, and that you are expected to promptly relinquish to her her constitutional authority."

I understand that the first quotation is referred to in the following words of the second: "Which your action and that of the Queen devolved upon him" (the President of the United States), and that the President has arrived at his conclusions from Commissioner Blount's report. We have had as yet no opportunity of examining this document, but from extracts published in the papers and for reasons set forth hereafter we are not disposed to submit the fate of Hawaii to its statements and conclusions. As a matter of fact, no member of the executive of the provisional government has conferred with the ex-Queen, either verbally or otherwise, from the time the new government was proclaimed till now, with the exception of one or two notices which were sent to her by myself in regard to her removal from the palace and relating to the guards which the government first allowed her and perhaps others of a like nature. I infer that a conversation which Mr. Damon, then a member of the advisory council, is reported by Mr. Blount to have had with the ex-Queen on January 17, and which has been quoted in the newspapers, is the basis of this astounding claim of the President of the United States of his authority to adjudicate upon our right as a government to exist.

Mr. Damon, on the occasion mentioned, was allowed to accompany the cabinet of the former Government, who had been in conference with me and my associates, to meet the ex-Queen. He went informally, without instructions and without authority to represent the Government or to assure the ex-Queen "that if she surrendered under protest her case would afterwards be fairly considered by the President of the United States." Our ultimatum had already been given to the members of the ex-cabinet who had been in conference with us. What Mr. Damon said to the ex-Queen he said on his individual responsibility and did not report it to us. Mr. Blount's report of his remarks on that occasion furnish to the Government its first information of the nature of those remarks. Admitting for argument's sake that the Government had authorized such assurances, what was "her case" that was afterwards to "be fairly considered by the President of the United States"?

Was it the question of her right to subvert the Hawaiian constitution and to proclaim a new one to suit herself, or was it her claim to be restored to the sovereignty, or was it her claim against the United States for the alleged unwarrantable acts of Minister Stevens, or was it all these in the alternative; who can say? But if it had been all of these, or any of them, it could not have been more clearly and finally decided by the President of the United States in favor of the provisional government than when he recognized it without qualification and received its accredited commissioners, negotiated a treaty of annexation with them, received its accredited envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, and accredited successively two envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to it; the ex-Queen in the meantime being represented in Washington by her agents, who had full access to the Department of State.

I omit the reading of other parts of Mr. Dole's letter to Mr. Willis, which, while they are important, and are marked with candor and high ability, are not necessary to be quoted on this occasion. I will read only his closing remarks, which are as follows:

Although the situation at the close of the session was deeply discouraging to the community, it was accepted without any intention of meeting it by other than legal means. The attempted coup d'état of the Queen followed, and her ministers, threatened with violence, fled to the citizens for assistance and protection; then it was that the uprising against the Queen took place, and, gathering force from day to day, resulted in the proclamation of the provisional government and the abrogation of the monarchy on the third day thereafter.

No man can correctly say that the Queen owed her downfall to the interference of American forces. The revolution was carried through by the representatives, now largely reenforced, of the same public sentiment which forced the monarchy to its knees in 1887, which suppressed the insurrection of 1889, and which for twenty years has been battling for representative government in this country. If the American forces had been absent the revolution would have taken place, for the sufficient causes for it had nothing to do with their presence.

I, therefore, in all friendship of the Government of the United States, which you represent, and desiring to cherish the good will of the great American people, submit the answer of my Government to your proposition, and ask that you will transmit the same to the President of the United States for his consideration.

Though the provisional government is far from being "a great power" and could not long resist the forces of the United States in a hostile attack, we deem our position to be impregnable under all legal precedents, under the principles of diplomatic intercourse, and in the forum of conscience. We have done your Government no wrong; no charge of discourtesy is or can be brought against us. Our only issue with your people has been that, because we revered its institutions of civil liberty, we have desired to have them extended to our own distracted country, and because we honor its flag and deeming that its beneficent and authoritative presence would be for the best interests of all our people, we have stood ready to add our country, a new star, to its glory, and to consummate a union which we believed would be as much for the benefit of your country as ours. If this is an offense, we plead guilty to it.

I am instructed to inform you, Mr. Minister, that the provisional government of the Hawaiian Islands respectfully and unhesitatingly declines to entertain the proposition of the President of the United States that it should surrender its authority to the ex-Queen.

This answer is made not only upon the grounds hereinbefore set forth, but upon our sense of duty and loyalty to the brave men whose commissions we hold, who have faithfully stood by us in the hour of trial, and whose will is the only earthly authority we recognize. We can not betray the sacred trust they have placed in our hands, a trust which represents the cause of Christian civilization in the interests of the whole people of these islands.

With assurances of the highest consideration,

I have, etc.,

SANFORD B. DOLE,
Minister of Foreign Affairs.

His Excellency ALBERT S. WILLIS,
United States Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary.

Seeing that he had a native Hawaiian to deal with who was incapable of intrigue, and who loved his honor and his people, Mr. Cleveland retired from the contest and attempted to load the responsibility on Congress. It was then, and only then, that he concluded to refer Hawaiian affairs to Congress, which he did in a message, without any advice or recommendations.

When I returned to the country I found these matters in a disagreeable shape, and was instructed by the Senate, along with my colleagues on the Committee on Foreign Relations, to inquire into Hawaiian affairs, which we did fully and with perfect impartiality. That report is before the Senate, and the whole world can read it.

Believing, as I had a right to believe, that Mr. Cleveland was not opposed to annexation, but that he felt that Liliuokalani was still the rightful sovereign, I was convinced that he had a purpose in restoring her to the throne that did not openly appear and that his purpose was to do what that great Democrat from New York, Mr. Marcy, had tried to do, to annex Hawaii to the United States and to pension Liliuokalani and Kaiulani.

It never occurred to me that Mr. Cleveland's soul would revolt against annexation on Democratic grounds after the great precedent that Mr. Marcy had established, or on "traditional" grounds, when all the great diplomatists and Presidents since Mr. Adams had looked to Hawaii as an heir to our liberties.

In examining Mr. Blount's report to the President, I found a statement written and signed by Liliuokalani, in which she says:

I also wrote a letter to Mr. Cleveland, dated the 31st of January, 1893:

His Excellency GROVER CLEVELAND,
President-elect of the United States.

MY GREAT AND GOOD FRIEND: In the vicisitudes which happened in the Hawaiian Islands, and which affect my people, myself, and my house so seriously, I feel comforted the more that, besides the friendly relation of the United States, I have the boon of your personal friendship and good will.

The changes which occurred here need not be stated in this letter; you will have at the time at which it reaches you the official information, but I have instructed the Hon. Paul Neumann, whom I have appointed my representative at Washington, to submit to you a précis of the facts and circumstances relating to the revolution in Honolulu, and to supplement it by such statements which you may please to elicit. I beg that you will consider this matter, in which there is so much involved for my people, and that you give us your friendly assistance in granting redress for a wrong which we claim has been done to us, under color of the assistance of the naval forces of the United States in a friendly port. Believe me that I do not veil under this a request to you the fulfillment of which would in the slightest degree be contrary to your position, and I leave our grievance in your hands, confident that in so far as you deem it proper we shall have your sympathy and your aid.

I am, your good friend, LILIUOKALANI R.

On the 31st of January the Hon. Paul Neumann received his appointment as envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the United States of America. On the 1st of February he departed for Washington, with Prince David Kawanauakoa to accompany him on his commission, to negotiate for a withdrawal of the treaty and to restore to us what had been taken away by the actions of the revolutionists. At my request Mr. E. C. Macfarlane kindly consented to accompany the commission.

These are the words of Liliuokalani.

Paul Neumann went as envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the United States of America. His high credentials were a power of attorney to sell the sovereignty of the kingdom for money—a pension—which reads as follows:

To all persons and to the Government of the United States of America and to all other Governments whatsoever: To all bodies corporate, as well as bodies politic, and more especially to the President and to the Secretary of the Department of State of the United States of America, I, Liliuokalani, of the city of Honolulu, in the Island of Oahu, one of the Hawaiian Islands, send greeting:

Whereas on the 17th day of January, A. D. 1893, at the city of Honolulu aforesaid, I did yield to the provisional government of the Hawaiian Islands my authority as Sovereign of the Hawaiian Islands under protest; and

Whereas by so doing I claim to be entitled by international law and in the high forum of conscience and equity to receive consideration and provision both for myself and family and for Kaiulani, who was my legally appointed successor as such sovereign; and

Whereas it is my intention and desire by these presents to authorize, secure, accomplish, and finally complete and to ratify by such arrangements as may conduce to the greatest welfare and benefit of all the people of the Hawaiian Islands and also of myself and family and the said Kaiulani; and

Whereas I repose the fullest confidence in the ability, integrity, and fidelity of Paul Neumann, esq., of the city of Honolulu aforesaid, counselor at law, and have intrusted him with full power and authority to act for me in the premises:

Now, therefore, know ye, that in consideration of the premises, I, Liliuokalani, aforesaid, have made, constituted, and appointed, and by these presents do hereby make, constitute, and appoint, the aforesaid Paul Neumann, esq., my true, lawful, and sufficient attorney, for me and in my name, place, and stead, to negotiate, arrange, and agree with the United States of America and the President and the Secretary of the Department of State thereof, and and with any other (if any) representative or official thereof having authority in the premises for such official, or the consideration, benefit, and advantage as in the opinion of my said attorney shall, may, or can be obtained from the United States of America as well for myself and family as for the said Kaiulani, in consideration of existing conditions and circumstances.

And if no official consideration for myself or said Kaiulani shall in the opinion of my said attorney be attainable from the United States of America, then and thereupon, and in such case to arrange and agree upon such pecuniary considerations, benefits, and advantages as can or may be secured for myself and family, and for said Kaiulani, from the United States of America, and whether the same shall be in the form of payment at one time of a sum of money to myself for of distinct sums of money to myself and said Kaiulani, or in payment of stated sums of money annually, or oftener, for a fixed period or periods of time, and upon ascertaining that such pecuniary considerations, benefits, advantages, or payments of money from and on the part of the said United States can be secured to agree upon, receive, and accept the same, and in my name and behalf to make, execute, and deliver such agreements, releases, and acquittances of all my claims, demands, and pretensions whatsoever upon the throne of the Hawaiian Islands and upon the Government of the United States of America, as well as of the Hawaiian Islands and upon all persons having had anything to do with or having been or being in any way concerned in the said provisional government as shall be requisite to accomplish and secure such pecuniary considerations, benefits, advantages, and payments, or which shall be required therefor by the President or the Secretary of the Department of State aforesaid, or by any other (if any) representative or official of the United States authorized to act or agree in the premises, and all that my said attorney shall do or cause to be done in the premises I do hereby, for myself and my successors, executors, administrators, and assigns, ratify and confirm, and further I do hereby covenant with my said attorney and his executors and administrators and with the President of the United States of America and with any other person and persons representing the said United States of America in the premises, and with each of them, and with their respective successors, both jointly and severally, that all and whatsoever my said attorney shall in my behalf agree to do or cause to be done or agreed upon by virtue of these presents I will and my successors, heirs, executors, and administrators shall ratify and confirm, and that I will at any time thereafter execute, sign, seal, acknowledge, and deliver such other and further releases, acquittances, assurances, and instruments in writing, as shall in the opinion of my said attorney or in the opinion of the President of the United States of America or of any officer or representative thereof having the matter in charge be requisite and proper in order to carry out the full intent and meaning of these presents.

In witness whereof I hereunto and also to two other instruments of the same date and time have set my hands and seals at the city of Honolulu aforesaid this —— day of —— in the year A. D. 1893.

Mr. Blount says Neumann left Honolulu for the United States in April, 1893.

Dr. William Shaw Bowen's statement, in April, 1893, gave Mr. Blount a distinct idea of a plan to buy out the claim of Liliuokalani.

Mr. Blount, in writing to Mr. Gresham, says:

HONOLULU, HAWAIIAN ISLANDS, April 26, 1893.

SIR: On the 7th instant the Alameda reached this place. Among its passengers were Dr. William Shaw Bowen and Mr. Harold M. Sewall. The San Francisco papers announced that they had refused to say that they were not joint commissioners with myself to Honolulu. The former represented himself to me as a correspondent of the New York World, and said he would be glad to give me any information he could gather here. Thinking it a mere matter of courtesy, I thanked him.

On Sunday, the 16th instant, I was out walking and met him on the street, riding in a buggy. He left his buggy in the hands of his friend, Mr. Sewall, and joined me in a walk of some length. Before it was concluded he said to me that he and Paul Neumann were arranging a meeting between President Dole and the Queen, the object being to pay her a sum of money in consideration of her formal abdication of the throne and lending her influence to the provisional government with a view to annexation to the United States. He repeated this statement frequently, at intervals, to which I made no response.

Further on in the same letter Mr. Blount says:

I believe that Dr. Bowen, Mr. Sewall, and Mr. Neumann have pretended that the two former knew the opinions of Mr. Cleveland and assured the Queen that annexation would take place, and that she had better come to terms at once.

Mr. Neumann leaves here on the next steamer, probably with a power to act for the Queen, with authority derived from her out of these circumstances.

The question occurs to my mind whether, if the United States desired the adjustment as probably agreed on, it had better not be accomplished through its representative here, either myself or the successor of Mr. Stevens as minister here, that assurance might be had that the action of the Government was free from any suspicion of indirection in the transaction.

I know the American minister, Mr. Stevens, has said that he had learned that Mr. Blount believed that such a settlement as indicated would simplify the situation. I called on him yesterday and told him that I did not think it was proper for him to speak of my views on the subject; that declarations of that sort coming from him would give rise to the suspicion that the Government of the United States was behind Dr. Bowen and Mr. Sewall in whatever they might see fit to represent in regard to the views of the President. During this interview I called his attention to the following conversation between Mr. Spreckels and myself on the 21st instant:

"Mr. BLOUNT. Please state whether or not you have had any message from the American minister, and whether any conversation with him.

"A. I have.

"Q. Be kind enough to state it.

"A. He sent down on Tuesday about 3 o'clock, whether I would be kind enough to come up to his house to see him. I took a carriage and saw him at 4 o'clock that Tuesday afternoon. He told me that Mr. Parker had no influence with the Queen, but that Paul Neumann could control her, and, if I would, I could control Paul Neumann; that Paul Neumann tell the Queen that she be in favor of annexation, and tell the Kanakas, who follow her, to go all for annexation. He said that he expected to be here only thirty or forty days, and he would like for annexation to be before he left. Some words to that effect."

Mr. Blount continues:

He said he thought Mr. Spreckels misunderstood him as to his declaration that he wanted to finish up annexation before he left. I then told him that I felt assured that it would be displeasing to the Secretary of State and the President if they were informed that he was seeking to mold opinion here on the matter of annexation of these islands; that I was here instructed in part to inquire into that very subject; that it was certainly very unseemly, while I was making the inquiry, for him to be urging annexation; that he must know by the fact of my presence alone that he was not authorized to represent the views of the present Administration in relation to any matter growing out of the proposition to annex these islands to the United States. At first he said that his position had been made known through the publication of his dispatches, and that he never could go back on them.

To this I replied that the proposition of going back on his dispatches was one thing, and that his undertaking to form public opinion here on the subject of annexation at this time for an Administration not of his own political party, and when I was present to represent it especially in such matters, scarcely seemed fair in the light of the courtesy which had been manifested toward him. I said to him that I hoped in future that he would not undertake to advance or retard the cause of annexation or to represent the Government in any way in that connection, and that whenever it was necessary for him to speak on the matter that he would refer persons to me.

This he agreed to. All this colloquy was characterized by kindliness on my part, and, so far as I could observe, by courtesy on the part of Mr. Stevens. He complained somewhat that I did not confide in him and did not seek his opinion about men and things here. I replied that I was engaged on certain lines of inquiry and might in the future find occasion to seek his opinion.

Mr. President, I do not care about arguing this. The statement of facts as presented to Mr. Gresham in the form I have read it and presented to the President of the United States is quite enough to give any person to understand that this subject was diplomatically considered. If it was considered at all, and if it was rejected for the reason that Mr. Cleveland was opposed to annexation on principle, that was the fitting opportunity to have notified the provisional government and the world that the United States refused to annex Hawaii then or at any time.

The offer of Liliuokalani to surrender her claim for a pension meant the annexation of the islands to the United States. It was my belief, in which many others concurred, that the provisional government was expected to bring about this result. Mr. Blount evidently believed that the agreement had been informally entered into.

As the President, in all his messages to Congress and in all his instructions to Blount and Willis, had never intimated the least opposition to annexation, and never avowedly repelled the overtures of Paul Neumann to sell out the monarchy to the United States, or to Mr. Dole, which could only mean annexation, I did form the opinion at the time that Mr. Cleveland was willing to annexation, with the consent of the ex-Queen, and that he referred that question, with all others relating to Hawaii, "to the more extended powers and broader discretion of Congress."

Mr. Dole's prompt and unhesitating refusal to betray his Government and the splendid people on whose courage, resources, and virtue it rested, forced Mr. Cleveland to abandon his policy of active intervention to destroy the provisional government.

Mr. Blount and Mr. Willis were both accredited to the provisional government. I will here insert the original letters accrediting them to the Dole Government without stopping to read them:

President Cleveland to President Dole.

Grover Cleveland, President of the United States of America, to His Excellency Sanford B. Dole, president of the executive and advisory councils of the provisional government of the Hawaiian Islands.

GREAT AND GOOD FRIEND: I have made choice of James H. Blount, one of our distinguished citizens, as my special commissioner to visit the Hawaiian Islands and make report to me concerning the present status of affairs in that country. He is well informed of our sincere desire to cultivate and maintain to the fullest extent the friendship which has so long subsisted between the two countries, and in all matters affecting relations with the Government of the Hawaiian Islands his authority is paramount. My knowledge of his high character and ability gives me entire confidence that he will use every endeavor to advance the interest and prosperity of both Governments, and so render himself acceptable to your excellency.

I therefore request your excellency to receive him favorably and to give full credence to what he shall say on the part of the United States and to the assurances which I have charged him to convey to you of the best wishes of this Government for the prosperity of the Hawaiian Islands.

May God have your excellency in His wise keeping.

Written at Washington this 11th day of March, in the year 1893.

Your good friend,

GROVER CLEVELAND.

By the President:

W. Q. GRESHAM, Secretary of State.

Remarks of Mr. Willis to Mr. Dole.

Mr. PRESIDENT: Mr. Blount, the late envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to your Government, having resigned his office while absent from his post, I have the honor now to present his letter of recall and to express for him his sincere regret that he is unable in person to make known his continued good wishes in behalf of your people and his grateful appreciation of the many courtesies of which, while here, he was the honored recipient.

I desire at the same time to place in your hands the letter accrediting me as his successor. In doing this I am directed by the President to give renewed assurances of the friendship, interest, and hearty good will which our Government entertains for you and for the people of this island realm.

Aside from our geographical proximity and the consequent preponderating commercial interests which center here, the present advanced civilization and Christianization of your people, together with your enlightened codes of law, stand to-day beneficial monuments of American zeal, courage, and intelligence.

It is not surprising, therefore, that the United States were the first to recognize the independence of the Hawaiian Islands and to welcome them into the great family of free.

At the same time these ministers were accredited to Her Majesty Queen Liliuokalani. This double dealing lays a broad predicate for the belief that President Cleveland was quite capable of entertaining one purpose and of declaring another or of an attempt to restore the monarchy while expressing friendship for the Republic.

No other chapter in our history bears any comparison with this for diplomatic duplicity. It needs the support of some great purpose to sustain it. When he revealed himself to the Dole Government he was met with a refusal that was not tempered with regret or apology. It was also accompanied with the distinct announcement of the wish and purpose of still offering annexation to the Government of the United States. Mr. Cleveland declined to change the credentials of his ministers so as to accredit them to the Queen, thus destroying all his contention that the United States had been disgraced by playing a part in her dethronement.

If he believed that gross accusation, it was his business and his duty, as President, to refuse recognition to the Dole Government. But he took the other course, and renewed the recognition of the Dole Government and referred the whole matter to Congress. What matter did he thus refer? It was the only matter left open by President Dole's reply to Mr. Willis, namely, the question of annexation.

In expressing the belief that Mr. Cleveland was not an exception to the statement that all the Presidents since the days of Mr. Adams were in favor of the ultimate annexation of Hawaii, I was entirely sincere. I had failed to remember, however, that he is supposed to take offense at being associated with any of his great predecessors as a participant in his views of important questions.

In this instance his isolation is complete, but it does not gain the element of sublimity by his indignant assertion that "the part played by the United States in the Hawaiian revolution was simply disgraceful," and that he then upheld this disgraceful proceeding with all the power of the Executive when he found that the Republic refused, at his bidding, to yield the government to the miserable pretense of regal authority that had, as he well knows, polluted everything that it could control.

When he espoused the monarchy, against the republic, in Hawaii, he rejected liberty, as we understand that blessing, and with it a high and noble civilization, and took to his bosom corruption, violence, revenge, and despotism in a form as distinct and repulsive as it was ever manifested, even in Cuba. And yet he poses as the vindicator of the United States against a part played by his predecessor in the Presidency, which he now denounces as being "simply disgraceful."

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I suppose an arrangement must have been made when I was temporarily absent from the Chamber by which the Hawaiian treaty is to be discussed in public. Am I in error, I inquire of the Chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair knows of no such agreement.

Mr. WHITE. I listened, I think, to the greater part of the very interesting remarks of the Senator from Alabama, and they seemed to me, disconnected from certain addresses which the newspapers assert have occurred elsewhere, to be rather incomplete. The Senator from Alabama has attempted to respond to a statement made with reference to a statement which he is supposed to have made in executive session. The incident which has just occurred illustrates the utter folly of debating part of a question behind closed doors, some of the material of which leaks out, and another portion of which is repeated in the open Senate.

The fair treatment of this question would involve a discussion of the entire matter in public, and not a parceling out of certain portions of it, perhaps not strictly relevant to the direct question, but at least concerned in it, and involving to some extent issues which relate to its final solution. I presume there will be no objection hereafter to any Senator debating anything concerning Hawaii which he may see fit to bring before the Senate in open session in response to irrelevant and extraneous remarks.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire to say a word in reference to the matter which has recently occupied the attention of the Senate.

I have no disposition to interfere in the matter of controversy between the Senator from Alabama and Mr. Cleveland. It would not be proper for me to attempt any defense of Mr. Cleveland, even if I were so disposed, because such would properly come from parties who have held very different relations to him from those I have occupied. However, there was one thing said by the Senator from Alabama which, if I understood him correctly, does call for some remark from me, because it concerns another person, one for whom I should speak.

I may have been mistaken, but I understood the Senator from Alabama to say that Mr. Cleveland did not appoint Mr. Blount as minister, but, on the contrary, appointed him as commissioner, because he did not think Mr. Blount could be confirmed by the Senate as minister. Am I correct in that understanding?

Mr. MORGAN. I said the President did not send him forward as minister because, in my opinion, he was afraid that that would bring up the Hawaiian question——

Mr. BACON. I can not hear the Senator from Alabama, although I am standing very near him.

Mr. MORGAN. I said I was satisfied, that it was my belief, that Mr. Cleveland did not appoint Mr. Blount as minister, because that would bring his nomination before the Senate for confirmation, and would introduce that question, and he did not think he could succeed in stopping the Hawaiian revolution by that means. That is the substance of what I said.

Mr. BACON. If I understood the Senator from Alabama, although these are not his words, I think the RECORD will show——

Mr. MORGAN. My remarks are in writing, and the Senator can read them.

Mr. BACON. I think the RECORD will show that the Senator from Alabama said that Mr. Cleveland appointed Mr. Blount as commissioner——

Mr. MORGAN. No.

Mr. BACON. And did not appoint him as minister, because he did not think he could be confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. I did not use that language at all.

Mr. BACON. Very well.

The only purpose I have in saying anything about it is this: Whether or not the Senator used that language, if my understanding is correct, his language is susceptible of such a construction, and if it should pass without remark or without reply, it would certainly be a reflection upon Mr. Blount, personally and politically, because at the time of his appointment as commissioner none of the things which afterwards excited the antagonism against him had occurred.

He had not gone to Hawaii, and if the simple statement, without explanation, be made in the Senate that Mr. Blount had been appointed as commissioner and not as minister, because it was thought he could not be confirmed by the Senate, it must necessarily leave the impression that Mr. Blount, by reason of some previous misconduct or by reason of the want of confidence in him on the part of the Senate, could not have commanded the support of the Senate for confirmation if he had been appointed as minister. Of course I accept the disclaimer of the Senator from Alabama that such was not his intention, and I repeat that I only speak of it because if no reply were made such construction could be implied.

Mr. Blount was for twenty years my immediate representative in Congress. I have known him from his early manhood. I think I can say in confidence, in the presence of the Senate and in the hearing of many who served with him for long years in the House, that he did have the confidence of the public men of this Government, and that he certainly would have commanded the confirmation of the Senate for any post to which the President of the United States might have seen proper to appoint him.

A short time before he left Congress—I believe the last Congress in which he served—he was chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House. He commanded and still commands the confidence of the people of his State, and I am quite sure that the Senator from Alabama will agree with me that such construction, if his language is liable to it, would do injustice to Mr. Blount.

Mr. MORGAN. This effort at hypercriticism of my remarks is based upon total misrepresentation of what they were.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will not use the word "misrepresentation."

Mr. MORGAN. Misunderstanding.

Mr. BACON. It may have been a misunderstanding or misconstruction.

Mr. MORGAN. Misunderstanding. It will not lead me off from the question. As to whether I have brought censure against Mr. Blount, I will say that in the report which I made I vindicated Mr. Blount as fully as any man, by language, can do such a thing. If the Senator from Georgia had read it, he would see that Mr. Blount received at my hands as chairman of the committee every possible vindication that a gentleman could expect or claim. I have known him for years. He was sworn as a witness upon that occasion. We had the benefit of his oral testimony.

Mr. Blount is a man entirely above reproach, and I have not made the slightest reference to the question whether he would have been confirmed or whether he would not have been confirmed. I referred only to the fact that Mr. Cleveland, instead of accepting Mr. Stevens's resignation, which had been tendered before Mr. Blount ever went there, and offering Mr. Blount as minister to Liliuokalani, as he would have been bound as a man of honor to do if he believed what he said the other day to the newspaper, took occasion to send Mr. Blount there as commissioner, in order that Mr. Cleveland, not Mr. Blount, might avoid a controversy with the Senate. Mr. Blount would have been confirmed by any Democratic Senate that ever sat in this Chamber, and he deserved it.

Mr. BACON. I am entirely satisfied with that statement on the part of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator ought to have been satisfied before he undertook to make a false issue here.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I made no false issue, and the language used by the Senator, which he read and which was taken down at the same time by the Reporter, will show that the Senator did state in substance that Mr. Blount had been appointed as commissioner and not as minister because he could not have been confirmed, or that there was apprehension that he could not have been confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. I stated nothing of the kind.

Mr. BACON. I did not misrepresent him.

Mr. MORGAN. I feel that the Senator from Georgia is misstating it.

Mr. BACON. Let the RECORD show.

Mr. VEST. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Alabama to what I have no doubt was an unintentional mistake on his part. I understood the Senator to say that if the facts—I think those were his words—in regard to the Hawaiian matter had been submitted to the Senate, the course of the Administration of Mr. Cleveland would not have been approved substantially.

Mr. MORGAN. No, I said the Senate never would have voted that the United States Government, in its conduct in reference to the revolution, was playing a part that was simply disgraceful.

Mr. VEST. I do not propose to interfere in this matter at all, but it would be unjust to ex-President Cleveland, whom I do not at all represent, if one fact were left out of this episode. On January 25, 1895, the Senate, by a yea-and-nay vote, passed the following joint resolution:

> That while the people of the United States earnestly sympathize with the effort to establish republican institutions wherever that effort is made, they reaffirm the policy of absolute noninterference, unless by agreement, with the affairs of other nations, and recognize to the fullest extent the right of every people to adopt and maintain their own form of government, unawed and uninfluenced by foreign dictation.
> That the Administration of President Cleveland in maintaining this policy as to our foreign relations deserves the approval and support of the American people.

That was offered as a substitute for one in regard to the Hawaiian matter offered in the Senate by the Senator from Nebraska

[Mr. ALLEN], and was adopted on a yea-and-nay vote, as the RECORD will show, in 1895. So the criticism of the Senator from Alabama is unjust to ex-President Cleveland and must apply, so far as the larger part of his remarks are concerned, to a majority of the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. My criticism was upon what Mr. Cleveland stated in the interview in the press, and not upon the resolution. I have made no reference to anything at all except what was in the interview in the press, in which he undertook to put me before the United States as having misrepresented the facts and as being really unworthy of credit because I happen to differ with him in my opinion as to what his motives were at the time the revolution was going on. I still have those opinions, and some of these days he will find out, perhaps. Let him ask me the question. He will find out who it is I refer to in the remark.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4303) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated, not displacing the unfinished business, except temporarily. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with an amendment, on page 3, line 6, to increase the appropriation for clerk hire at pension agencies from $400,000 to $430,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit an amendment which has been favorably acted upon by the Committee on Pensions, and to which I think there will be no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 7, on page 2, it is proposed to insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That hereafter no pensions shall be paid upon power of attorney from pensioners residing in foreign countries.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I simply desire to say that there are eighty-two foreign pensioners paid from the agency in this city. I do not know how many may be paid from the other agencies in the country. Of those eighty-two pensioners one man holds a power of attorney for sixty-five, and if those pensioners receive an average of $12 a month, which probably is about what they get, that man handles the sum of $9,360 per year belonging to pensioners residing in foreign countries.

The facilities for transmitting the pension money to foreign pensioners is adequate. It is sent to seventeen pensioners from the agency, there is no difficulty about it, and it is altogether unnecessary that those people should have any representative here for the purpose of handling and transmitting their money. I think I might perhaps make some further suggestions concerning the matter if it were necessary to show the desirability of the amendment, but I will content myself with what I have said, and trust that there will be no objection to the amendment being inserted.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask my colleague whether any pensioner on the roll who may be in a foreign country can have his pension check remitted to him regularly upon mere request?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think he has to execute a voucher somewhere, of course.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is no signature needed but his own in order to get his pension?

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all.

Mr. CHANDLER. And it can be sent to him in a foreign country?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes, sir; beyond question.

Mr. PERKINS. Upon the payment of the foreign postage.

Mr. GALLINGER. Upon the payment of the foreign postage.

Mr. HOAR. Let the amendment be again read.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. GEAR. I will ask the Senator from New Hampshire if it costs the soldier anything for the power of attorney?

Mr. GALLINGER. It may cost him a very considerable amount by way of percentage paid to the man who represents him here. In all probability that is the fact.

Mr. GEAR. The Senator from New Hampshire has no knowledge about that?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say that suggestions have been made to me on this point which lead me to feel that the amendment is very proper and very necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that while the bill contains the usual appropriations, that is to say, the same amount that was appropriated for the present fiscal year, the statement has been made by the Commissioner of Pensions, and it is an undoubted fact, that the bill does not carry a sufficient amount to pay the pensions for the year ending June 30, 1899, by from eight and a half to ten million dollars. The bill is framed to meet the general condition of the Treasury and the failure of the revenue measures to produce enough money to pay the ordinary current expenses of the Government. It is one of several efforts that is to be made by the present Congress to create a fictitious balance on the books of the Treasury, when the fact will remain that there is not sufficient revenue to pay all the expenditures of the Government.

As the statement of the Commissioner of Pensions may not be brought to the attention of Senators and the country, it having been made to a committee of the House of Representatives in the consideration of this bill, I desire to place it upon the official record. His statement is that in making up the estimates for the bill he, in the due course of business, submitted to the Secretary of the Interior his estimate of the amount of money that would be required for the fiscal year for which we are making provision, and his estimate was $148,337,000, whereas we have appropriated about $141,000,000 in this bill. He stated, in answer to the chairman of the committee, that the amount which would be required would be $148,337,000, and that possibly it would run up to $150,000,000. But, said Mr. Evans, the Commissioner:

> The Secretary of the Interior thought we had better make the same estimate. But I have got the figures here on which I base my estimate.
> The CHAIRMAN. Are you going to take the position we ought to appropriate $148,000,000, or are you satisfied to let us appropriate the amount named by the Secretary?
> Mr. EVANS. Well, you are going to have a deficiency this year, and you know that just as well as I do. We had a deficiency last year.

It is true that the consideration by the committee of the question as to the appropriation was adjourned over one day so that the Commissioner of Pensions might have an opportunity to confer, and he came back the next day and said he was content to have the appropriation as now made. But the fact remains that that deficiency will occur. It is intended by this appropriation bill that it shall occur. When you take note of this fact and of the extraordinary haste in which all of these bills are being prepared and rushed through, all cut below the estimates of the Department, it is that the great party in control of the Government may go before the people in November next with a book account showing that their conduct of the affairs of the Government has been such as to leave a balance in the Treasury, when in fact there will be a deficit of over $20,000,000. Of course, the party in power may take this responsibility. The appropriations for pensions must be made. No modification of the act of 1890, or of the acts prior to 1890, will be attempted. The amendment offered by my friend the Senator from New Hampshire a few moments ago may strike some patriotic sentiment in the country, but it will not cut off a dollar of the expenditures under these appropriations.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was not so intended.

Mr. GORMAN. It was not so intended, as the Senator from New Hampshire frankly states. There will be no reduction.

When the act of 1890 was under consideration in this body the amount of the appropriations was then discussed. I had the honor to take some part in that discussion, and I produced an estimate from a gentleman in the service of the Government, a Union officer, one of the most efficient officers, I think, now in the civil service of the Government. His estimate then made, which I submitted to the Senate, was that the act of 1890 would bring these appropriations up to from $150,000,000 to $160,000,000 a year until 1898 and 1899. His estimate then made was disputed by Senators on the other side of the Chamber. They denied that there would ever be such an amount; but it was admitted at that time that if that should be the case the revenue measures then on the statute book would not be sufficient to meet the expenditures, and that has turned out to be more accurate than usual with such estimates. The appropriations on account of pensions, as shown by the reference to the statements of the Committee on Appropriations, show that prior to the passage of the act of 1890 our appropriations amounted to $89,758,700. The table of pension appropriations is as follows:

Year.	Amount appropriated.	Year.	Amount appropriated.
1877	$29,533,500.00	1887	$82,075,200.00
1878	28,533,000.00	1888	83,152,500.00
1879	20,371,574.00	1889	85,258,700.00
1880	56,233,200.00	1890	89,758,700.00
1881	41,644,000.00	1891	123,779,348.35
1882	68,282,306.68	1892	164,550,383.34
1883	116,000,000.00	1893	154,411,682.00
1884	86,575,000.00	1894	180,681,074.85
1885	20,810,000.00	1895	151,881,570.00
1886	60,000,000.00	1896	141,381,570.00
Total	536,982,380.68	Total	1,256,630,748.54

Thus it will be seen that $89,758,700 was the greatest amount, except in 1883, that had ever been appropriated by Congress for this purpose in any one year; that since then the appropriation in 1891, after the act of 1890, amounted to $123,000,000, in round numbers, in 1892 to $164,000,000, in 1893 to $154,000,000 in 1895 to $151,000,000, and in 1896 to $141,000,000, with a deficiency, as stated by the Commissioner of Pensions, of over $2,500,000; and the only way in which the Treasury could be relieved of it, as he frankly stated in his communication both to the House and the Senate and in his annual report, was that he held back certificates, 14,000 in number, until after the 30th day of June, so that they might not be included in the demands on the Treasury for that fiscal year.

Now we come, as I said a moment ago, to the appropriations for the current fiscal year. I think before the present session closes it will be demonstrated that in the present distress in which you find yourselves on the other side of the Chamber, with a revenue act whose rates are so high and the depression in the country so great that it is impossible for it to produce sufficient revenue to meet the ordinary expenditures of the Government——

Mr. MASON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MASON. I just want to ask you if your party has any fear that we shall have to borrow as much money as you did?

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator's party has been most fortunate in having succeeded an Administration that piled money up in the Treasury by the sale of bonds. It has been most fortunate in getting from the Pacific railroad companies several million dollars. But it is the people's money that you are expending. This Administration, like the last, is pursuing a policy by which you are tying up the principal. You are not levying money enough to pay the current expenditures of the Government, and that means but one thing with the individual and with the Government, bankruptcy and distress.

Mr. MASON. I beg your pardon, but how many million did we get from the Pacific railroad companies more than your party had agreed to settle for?

Mr. GORMAN. That remains yet to be seen. It remains to be seen whether the management of that particular branch (and I have no criticism to make upon it at this time) was wise or unwise; whether the Government shall come into possession of a railroad and begin the scheme, as is proposed, I understand, in quarters not at this end of the Avenue, of buying railroads and operating them. That question is yet to be settled. The mere amount of a million or two dollars, greater or less, in the payment on account of the Union Pacific Railroad amounts to nothing. That great question is to come yet.

But, Mr. President, I am not to be diverted from the matter under consideration. I have no other thought except to call the attention of the Senate to what is going on before us. I believe, from what I know of the case, that it is the predetermined arrangement to rush these bills through Congress appropriating less amounts than are necessary to support the Government, so that there may be a fictitious balance, or a book balance, in the Treasury at the end of the fiscal year. Then, when we come back after the elections of November, 1898, we shall have the deficiency appropriation bills piled up, as the amounts must be provided for.

Congress must adjourn, Mr. President, for the decree has gone forth, with slim appropriations and no legislation whatever of a general character to relieve, as had been promised, the conditions that surround us. Congress will have adjourned with an apparent success so far as the management of the finances is concerned, but it will have adjourned without any legislation whatever to bring more money into the Treasury or relieve an overburdened people.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, your committee in considering the appropriations for the pension service took the estimate of the Secretary of the Interior as it was presented to Congress in the Book of Estimates. The estimate was the same that it has been for the past three years. The Commissioner, however, reduced the amount for rents to $16,080, and that reduction of nearly $4,000 below the estimate has been made. But the committee had no discretion in making these appropriations except to be governed by the recommendation of the head of the Department. It is the custom that has heretofore prevailed from time immemorial, and it seems to me it is the only real safe guide by which we can be governed.

All I think will agree that the Secretary of the Interior is a man of fine business qualifications, who has mastered or is attempting to master in detail the business of the high and important Department over which he presides. While it is true, as the distinguished Senator from Maryland says, that in the hearings before the committee in the other branch of Congress the Commissioner of Pensions estimated a larger sum than your committee have appropriated, yet his estimates are entirely problematical. He has no information, and it is not in human ken to have information as to the number who in the next fiscal year will go to "that bourn from which no traveler returns." Many of the old veterans are beyond three-score years and ten, and many of them as the years roll around will no longer require any pension. Your committee have therefore believed it to be safe business policy to be governed by the advice and recommendations of the Secretary of the Interior rather than that of any subordinate, no matter how able he may be, in any of the bureaus under his jurisdiction.

Looking at the report of the Commissioner of Pensions, I find he states that the whole number of pensioners on the roll June 30, 1897, was 996,014, and the average value of each pension at the close of the year was $133.17 per annum, or only about $11 per month is paid to the pensioners. The pensions are scattered through every State and Territory of the Union, and if the total amount exceeds what some of our economical friends think it should exceed, the place to attack it is in a general legislative bill and not on this appropriation bill.

I will not weary the Senate by reviewing the report of the Commissioner of Pensions, but I believe it is safe and wise on our part to appropriate that which the Secretary of the Interior has recommended. If there is a deficiency in the next Congress, I am sorry my friend from Maryland will not be here to give his vote to pay it; but I am sure that his constituency, as well as that of my own and every other Senator upon this floor, will cheerfully vote to pay the meager sum of $133.17 to our pensioners, where it goes to do so much good.

One of the most satisfactory duties that I have performed in my legislative career has been to get a pension allowed that was due to some old veteran who became incapacitated by injury received while fighting for the old flag, or a pension for his widow or children who were almost dependent upon the charities of the communities where they lived and whose pension had simply been side-tracked in the great number of applications that are presented to the Department for adjudication. It was only necessary to call up the pension cases and have them considered by the proper authorities. I venture to say that my friend from Maryland, like myself, has found great satisfaction in asking the Commissioner to take out of order some just claim that has been pigeonholed and was awaiting a zealous investigation when he, as the representative of the applicant, succeeded in having his claim considered and the amount justly due him paid.

I am sure, then, it is better for us to appropriate now the one hundred and forty-one million and odd dollars which has been recommended; and if, when we meet in the next Congress, there is a deficiency, we will take it up and consider it like business men, and we will pass upon it and pay it if it is right and proper that we should do so.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, so far as the criticism of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] was applicable merely to the pending appropriation bill, it was not of so much consequence as what he stated with regard to the policy of the Committee on Appropriations. I do not suppose that the Commissioner of Pensions can determine in advance exactly the amount which he will be required under the law to pay for pensions during the fiscal year for which the appropriations are made. I think the truth is that an estimate has never proved to be exactly correct. It is possible that at some times the entire appropriation has not been expended. It has been more frequently the case that more than the appropriation was expended. So what the Senator said with regard to the question as to whether there would be a deficiency at the end of the fiscal year for pensions is perhaps inconsequential.

But what the Senator from Maryland said with regard to the policy of the Committee on Appropriations constitutes a pretty serious charge, coming from a member of that committee. If I understood the Senator, he stated in substance that he believed it to be the policy of the Committee on Appropriations to rush through appropriation bills which should not and would not appropriate the amount which was necessary to carry out the provisions of law, and with the deliberate intention of having a deficiency at the end of the year to make up what was not appropriated by the committee. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee [Mr. ALLISON], if he will give me his attention for a moment, whether the Senator from Maryland was justified in his statement that he believed it to be the policy of the Appropriations Committee to rush through the appropriation bills with an amount insufficient to meet the requirements of law; in other words, to make a fictitious balance on the books of the Government, knowing full well that it would be necessary to pass large deficiency bills, but desiring to make a good showing upon which to go to the country in the elections.

If the Senator from Iowa will permit me for a moment, I think I have not misstated the substance of what was said by the Senator from Maryland. We have heard a great deal about extravagance and about economical expenditures. If the Committee on Appropriations is taking pains that there shall be no extravagance in appropriations and that economy shall be observed in all the expenditures of the Government, for one I want to express my satisfaction and my commendation of that policy. I do not believe that the Committee on Appropriations is deliberately recommending bills here which will not meet the necessary requirements of Government during the fiscal year for which the bills are passed.

And one word more. Neither do I believe, Mr. President, that for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, for which we are now appropriating, there will be any deficit in our revenues. I believe our revenues for that year will be entirely sufficient to meet all the necessary expenditures of the Government, whether they come in the form of these appropriation bills or of added deficiency bills, which we have to pass every year. I think that a study of Government receipts from month to month since the last act raising customs revenues was passed fully justifies me in the statement that, while by reason of anticipatory importations there was for the first few months after the passage of the law a deficit, during the last months of this year there will be more than enough to meet the monthly expenditures and for the year 1899 more than enough to meet the requirements of law in our appropriations.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator from Connecticut permit me to ask him a question? Can the Senator from Connecticut state the amount of the deficit now existing for this fiscal year, without, of course, taking into consideration the amount paid by the Union Pacific Railroad Company as the result of the late settlement of its indebtedness to the Government?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I have not the actual figures before me. I know that for the first month after the passage of the act there was a large deficit; that the second month it was a smaller deficit, and that each month it decreased, until in the month of December there was a surplus. There will probably be a small deficit in the month of January because of the extraordinary amount to be paid in that month, but our revenues will exceed in the month of January by two or three million dollars what they were in the month of December. They are constantly increasing, and for the remaining months of the fiscal year the receipts will undoubtedly exceed the monthly expenditures.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I presume that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], who, I observe, is about to take the floor, can give us the exact figures of the shortage since June; that is, without taking into consideration, as I say, the money paid, extraordinarily, of course, to the Government as the result of the Union Pacific Railroad settlement, known to be very large.

Mr. ALLISON. I, of course, did not expect to enter into this debate on the pension appropriation bill to-day. My friend from California [Mr. PERKINS], who is a member of the Committee on Appropriations, is abundantly able to take care of the bill.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] alludes to some observations made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], also a member of the Committee on Appropriations, respecting the policy of that committee. I was unfortunate enough to have my attention diverted for the moment, and so did not hear the statement of the Senator from Maryland; but if the Senator from Connecticut has correctly reported him, I will say in reply to his remarks that it is news to me that there is any settled purpose on the part of the Committee on Appropriations to report here and seek to have passed such bills as will make deficiency appropriations absolutely necessary at the next session of Congress.

Mr. GORMAN. I wish to correct the Senator's statement. I said I believed, and I think we will show before the end of the session, that that was the policy of our friends on the other side. I did not confine the remark to the Committee on Appropriations, and I will give my reasons for the statement later on.

Mr. ALLISON. I was about to add that, inasmuch as a majority of the Committee on Appropriations in political sentiment is opposed to what are understood to be the views of the Republicans on this side of the Chamber, I did not know but that the majority had introduced into the committee some new rule of conduct in regard to our appropriations. So far as I know, however, there is no purpose on the part of the Committee on Appropriations, and I will say on the part of those who compose the Republican party on this side of the Chamber, to shirk any responsibility as to any appropriation of public money necessary to carry on the affairs of this Government.

I wish to say here in regard to that subject that in my belief it is not possible to greatly retrench the appropriations as they have been made for the last few years for these public purposes, and that if retrenchment or reduction is to be made in appropriations, reductions must be confined to two or three of the great appropriation bills. In my judgment, it is not possible for us to reduce the expenditures of the diplomatic service in any great degree; it is not possible for us to reduce the pension bill in any great degree, as the Senator from California has already so well shown; neither is it practicable for us to reduce the ordinary legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government.

Therefore, if we are to make the appropriations for the next fiscal year less than the appropriations for the current fiscal year, it will be necessary for us to curtail the appropriations which we have hitherto been making for the support of the Navy and for the support of the Army in the way of building fortifications and constructing new ships. It will also be necessary for us to curtail somewhat the expectations of a great many people as to river and harbor appropriations. Wisely or unwisely, a few years ago we established the precedent of making contracts in advance of appropriations. So the Committee on Commerce of this body and the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in the House of Representatives have recommended us to make contracts far in advance of current appropriations.

This year, if those contracts are to be executed, we shall have river and harbor appropriations upon the sundry civil bill of nearly $17,000,000. If there is to be any curtailment of appropriations for rivers and harbors, it must be by reducing the regular river and harbor bill, which comes to us every two years. So far as I know, however, this year, and all years that I have been a member of the Committee on Appropriations, whether under the chairmanship of others on that side or on this side, or under my own chairmanship, we have endeavored, so far as we could, to appropriate the sums necessary from year to year to carry on the ordinary operations of the Government, and, so far as I can speak for this side of the Chamber, it is our purpose to do so this year. The same is true as to this pension appropriation bill.

The Senator from Maryland says that we shall have a deficiency. How can that be known? Who can say how many will be added to the pension rolls during the year? Who can say how many of those already on the rolls will, from natural causes, cease to draw pensions? It is true the Commissioner of Pensions said in a hearing before the House committee that he believed $148,000,000 would be required instead of $141,000,000, but twice in writing he stated to the Committee on Appropriations of this body that he was entirely satisfied with the sum appropriated.

It may be that there will be a deficiency of a few million dollars in pension appropriations when we meet here next December in the short session. If so, it will not be an unusual occurrence. We frequently have deficiency appropriations in every department of the Government. My own belief is that if there is a deficiency by reason of this in the appropriation bill for pensions, it will not be a large one. We have appropriated what the responsible officer of the Government, the Secretary of the Interior, says will be necessary, and if a deficiency occurs and it is necessary to make an appropriation to meet it, it will be made.

I should not myself favor appropriating any sum of money less than seems reasonably certain to be sufficient to pay pensions.

I wish also to assure my friend from Maryland, so far as appropriation bills are concerned, this being the first one that we have been able to bring forward in the Senate, although it is now nearly two months since this session began, if it shall be hereafter shown that we are appropriating less money than is necessary to provide for the ordinary expenditures of this Government efficiently, I shall join with him in committee and here to increase the appropriations.

As to revenue, I wish to say one word. I agree with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] that from the constantly increasing receipts from customs and otherwise we shall have before the end of this year a sufficient revenue to meet the appropriations which we shall make for necessary expenditures. It is true that we have drawn upon the surplus in the Treasury for the last few months. I can not give the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] the exact figures in that regard, but they are transmitted every morning, as I understand, to every Senator in the Chamber, and if I had one of those statements here I could furnish him with the information.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator from Iowa permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. WHITE. The statement referred to by the Senator from Iowa, which is transmitted every morning to Senators and to others, does not contain the general item called miscellaneous receipts; and that item will be noticed, so far as the receipts are concerned, to be very large. It has been augmented by an immense sum, as I before stated. If we eliminate that sum, will not the deficiency amount to over $50,000,000?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think it would, and yet I only state from my examination of the Treasury statements made from day to day. The deficiency, excluding the payment by the Pacific railroads, would, I think, probably amount to forty-one or forty-two million dollars, not more.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator will allow me, has he the exact figures of the amount of the payment made by the Pacific roads?

Mr. ALLISON. I have them not here, but the amount is easily ascertainable, and it is not worth while for us to split hairs about it. I undertake to say to the Senator from California that, excluding the amount received from the Pacific railroad payments, the deficiency is less than $43,000,000.

Mr. WHITE. And greater at this period than it ever was, is it not?

Mr. ALLISON. Not so large by a very great sum. Whenever Senators desire to enter into debate as to the deficiencies and the causes of them, I think we will not shrink from that debate on this side of the Chamber. Of course everybody knows that the deficiency results from the fact that up to this moment we have received very little, if any, revenue from the duties on sugar.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And on wool.

Mr. ALLISON. And, as the Senator from Connecticut reminds me, and as I was about to state, we have received very little revenue as yet from the duties on wool and woolens. That such would be the case was perfectly well known to us all when the tariff bill was passed. It was not expected or believed by anybody that that tariff bill would immediately produce a surplus revenue or a revenue equal to our expenditures. The tariff bill which we passed last year on the 24th day of July has not yet come into full play, and when it does—I only express my own opinion, and do it with deference in the presence of the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from California—I have no doubt that the revenues derived from that source and from internal revenue will be equal to our expenditures unless they are largely or considerably increased. When we reach that question, we shall endeavor to meet it, and I will furnish accurate figures to the Senator to-morrow morning.

There is another thing I will say to Senators on the other side of the Chamber who speak about a deficiency. In the act of 1894, which we did not change in the act of 1897, under the internal-revenue provisions the bonded period for the payment of taxes on distilled spirits was extended four years. That four-year period will expire in a few months, and it is perfectly understood at the Treasury that when the four-year period shall have expired, and when all the distilled spirits that are in bond come under the seven-year provision, there will be increased revenue from our internal-revenue taxation.

So, if a deficiency exists, we may say that it exists from circumstances which surround us, first, on account of the revenue bill passed by the Senators on the other side in 1894, and, secondly, by the increased anticipatory importations prior to the passage of the revenue law of last year.

At this early stage of debate, and in this beginning of our discussions upon appropriation bills, I think it is extremely difficult for us to get an accurate statement either as to how the appropriation bills will finally appear or how much revenue we shall have from month to month to pay the amounts appropriated; but before we adjourn we shall certainly know whether or not the revenue laws now in existence will be sufficient to pay the current expenditures as disclosed by our appropriations.

I want to say a word more in reply to some suggestions made by the Senator from Maryland. I do not understand that we are making any great haste about the appropriation bills. I undertake to say that we are further behind in the Senate now respecting the ordinary appropriation bills than we have been at any similar time for several years. This is the first of the regular appropriation bills that we have considered in the Senate, although nearly two months of the session have passed away. We have on many occasions passed one or two appropriation bills before the holiday recess. So I hope there will be no fear that we shall unduly hasten appropriation bills.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I dislike to listen to a discussion with regard to appropriations being made in view of a deficiency. No deficiency exists, and it is not likely to exist. A deficiency can not possibly occur in the next four years if the revenue should be $50,000,000 a year less than the appropriations. There is now in the Treasury a very unhealthy surplus of $241,000,000, which ought to be in circulation, which is drawing no interest, whilst we are paying interest on borrowed money and hoarding money in the Treasury Department that is doing nothing. The idle money in the Treasury ought to be got out in some way.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator is mistaken as to the amount of money in the Treasury. I understand it is only $153,000,000.

Mr. BACON. That is gold.

Mr. STEWART. That is gold. I am right in my statement.

Mr. ALLISON. I think it is two hundred and thirty-nine millions in all.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator has the statement there, and I think he will find that it is $241,000,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I had it a few moments ago, but have it not before me now. I do not wish to disturb the Senator.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to have the amount stated accurately, and to be corrected if I am wrong in my statement.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator may proceed, and I will furnish the figures later.

Mr. STEWART. I think the amount is $241,000,000 now. I say if there ever was a time when debts ought to be paid, when the dam should be taken away from just claims and they should be paid, this session of Congress is the time when it should be done. There are from fifteen to twenty millions of claims, which are recognized as just by the two Houses of Congress, which have been passed sometimes by one House and sometimes by the other and by the committees. These claims are dammed up and kept back, as is alleged, on account of not having the money with which to pay them, while we have this large surplus in the Treasury and are borrowing money and paying interest upon it and refusing to pay our honest debts.

If anybody can imagine any reason why there should be between two and three hundred millions of dollars locked up in the Treasury all the time, if any possible honest reason can be assigned for it, I have not heard it.

I have no doubt that the tariff and internal-revenue laws now in existence will ultimately produce a surplus if there is any business at all done in this country. If famine should exist in other lands, as it has existed during the last year, that will increase business here; but of course business can not increase materially while we are contracting the volume of money and piling up the bonded debt.

Mr. ALLISON. I have the figures now about which the Senator inquired.

Mr. STEWART. How much do they amount to?

Mr. ALLISON. Two hundred and thirty-nine million dollars.

Mr. STEWART. I say this $239,000,000 in the Treasury, taken out of circulation, of course has a tendency to reduce the revenue, because the people must do business in order to be able to pay taxes, and while you contract the currency by hoarding in the Treasury or by limiting us to the gold standard, you will have less business and less revenue.

Japan has contracted the currency very largely by going into the market for gold and taking it away from us. I saw a statement of the finance minister of India that owing to their good crops this year they would be able to draw something from the general stock of gold. One country after another is drawing from the general stock of gold. This brings down prices here and makes business more and more stagnant; and on top of all that we have got $241,000,000 lying idle in the Treasury, and we are paying interest upon it, when we will not even pay our honest debts, because we want to keep the money away from the people. That is the policy here.

When that condition of things exists, why stand here talking about limiting appropriations for the reason that we have a deficiency? Two hundred and forty-one millions of surplus does not look very much like a deficiency to me; and a man must have a rather crooked mind and a crooked eye who looks at it as a deficiency.

The surplus is an unhealthy one and it ought to be paid out if there is any legitimate means of paying it out. If we have not any use for it in carrying on the Government, we ought to stop paying interest on it; we ought not to let it lie there, for it is against good policy and against the policy which both parties have advocated from the foundation of the Government until this time. That policy is now changed.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I only want to say a word in reply to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. I stated that in my judgment this bill was so framed and that it was the policy to be continued by the Committee on Appropriations to so reduce the appropriations in the aggregate as to bring the expenditures within the revenue, and that the result would be large deficiencies to be provided for at the next session.

Now, I desire to read again from an official statement made to the committee in which this bill originated, in which the responsible officer in charge of the Department stated frankly to the committee that $140,000,000 on account of the general pension fund would not be sufficient by eight and a half millions. He was asked the question if he had submitted his estimates to the Secretary of the Interior, who approves them and then forwards them to the Treasury Department, his statement showing that fact. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, the committee in which this bill originated, asked the Commissioner of Pensions this question:

> The CHAIRMAN. Now we can begin on the question of the amount. The first item we see is for the general appropriation for Army and Navy pensions. The estimate for 1899 is $140,000,000, and the appropriation for the last three years has been $140,000,000, and you estimate the same amount this year?
> Mr. EVANS. Well, my estimate is $148,337,000. If it runs as it does now it will come near $150,000,000.
> The CHAIRMAN. How does that come about?
> Mr. EVANS. The Secretary of the Interior thought we had better make the same estimate. But I have got the figures here on which I base my estimate.
> The CHAIRMAN. Are you going to take the position we ought to appropriate $148,000,000, or are you satisfied to let us appropriate the amount named by the Secretary?
> Mr. EVANS. Well, you are going to have a deficiency this year, and you know that just as well as I do. We had a deficiency last year.
> The CHAIRMAN. The question right at the outstart is, what attitude will we be placed in with a bill which proposes more than the Secretary of the Interior estimates?

Mr. BELDEN. I am in favor of asking the clerk to ask the Secretary of the Interior if he made that estimate on what he knows to be the basis, and if he has cut it down.

Mr. EVANS. I will frankly tell you so. Now, we were short $2,500,000——

Mr. BELDEN. That only makes it worse if we keep hiding it.

The CHAIRMAN. Let us take it up first and consider it on that point. I would like for Mr. Courts, who has had long experience as clerk of this committee, to say what attitude we will be placed in in the two branches with a bill which carries more than the estimates of the Secretary of the Interior.

The CLERK. It is not usual for the committee to report an amount in excess of the estimate submitted to Congress unless the head of the Department advises by a supplemental estimate that a larger sum is needed.

The CHAIRMAN. Could that be done?

Mr. EVANS. We discussed this thoroughly, the Secretary and myself, and we concluded that we had better just put in the amount of last year. You will have to put in the urgent deficiency bill this year, assuredly. I bridged over last year. You were in special session for a special purpose, and, if you remember, you probably saw in the papers that I withheld the certificates for the month of June; did not send the certificates out. I preferred to treat it that way than to send the certificates to the pension agency and have them call for the money and not get it, so I held everything up until the 1st of July, and then sent them to the agency. But there was a deficiency of $2,467,000, practically a deficiency, if the pensions had all been sent out last year.

Mr. ALLEN. Do you merge these in that way, go on from one bill to another?

Mr. EVANS. In other words, they were not in the hands of the pension agents, and there was no deficiency created; but I withheld them so there would not be a deficiency, and I withheld $2,467,000. Now I am doing more work, Mr. Chairman, than was done last year in the way of auditing claims, and I will say I do not want this to be considered as a criticism—

Of course of his superior, the Secretary of the Interior—

but my men tell me, and I expect that it is true, that during last year, in order to save creating a large deficiency, while there were a great many claims audited, they were small claims, current pensions. Now I am getting on these old claims, which carry considerable arrears with them, and I will say to you frankly in my estimates here I am just telling you the facts, and you gentlemen and the Secretary understand it, that there will be a deficiency this year which you will have to meet in your second session.

Mr. BELDEN. In other words, we are hiding our heads and helping to cover up this thing as much as we can, and we are not telling the truth?

Mr. EVANS. Well, I present the figures there on which I base my estimate.

The CHAIRMAN. That is true, but what are we going to do?

Mr. EVANS. The Secretary and myself discussed that question, and he thought we had better estimate for the same amount and let it be covered in a deficiency.

The CHAIRMAN. If we go in with a bill greater than this, the committee will have the criticism of every fellow on the floor; and I doubt whether we could get it through the committee.

Mr. BELDEN. Or take the responsibility of hiding it.

The CHAIRMAN. It is only one of several hides.

Mr. EVANS. I estimate, aside from the $2,500,000 which was the real deficiency of last year, a deficiency of $5,500,000 or $6,000,000 this year, making, in round numbers, $8,500,000 deficiency.

The CHAIRMAN. I suppose we will have to let that go at $140,000,000.

Mr. EVANS. I presume you will.

The CHAIRMAN. I suppose we want to ask a question or two about that. Your estimate you say you made to the Secretary of the Interior was for $148,337,000. In your judgment that amount will be necessary to pay the pensions that are now awarded and will be awarded under the present law, and the Secretary of the Interior, I understand, reduced your estimates to $140,000,000. What reason have you to give for the estimates which you made? It was generally understood that there was to be a decrease instead of an increase.

Mr. EVANS. I have made a detailed estimate, and here it is:

Detailed estimate of amount required to pay pensions during fiscal year 1899.

The CHAIRMAN. Were the appropriations for the past year, $140,000,000, sufficient to pay the pensions for that year?

Mr. EVANS. They were not.

The CHAIRMAN. One of the reasons why they were not is that you carried over—how much?

Mr. EVANS. Two million four hundred and sixty-seven thousand dollars is my recollection.

The CHAIRMAN. Then there will be a deficiency in the present fiscal year?

Mr. EVANS. There will be a deficiency the present fiscal year.

The CHAIRMAN. How much do you estimate?

Mr. EVANS. I estimate, in round numbers, $8,500,000, including $2,500,000 of last year.

The statement as to this being "only one of several hides" comes from a gentleman who is framing these appropriation bills, and I say to the Senator from Connecticut that it justifies the statement I have made that there is a systematic attempt to make insufficient appropriations. I did not refer to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations on the other side of the Chamber, or to his committee here, but there is the statement, officially made before the committee which originated this bill, that the Secretary of the Interior, after having the facts before him and the estimate in every detail that the pensions adjusted and to be paid during the year which closes on the 1st of July, 1899, would amount to $148,000,000, deliberately inserted in the Book of Estimates only $140,000,000 for the year, and no reason whatever has been assigned by that Department or by any other official source why this change was made, except the one that was given by the chairman of the committee elsewhere, that it is "only one of several hides."

What can the object be? Senators upon the other side of the Chamber who have had charge of the great bills to produce revenue for the Government assert that the Dingley tariff law will yet produce revenue enough to meet expenditures. That is the hope of our friends who framed that law, and that is always the hope of everybody who frames such a measure. It was the hope of my distinguished friend from Missouri [Mr. VEST] and other Senators upon this side of the Chamber as to the revenue bill which we passed when we had possession of both Houses of Congress.

But staring you Senators on the other side in the face, as it did us, there is great depression in all the business industries of the country which has never been measured by the experts of the Treasury Department or by the experts employed by the Senate. It has been greater in the past three years than any of those experts ever dreamed of. That depression goes on, with temporary relief in one branch of industry or another, a spurt in one to-day, only to be followed by depression to-morrow, which makes it impossible for you to measure how much the deficiency will be. Your Secretary of the Treasury does not pretend to say that the revenues for the current year will be equal to the expenditures by twenty-odd millions.

Who can tell what they will be next year? Who can measure them when you find from New England to the Gulf that great revolution which started in 1890 going on, with depression in every branch of industry, with one thing only certain—reduction in wages to enable the manufacturer to live. That is the condition to-day. Cotton goods are piled upon the shelves, and cotton itself is worth less than 5½ cents a pound. No industry is thriving in the sense of making money. Importations come only as they are absolutely necessary. While it is wise to reduce the expenditures, so that you may meet the great reduction that is found in your revenue, I agree with the Senator from Iowa, and I have made the same statement practically when our side of the Chamber was responsible for the conduct of the Government, you can not under our present system and laws reduce the aggregate appropriations to a sum much less than $500,000,000 per annum. It is fixed and will so run some time, unless you abandon great enterprises, your river and harbor improvements and your Navy, and that in the frame of the public mind is, in my judgment, impossible.

The appropriations for pensions must be made; they can not be reduced; they can not be evaded. It is unwise and unfair to the pensioners themselves, who have a right to their pensions under the law, when they have been adjusted by the Department, to hold back 14,000 claims of poor and dependent men after they have been audited simply because you have not appropriated a sufficient amount of money to pay them. Now, the Commissioner of Pensions tells you that with his working force that number is to be increased, and that you will have a deficiency.

It is juggling with the question, it is trifling with it, in my judgment, and I do not hold my friend the chairman of the committee responsible because his answer is—and it is probably a proper one—that we have appropriated all that the Department estimated, and it is not proper to increase the estimate. But who can account for the action of the Secretary, except upon the theory, which is known probably to everybody, that there was and is, taking up these estimates, a determination to keep the estimates, if possible, within the revenues produced by the present tariff act?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it perhaps is proper that I, as chairman of the Committee on Pensions, having no particular relations to this bill, however, should submit an observation or two before the bill passes. What I have to say will be said on the subject of pensions, and not on the subject of the tariff or of silver.

There has been a great deal of agitation in the country during the past few months on the pension question. I have ventured myself to say that I thought there might be some economies practiced in certain directions, and because I ventured to say that I have been somewhat severely criticised by individuals and by the press. Yesterday morning I picked up a Democratic paper published in my own State, and I read this:

Senator GALLINGER is engaged in dealing some severe blows to the old soldiers and the widows of the heroes of the rebellion. This is a new rôle for a New Hampshire Senator to take.

I have been engaged in nothing of the kind. I have insisted, as I have always done, that every honest pension ought to be paid; that it is the duty of this Government to make appropriations sufficient to meet its obligations to the heroes of that great war. I stand on that proposition, as I always have stood on it.

The Republican party is responsible for the laws that are on the statute books relating to pensions. In all the votes that were cast on all the greater pension bills which have been enacted into law there was only one single, solitary Republican vote cast in the negative. The Republican party is pledged to sustain those laws, and the Republican party, I take it, in the present Congress is prepared to take the full responsibility for the appropriations that will be necessary to carry out the obligations of the country to the soldiers.

I think there is a misapprehension in this country as to the extent of the appropriations for pensions. The newspapers frequently say that a long time ago the country was promised that the high-water mark would be reached, and the public opinion seems to be that we are now spending more money for pensions than we have ever spent during the history of our Government. I turn to the report on the pension appropriation bill and I find, what I knew before, that that is not the fact. I find that in 1892 the appropriation for pensions, including a deficiency, was $143,000,000; in 1893 it was $160,000,000; in 1894 it was $166,000,000; in 1895 it was $151,000,000, and for the past three years $141,000,000. So in 1892 we appropriated $2,000,000 more than we propose to appropriate at the present time; in 1893 we appropriated $19,000,000 more; in 1894, $25,000,000 more; in 1895, $10,000,000, and in 1896 and 1897 a sum slightly in excess of what we propose to appropriate at the present time.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] called attention to the fact that the Commissioner of Pensions has held up the certificates during the month of June for the purpose of preventing a deficiency; but it should be remembered by the Senator from Maryland that the appropriation made for the fiscal year which ended June 30 of that year was made under a Democratic President, with the Senate about equally divided politically, and it was in accordance with the Democratic estimate, as is suggested to me by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. I do not think the Senator from Maryland ought to lay very much stress upon that fact, or upon the statement which the present Commissioner of Pensions has made as to a probable deficiency.

I assume to say that neither the Commissioner of Pensions nor any other living man can make an estimate as to the expenditures of this Government for pensions during the next fiscal year that is worthy of the consideration of anybody. He has his opinion; I have mine; the Senator from Maryland has his; and I am willing to put my judgment against that of the Commissioner of Pensions, and say that, in my opinion, there will probably not be very much of a deficiency, if any deficiency at all. The old soldiers are dying very rapidly. They will die faster during the present fiscal year than they did during the last fiscal year. They are a year older. If any man, however closely he may have studied the subject, ventures to give an estimate as to the amount of money required to pay pensions for the current fiscal year, it is a guess at best, and it can not be anything but a guess.

A deficiency, even if it comes, is not anything unusual as to pensions. We had a deficiency in 1889, a deficiency in 1890, a deficiency in 1891, a deficiency in 1892, and a deficiency in 1893. I say if a deficiency comes during the present fiscal year it is nothing unusual. We have had very many deficiencies to make up in pension appropriations in the years that have come and gone.

This is a simple matter of business. Of course, if other Senators desire to discuss the tariff and the silver question on the pension appropriation bill, that is their privilege under the rules of this body; but I submit that it is our duty to pass the appropriation bill precisely as it stands. It is all that was estimated for, and in all human probability it will meet the obligations of the Government so far as this class of expenditures is concerned. If it does not, when we come back here next year the Congress will see to it that any deficiency that is necessary to be made up will be made up, that the honor of the country will be preserved, and that the rights of the men and women who are on the pension roll will be cared for.

That is all I care to say on this question, contenting myself with the closing observation that I feel very confident in my own mind that the $141,000,000 provided for in the pending bill will be sufficient to meet the pensions, with the little economies that will be practiced during the coming year, and that we will not be troubled very seriously by appropriations in the line of deficiencies during the next session of Congress.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, the testimony read by the Senator from Maryland, taken by the committee in the House of Representatives, was taken on the 6th of December. On the 10th instant the Committee on Appropriations received a communication from the Commissioner of Pensions. This was one month after he had the opportunity of reviewing his testimony and his recommendation and of obtaining evidence in his Department as to the probable deficiency, if any, which he believed would occur; and this is his language to the committee, under date of January 10:

The items contained in said bill are satisfactory to me, except in the single instance of the amount which it is proposed to appropriate for clerk hire at pension agencies.

The committee corrected that sum and proposed to amend the bill, in which the Senate has concurred, giving him the amount he recommended for the pay of pension clerks at the different agencies.

It therefore seems that the Commissioner of Pensions is now in full accord with the estimate made by the Secretary of the Interior in the Book of Estimates, and that $141,000,000, in round numbers, is sufficient to cover the pensions for the coming year. I hope, therefore, that the report of the committee will be accepted by the Senate, and that the bill will pass as it has been amended.

Mr. ALLEN. Have all the amendments of the committee been offered and acted upon?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands.

Mr. ALLEN. I send to the desk and offer an amendment to be inserted on page 2, after line 7.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert after the amendment already adopted, at the end of line 7, page 2, the following:

And provided further, That from and after the 1st day of January, A. D. 1898, all existing pensions as well as all pensions hereafter allowed shall be for not less than $8 per month, and all pensions of a less amount are hereby raised to $8 per month.

Mr. PERKINS. I am directed by the committee to raise the point of order that the amendment proposes new legislation.

Mr. ALLEN. Knowing the Senator from California is a very warm and enthusiastic friend of the soldier, and that a majority of the Pension Committee have at all times expressed their appreciation of his services and their desire to extend to him and his widow and orphans proper relief, I took the liberty of offering the amendment and having it printed and sent to the Committee on Pensions for the express purpose of avoiding the rule of the Senate. I do not know whether the Committee on Pensions acted on it or not.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Nebraska permit me?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. If I understood the amendment correctly when it was read, it is not the same amendment which was sent to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALLEN. This cuts it down $2, or from $10 to $8. I will make it $10 again, if the Senator desires.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Nebraska has himself gone back on the old soldiers to the extent of $2 a month since he submitted his former amendment.

I will state to the Senator that the Committee on Pensions has not had a meeting since it received his amendment. It will meet to-morrow. The amendment has been sent to the Pension Bureau, with the request that the amount of increase shall be approximately stated to the committee, so that we will know, in the event of passing the Senator's amendment, whether we will be increasing the pension expenditures to the extent of $10,000,000 or $100,000,000. I am not quite sure myself what it will be.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope in all seriousness that there will be no attempt to get away from the responsibility connected with the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me again, I will say that there is no attempt on my part to do so, because I am absolutely, utterly, and unalterably opposed to it.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not doubt that. I think that is as frank and open an expression as the Senator from New Hampshire ever made. It can not be expected that a civilian, who himself knows nothing of the services of these men, except as a matter of history, can have any very great sympathy for the soldier who met with misfortune in the war, and, unfortunately for his interest, does not know the Pensions Committee of this branch of Congress is in the hands largely of civilians and not of his friends.

I am not blaming my distinguished friend from New Hampshire for not being a soldier. That was a matter of his own concern. But I am blaming the other side of this Chamber for turning it over into the hands of civilians, who can not in the nature of things have much sympathy, a third of a century after the close of the war, with the misfortunes of the soldier, and who, whenever they look at a pension bill, do so with a view of gauging the political strength it will bring their party.

The Senator from New Hampshire says I have gone back on my own amendment. I have put it simply from $10, where it was printed, to $8, hoping that increasing these pensions to not less than $8 a month would not meet with objection from the other side. It is a most unhappy circumstance that, as the Senator says, the committee have not met. They have not been called together to consider this amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I stated to the Senator that his amendment has been sent to the Pension Bureau for an estimate as to the cost in which it will involve the Government provided it shall be adopted.

Mr. ALLEN. I know what the Senator said.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Pension Bureau has been requested by a personal letter from the chairman to hasten in making the calculation.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, you might as well send it to the Czar of Russia or to Emperor William for his estimate. The Senator has a committee which is well armed and equipped with experts. There are mathematicians galore around here. Is it impossible to find what increase or what probable increase will be made in the pension expenditures? Is it not possible to ascertain that without sending the amendment to the Commissioner of Pensions? Has the Commissioner of Pensions all knowledge upon this subject and all wisdom, and have the Senator from New Hampshire and his committee none?

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Nebraska permit me, for I would not interrupt him without his consent?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Commissioner of Pensions alone can ascertain how many pensioners there are on the rolls who will be affected by the amendment. It simply, I take it, affects those who are receiving $6 a month at the present time, the minimum having been raised in the last Congress.

Mr. ALLEN. What does it signify how many will be affected?

Mr. GALLINGER. It signifies a great deal whether there are 10,000 or 100,000 or 500,000 of these people, and the Committee on Pensions have not that data at hand. The committee have sent this through the proper channel to the proper officer, precisely as the Committee on Finance would send an amendment or a bill to the Secretary of the Treasury; and I confess that while I have no objection to the Senator criticising the committee severely and finding fault with some of us who did not chance to be in the war, I do not see the force of his criticism, so far as the action of the chairman is concerned, in sending this communication to the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. ALLEN. There is simply this force in it: If these men are entitled to an increase; if justice and equity dictate they should receive $8 a month or a minimum of $8 a month, does it signify anything whether there will be 10,000 or 100,000 or 500,000? What does it amount to whether there are 10,000 or 100,000 or more who, in justice and equity, are entitled to this sum? Is the sum to be allowed if there are few and denied if there are many? Is that the logic of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will again permit me, I will say no; it is not my logic at all. The Senator by his proposed amendment endeavors to change the pension laws of the United States. These men presumably are getting all they are entitled to under those laws. Now, the Senator proposes on the pension appropriation bill to change the general pension laws of the United States. The Senator's amendment is clearly not in order, and even if it were, it would be a very unfortunate place to put a provision of that kind.

Mr. ALLEN. Let me call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to the fact—I do not want him to get away from it, either—that three years ago the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] offered an amendment to the pension appropriation bill putting the minimum at $6, and I did not hear any point of order raised then by the chairman of the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator, if he will go to the RECORD, will find that the Committee on Pensions reported favorably that proposed amendment, and hence the point of order would not lie against it.

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, yes; the Committee on Pensions reported favorably at that time, the Senator says; but the Committee on Pensions have not seen fit to meet since this proposed amendment was offered and afford it an opportunity for consideration. Unfortunately, while the committee is determining whether or not it will meet (and I suppose after the pending bill has passed it will have a meeting) the Senator from California is pressing the bill with all his might and main to speed it through before the Committee on Pensions can pass on the proposed amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Nebraska will allow me, I will say that the Committee on Pensions meet once a week; their meeting day is Tuesday, and when that meeting day comes, if we have the data before us, we will consider the Senator's amendment, and if the committee shall favor it, it will be reported back to the Senate; if they do not, it will be reported adversely. The Senator can send it to the Calendar in either event, and we can properly discuss this question as an independent proposition some time in the future.

Mr. ALLEN. I am always very grateful to the Senator from New Hampshire for advising me what to do.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator needs it sometimes.

Mr. ALLEN. I do need it; I need it every hour; and it is a wonder to me I have lived so long without it. The Senator has been kind, indeed, in telling me, since I have been here, what to do, and sometimes in telling me what not to do, which is fully as important, perhaps, if not more so.

But the Senator from New Hampshire, and I speak of him because he is the head and front of the Committee on Pensions in this body, and can secure, usually, such legislation as he desires, can not escape responsibility to the old soldiers and sailors of this country, who are the creditors of the nation, by raising technical points of order, or, in other words, creating a dust for the purpose of escaping in the cloud. If there is anything upon which the other side has prided itself, it has been professions of love, affection, and friendship for the old soldier.

Many gentlemen on this side of the Chamber dare not say a word about a pension bill because they served on the other side in the late war, and therefore would be accused of a disposition to reduce pensions and not to reward soldiers and sailors who ought to be remunerated for their gallant services. That fact has been taken advantage of. There is no greater enemy of the old soldier in this country to-day than the Republican party, viewed from its pension policy. Your Commissioner of Pensions issues an order which is without authority of law and absolutely void, to the effect that he will not take up and consider an application for an increase of pension until a year after the original pension has been allowed or rejected.

I say to the Senator from New Hampshire and to the other side of the Chamber that this is simply a scheme to hold down appropriations in order to make the deficit as small as possible, and that at the expense of the rights of pensioners. You are willing to have this right taken away from the soldiers. If, under the law, a man is entitled to an increase of pension, he should have it allowed from the moment his proofs are perfected, and not be compelled to wait a year. The same authority that would permit the Commissioner of Pensions to extend the period for a year would give him a right to extend it for two, five, ten years, or for life.

Yet when there is an effort, such as I am now making, in behalf of the old soldiers, who are in their declining years, and many of whom will be dead within twelve months, to increase their pensions to the minimum of $8 a month, it is met with rules, technicalities, and objections. I suppose under no circumstances could the distinguished and amiable Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] and his equally distinguished colleague and associate on the other side, the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS], be induced to open their hearts and waive a technical rule and let this minimum be increased to $8 a month.

Mr. President, I do not wonder the papers of New Hampshire are criticising the Senator from that State. I have been the recipient of hundreds of letters on this subject. Some of the old soldiers of this country are getting their eyes open. Many of them in my section had been led to believe that, if any other than the Republican party administered the affairs of this Government, the country would be absolutely ruined. The bloody shirt had been waved, and they had been brought into that party under representation that if the Confederates came into power, the Government would be gone.

But, Mr. President, that argument does not hold them any longer. Many of them have deserted the Republican party and are not following its banner to-day, and many more will desert it in the near future. In all the great Populist State conventions held in Nebraska and in other Western States, numbering from seven to eight hundred delegates, we found from 175 to 215 old soldiers among them, and they were not camp followers, either. They were not hundred-day men. They were not men who were riding in ambulances when they should have been marching. They were soldiers who saw service.

Now they are growing old. Some of them are perforce recipients of charity. By force of circumstances they are compelled to receive it. They are appealing to Congress by the hundreds and by the thousands for relief, for a slight increase of their pension; and when they come here and their cause is presented, some distinguished patriot, under the pretense of a hostile rule of the Senate or of the House, deprives them of a hearing. You can not feed or pension the old soldier on the rules of the Senate.

I have complied with the requirements of this body, but, Mr. President, our rules here, like the Constitution, seem to have been made for convenience. They are administered according to the party in power. There is no instrument on the face of the earth, in my judgment, that has been violated more times in the history of its existence than the Constitution, unless it be the rules of the Senate.

There are no two interpretations of those rules alike. I have taken occasion to search for precedents in regard to some of them. A ruling is made to-day. To-morrow another presiding officer may be occupying the chair, and the same rule will come up for decision and a different ruling is made. That has been the history of the Senate since I have been here, and it was its history before I came.

Now, the Senator from California gravely arises at his desk and announces that he is instructed by the Committee on Pensions to raise this question against my amendment. Mr. President, there was not a member of the Committee on Pensions within 2 rods of him at the time he made that statement, and there had not been for half an hour.

Mr. GALLINGER. I beg the Senator's pardon. The pending bill does not come from the Committee on Pensions. The Senator from California must have said the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLEN. There was not a member of the Committee on Appropriations within 2 rods of the Senator from California. The senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] is the nearest him, and he is about a rod and a half away.

Mr. ALLISON. From where?

Mr. ALLEN. From the Senator from California. Now let us take a photographic view of this scene. Not a Senator was closer to the Senator from California at the time he made that statement than the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], who is four seats from him—a full rod. There had not been for half an hour before, and there has not been since. Yet the Senator from California, that it might sound well and be read in the RECORD and in the newspapers of California, and by the soldiers, wants to create the impression that he is the humble servant, perhaps the unconscious instrument, in the hands of a tyrannical Committee on Appropriations, and that they instructed him to make this objection. Now, if they instructed him, they did so before they came in here and long before the amendment was offered.

Mr. President, the old soldiers might as well recognize the fact that however great their claims upon this Government—and they are greater by odds than the claims of holders of Government bonds, for there would have been no Government but for them—the Republican party has no use for them any further than to get their votes by unfulfilled professions of friendship and promises of liberal pension.

I have offered amendment after amendment to bills of this kind to which my amiable and distinguished friend from New Hampshire, always alert, has found some fault with—either with the bills or the amendments. Some rule was violated, or the committee had not met, or they would meet, or they could not do anything, or some other excuse was offered for his opposition.

No, Mr. President, the pension roll has not yet reached the maximum! I understand, though, it is dropping off from what it was, for the reason that the great and powerful metropolitan journals, the mouthpieces and advocates of the holders of Government bonds, have whipped the Committee on Appropriations into line, they have whipped the Committee on Pensions into line, in hostility to the old soldier.

But, sir, there will come a time, and it will be before many years, when the great unnamed and unknown masses will take possession of the Government in all its branches through the ballot, by peaceable and intelligent means, and then the soldier will receive justice at the hands of his Government and this pitiable, petty, paltry, and picayunish way of transacting business with him will cease.

Mr. President, I like to see the Senator from New Hampshire squirm on his seat.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am listening attentively.

Mr. ALLEN. Sir, when the smoke of battle hung over the country and the windows of this Capitol were shaken by the artillery of the enemy, when the life of the nation hung in the balance, when it was a question whether we should have a nation or not, many of the patriots (?) who are now talking about pensions being big enough were absent from the battlefield. Their plumes were not waving on the field of battle.

They were taking no chances on their precious lives. No, Mr. President, they were by their firesides in New England or somewhere else. They were conveniently absent from all danger, while the men who fought were at the front being maimed and wounded or sustaining injury to their health by exposure. And then, after they came home, many found the avenues of business closed to them. Many after an absence of three or four years returned to find their former positions occupied by some one else; they were compelled to move West and become the pioneers in a new campaign that is to end only with their lives.

They were given the right to go West and take a piece of land and build them homes, and build towns and cities and churches and schoolhouses. After they had done all this, sir, after they had fought the battles of the country and the battles of civilization, these patriots (?) who were ensconced at their homes during the war and whose hardest battles were fought upon a parlor carpet, come to the halls of Congress to say what measure of justice they shall have. And if the old soldiers ask what is supposed to be no more than enough to sustain soul and body, instead of coming out in the open and contesting the merits of their claim and right to this pittance, an excuse in the form of a rule is offered so that he who offers it may escape responsibility or just criticism at the hands of this class of voters.

Knowing what has transpired here within a few years, I can understand very well the desire of the other side to keep down appropriations. Why, there is coming along within a few months a Congressional campaign. The people will have to choose the members of the Fifty-sixth Congress. It will not do, so reason our friends on the other side, to let the country know we are a fraction below $45,000,000 behind in the revenues now. It will not do to let it be known that there will be millions of a deficit to be made good at the short session of the present Congress.

All these things must be kept from public view as far as possible, and the tom-tom of patriotism is to be sounded in every Congressional district and in every State on the supposition that "we, the great party of the Government, the great conservative and responsible party, have kept the appropriations down, and are administering the Government economically and on patriotic lines."

Mr. President, no person is more conscious of a tremendous deficit than gentlemen on the other side. The deficit is here. It is growing larger every day. There can not be in the nature of things any hope for an increase of the revenues when the people have not money enough to purchase goods. There must be some imports before there can be revenue, and there will never be imports unless there are persons to purchase the imported goods, and unless the people have money to purchase with they can not buy.

In the very city in which the distinguished author of the so-called Dingley Act lives there are thousands of men to-day on a strike. Their wages have been cut down, if the press dispatches are to be believed; their time has been reduced. The strike has spread until it has reached many of the great manufacturing institutions of New England. If it was the purpose of the act to protect the laboring man, as we were told last year it would, how does it happen that so many thousands of men are being thrown out of employment entirely, or their wages and time materially reduced?

No, Mr. President, an honest government will pay its honest debts, and it will levy enough revenue for that purpose. We have been throwing away millions of dollars, and we will throw away millions more in the next twelve months. Why not give it in pensions?

The Senator from New Hampshire said a few moments ago that a Democratic President was in the White House when the last pension appropriation was made. That is true, but the Republican party had the other branch of Congress and votes enough in this to fix the pension appropriation at whatever sum they might see fit.

You may say that they did not have a majority; that they lacked 1 of a majority; but there never was a doubt in the minds of Senators that there were enough of us on this side to help them out on a pension appropriation bill. So you must not undertake or seek to escape responsibility by saying that Mr. Cleveland was in the Executive Mansion.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not wish to give the Senator from Nebraska a new text, but I want to call his attention to the fact that what I said was that a Democratic Commissioner of Pensions made the estimates and, as I remember it, the estimates were allowed and there was a deficit as a consequence. So if that should occur this year, it would only be a repetition of what occurred under a Democratic President and a Democratic Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. ALLEN. But, Mr. President, a Republican Congress had it in its power then as it has now to increase the pension appropriations. Why was that not done? Why was a deficit permitted?

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, they granted the estimate of the Democratic Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. ALLEN. Well, that is another excellent (?) excuse for a neglect of duty—that they granted what the Democrats wanted. Is the fight that has been going on between the Democratic party and the Republican party a sham fight? Have you simply been sparring for points or playing for positions, or is there a real difference? Mr. President, there were forty-four Senators on the other side and enough on this in the last Congress—the Fifty-fourth—to give them a majority on a pension or on any other just bill.

They had a majority in the House of Representatives. But no effort was made in either branch of Congress to increase the pension appropriations, as no effort will be made now; but every effort that is made, even by one as feeble as myself, will be choked down, and if that will not do, will be laughed down, as the Senator from New Hampshire endeavored to laugh it down a moment ago.

Mr. President, I have heard the Senator from New Hampshire make patriotic speeches. He has come very nearly deceiving me a few times. I have heard my distinguished and honorable friend who sits about 2 rods in his rear (I want to keep in the mind of the country the fact that nobody is sitting near the Senator from California, and has not been since I referred to him a while ago) make very patriotic speeches in which the old soldier was lauded for his gallantry and his bravery. But, Mr. President, I have never heard one of those Senators make a speech for the old soldier nor cast a vote for him when it would do the old soldier any good.

Why, we will frequently pass several pension bills through this branch at a rate as high as one a minute. I think we exceeded that rate a short time ago. Probably we got up to seventy in sixty minutes. The speed was very great, I know. There was not a man who participated in the passage of those bills or who presented them for consideration who did not know that they would be blocked in the other branch of Congress and never pass.

I am not prepared to say that there was an understanding they should be blocked there, but if I were going to draw a deduction from established facts, I think I would be warranted in going to a jury and claiming that the fact that none of them passed there warranted the conclusion that there was an understanding between the two ends of the Capitol that no pension bills should pass; and I think none of them have passed. Yet all this is heralded as an intention to deal justly with the old soldiers.

A bill that comes from that branch of Congress to pension a soldier is choked off here in some way, and a bill for that purpose which goes from this branch to that is choked off there. The result is they do not get through, and they do not become laws. The applicants who come to Congress for pensions grow old and die without recognition at the hands of their Government.

The Senator from New Hampshire seems to think he was furnishing me a new text, but I shall continue my remarks until my present texts are exhausted. While I am speaking of this matter I want to call attention to another statement of my friend from New Hampshire, for whom I have the highest personal regard. Shortly after we reconvened, the Senator announced that we would not enter on work pensioning the daughters or the sons of old soldiers.

He made that announcement in connection with his presentation of a report of a bill from his committee. I understood the Senator to say that that was not the policy of the Government; and yet if you will examine the special acts of Congress passed on the subject of pensions, you will find these bills amount to hundreds in the years that have gone.

Mr. Lincoln, in his second inaugural address, delivered in 1865, declared it would be the policy of this Government to care for him who bore the heat and burden of the day, "and for his widow and orphans."

Those were his words. Mr. Lincoln's word was law. Every patriotic heart in the nation swelled with pride and a sense of justice when that declaration was made. No man has ever lived and occupied the White House since that time whose word was so potent with the people. Mr. President [the Vice-President in the chair], you and I well know the words of Mr. Lincoln. He declared to the soldiers in the field and to the faithful wives at home, who were being deprived of the association and care of husbands, that if the husband fell on the field of battle or died in camp, or if he was injured and could not fulfill his duty to his family, the Government would care for him and for his widow and his orphans.

Thirty-five years after that great utterance, and when the country has become purse-proud and rich beyond the wildest dreams of any man, when it is worth billions and billions of dollars, when these men have grown old, are bowed with rheumatism and ill health and wounds, when their widows have grown old and need greater care and many of their unfortunate children are unable to care for themselves, a new light, a new patriot, arises in the Senate of the United States of the same political faith and announces that that doctrine is nonsense and that Mr. Lincoln was wrong.

Now, I should like to ask the Senator from California if the Committee on Appropriations still insists upon his urging this objection?

Mr. PERKINS. I should like to answer the question when the Senator is through.

Mr. ALLEN. That is a very indefinite time.

Mr. PERKINS. Then I will state to the Senator, and he may reply to me, that many measures were presented to the Committee on Appropriations looking to new legislation upon the bill. The distinguished Senator from Nebraska well knows that that is not the place for legislation. The point of order time and again has been made under rules as familiar to him as to anyone in the Senate—Rule XVI, clause 3—and in the committee, not in the Senate, not on the floor, or, as the Senator intimated, it was understood by my personally interviewing members of the committee here on the floor, that they had instructed me, but in the committee room no new legislation was permitted to be added to this bill.

If any Senator, patriotic as my friend from Nebraska is, desires to have passed some bill to amend our statutes relating to pensioning soldiers, everyone on this side of the Chamber will extend to him most willing and hearty aid in doing so, and I know that a majority of our friends on the other side of the Chamber, if the Senator will present any bill which is just and equitable and in the interest of the soldiers of the country, will render their assistance, and it can easily pass the Senate. The Senator from Nebraska well knows that fact.

I understand, Mr. President, it goes out to the country that the Republicans, or the one who is temporarily honored by presenting this bill to the Senate, have made the point of order, and that an amendment has been voted down providing that no pension of less than $8 a month shall be paid to any soldier. It is a good text for a political campaign. It places this side of the Chamber, so to speak, with those who do not investigate the matter, in an unenviable light, though Senators on this side have always been the friends of the soldier; they have always been patriots.

In saying that I do not wish to detract one iota from any other political party, for I believe every Democrat, aye, every Populist, has one common object in view, if he is a true citizen, and that is the welfare and prosperity of our country. The Senator from Nebraska is as patriotic, I am willing to concede, as any other man.

Now, Mr. President, as a matter of fact, the average pension paid to the 976,014 pensioners upon the pension rolls is $11.17 per month. That is a small sum, I will admit, but if the Senator from Nebraska thinks that should be increased, I am willing to join hands with him.

Mr. ALLEN. Do I understand the Senator to say that the lowest pension paid is eleven dollars and a fraction per month?

Mr. PERKINS. No; that is the average.

Mr. ALLEN. That is, some get five or six thousand dollars a year and many get five or six dollars a month.

Mr. FRYE. No; there is not anybody who gets five or six thousand dollars a year.

Mr. ALLEN. The great majority get not more than $6 a month, or, at any rate, they get less than $10 a month.

Mr. PERKINS. I find, by referring to page 21 of the report of the Commissioner of Pensions, Table 12, and on looking at the statistics, from which I have made a hasty calculation, that there are 16,893 pensioners in the State of Nebraska, and that the amount paid to pensioners in that State is $2,544,373.06, making an average paid to each pensioner in that State within a fraction of $15 per month. I can go through the calculation with more care; but I have not the time, nor would it interest anyone to do so. Nebraska, however, evidently is getting her fair average, and the soldiers of that State deserve it. They were gallant and true men out there; but the eight-dollar text that my friend from Nebraska has been speaking from places the good picture in a bad light and in a wrong light. Some people are color-blind; they do not want to see the facts as they are.

This bill simply appropriates one hundred and forty-one million and some odd thousand dollars, the amount estimated by the Secretary of the Interior, which is required to pay the pensions accorded to the soldiers or veterans of the war in accordance with the law upon our statute books—the simplest proposition imaginable. The Senator realizes well that any amendment offered to this bill intended to embarrass it—or to furnish, I was going to say, but it would not be dignified to say it, political ammunition—is not in order.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. Is it not an admitted fact that there will be a deficiency in the money for paying pensions? Is that not a well-known fact?

Mr. PERKINS. There is a conflict of opinion on that point. The Secretary of the Interior, a thorough business man, after carefully reviewing the matter and listening to the report of his Commissioner of Pensions, said he believed that the amount herein appropriated would be sufficient.

Mr. TELLER. I do not intend to find any fault with the Senate committee, but I state here that it is absolutely certain that there will be a deficiency. Where this bill originated that was just as well known as it is to me and to everybody else. In dealing with this question, however, the committee have to deal with conditions as they are, and I think I might say that it would be useless to offer any amendment to this bill of that character, or any other proper amendment, because in another place it will be met with opposition which can not be overcome. I want it distinctly understood, however, so far as I am concerned, that I know, and I think everybody else ought to know, there is bound to be a deficiency, and that it will be appropriated for in a deficiency bill.

Mr. PERKINS. I think so; I think there is no doubt about it, but we have no authentic data at this time whereby we can estimate the amount.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say another thing while I am up. If the policy is, as here charged, to render the estimates of the amount necessary to carry on any department or branch of the Government less than the authorities know will be required, it is most pernicious and criminal.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from California is justified, from an argumentative point of view, in presenting his statement about the average pension paid to the old soldier. In making that average the Senator has taken the enormous pensions, some of them almost fabulous, that are being paid under special acts of Congress.

Then he is taking the smaller ones, and from the entire sum he strikes an average—he divides the total sum by the number of pensioners, and the Senator wants the pensioners to understand, I suppose, that a great majority of them are receiving an average of $11 and some cents a month. Mr. President, there is not a doubt that the great bulk of the soldiers are receiving less than $10 a month, and no person has it in his power to know that fact more thoroughly than a man who is dealing with a pension appropriation bill. Those of us who are not permitted to invade the sacred precincts of the Pensions Committee or have anything to do about this work are not expected to have the data and be as well informed as Senators who are engaged in pension work.

Then the Senator from California said there are something like 15,000 pensioners in my State. Probably I should make it another thousand. I will make it either way, as he says.

Mr. PERKINS. Sixteen thousand eight hundred and ninety-three.

Mr. ALLEN. Pretty nearly 17,000, and they are receiving an average of $15 apiece. I do not know how hasty that computation is. I think it must have been made since this debate began.

Mr. PERKINS. It was.

Mr. ALLEN. I was satisfied from the result announced it was made very hastily. It is only approximately true; and of course it is intended to help out the position of the Senator from California—that is its chief purpose—and to inform the soldiers of my State when they read the Senator's remarks, as I assure him they will, because they can all read, or practically all of them, that they are getting more than they ought to get and they ought to be content; and yet it is true the great mass of the pensioners in my State are not getting an average of $10 a month. There are a few getting large sums; but the great mass are not getting large pensions.

I want to say to the Senator from California another thing, too. There are more old soldiers in the State of Nebraska and in Kansas according to the number of inhabitants than in any other States in the Union; and it is not surprising there should be a large number of pensioners there. Mr. President, these men are part of the grand army of which I spoke a moment ago, who came home from the war, found their positions occupied by others, and were compelled to become pioneers, and to go to Kansas and Nebraska and settle those States.

Now, I want to call attention to one thing more, and I shall be perfectly willing the executioner shall strike this amendment with his ax. This amendment was offered in the Senate last Wednesday during the morning hour. In the natural order of things it would reach the Pension Committee that night—Wednesday night. There were Thursday and Friday and Saturday and this far, at twenty-five minutes to 5 o'clock in the afternoon of Monday, for the committee to have considered it.

If I understand my distinguished friend from New Hampshire, he has not even called the committee together, nor has he done that other thing we always do when we are in earnest—taken a poll of the Committee on Pensions. He has just let the amendment die, biding his time to raise a technical objection to it, knowing his party would be friendly to the objection and try to hide responsibility for its defeat under an assumed rule of the Senate.

We have a rule that provides two things: That an amendment which undertakes to change existing law can not be received until it has gone to the committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and been recommended or rejected by it, as I now recall it. I do not know that I state the words exactly, but that is the purport of the rule. This amendment has been before the committee. How is the Senate to put an amendment on a bill which has to go through that process, if the members of the committee will not meet after it has been sent to them? Unfortunately, we are not a court. I believe in judicial authority; I believe the Senate ought to exercise that authority, but, unfortunately, we have no power, by proper writ, to say to this committee, "You shall get together and act upon this matter."

They will not meet or act. If the amendment had been introduced by a political friend, and some party advantage were to be gained, you would have seen these gentlemen scudding around in the corners, getting together, passing upon it, and reporting it quickly; but it is offered by a political opponent, and "We do not want to please this Populist nor the people he represents," so they say. "We do not want him to get any political advantage out of it. We want to defeat this proposed amendment, notwithstanding it defeats and brings sorrow and misery to thousands of old soldiers, their widows and their orphans. We will defeat it simply because we do not want him or his party to have any advantage."

Mr. President, what an elevating thought that must be! How elevated a man's mind and purposes must be actuated by a motive of that kind!

The amendment is not general legislation. I would not say that the Senator from California knows that it is not general legislation, because I am not informed of that; but what is general legislation? If I understand correctly, the presiding officer of this Chamber is a lawyer. What is an amendment proposing general legislation?

It is one which applies alike to all persons and all conditions defined in the amendment. A bill which would affect the interests of my friend on the left [Mr. MCENERY] would be private legislation; a bill which would affect the interests of a particular individual or a particular corporation would be private legislation, and a bill which would affect the interests of all persons or a class of persons similarly situated would be general legislation, within the definition given by the dictionaries and the lexicons of the English language.

What does this proposed amendment offer to do? It pertains to the subject of pensions alone; it pertains to the mere subject of raising the minimum of pensions from $6 a month to $8 a month in precisely the same way a change was made here three years ago.

In explanation of what my friend from California has stated, I am willing to listen to his objection again.

Mr. GALLINGER. A single observation, Mr. President. I think that when the Senator from Nebraska, toward whom I have always tried to exercise the most kindly disposition, reads to-morrow morning in cold type some things that he has said about the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, he will be sorry that he said them.

This side of the Chamber is not ignorant of the fact that whenever any Senator, a soldier or a civilian, wants the chairmanship of the Committee on Pensions it is at the disposal of my Republican colleagues. It is one of the gratifying facts that I shall carry to my home with me when I depart from this Chamber, that when I was placed at the head of this great committee it was at the most earnest solicitation of many of the leaders of the other side of the Chamber, men who came to me personally and urged me that I would forego my personal comfort and accept this great burden, which I did, and which I have borne and performed my duty to the best of my ability.

Now, Mr. President, regarding the Senator's amendment, I want to call his attention to the fact that on Saturday last we passed five general pension bills, and that his amendment would have been germane to any one of them and in order. The Senator could have offered his amendment, and it could have been debated and voted upon in the Senate. But the Senator chose to forego that privilege, which he had under the rules of this body, and he has offered his amendment out of order to a bill to which it is not germane and concerning which it can not be entertained.

I will not traverse the ground to repeat that the Committee on Pensions meets once a week, when matters which have accumulated are taken up and considered so far as we have the time and physical power to consider them. We have before that committee to-day 1,200 bills, almost one-half of the bills which have been presented to this Senate during the present Congress. When matters which involve facts are presented to us which are in the possession of any bureau of the Government, we send the bills to that bureau for the ascertainment of those facts; and we sent the Senator's amendment to the Pension Bureau for the purpose of learning how much it would increase the burden of pension appropriations if the amendment should be adopted into law.

It never once occurred to me, Mr. President, that the Senator desired to offer it as an amendment to the pending bill. I took it for granted that he was willing, as I was willing, in general pension legislation in which I was interested, to take his chances of passing it through this branch of Congress and the other branch of Congress and getting the Executive approval.

Mr. President, the Senator will not make any capital against the Republican party by anything he has said to-day. The Republican party has been a friend to the soldier always. The Republican party has voted in both Houses of Congress solidly, or almost solidly, for every pension bill which has ever been presented to Congress. In that connection I desire, without reading, to ask permission to incorporate in the RECORD as part of my remarks a table showing the votes which have been given on the several general pension bills which have been enacted into law during the past decade or thereabouts.

The table referred to is as follows:

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, those tables will show the fact—and I say it not for the purpose of raising an issue between the Republican party and the Democratic party, or between the Republican party and the Populist party, as it is led very ably by the Senator from Nebraska—I say those tables will show the fact that there were cast 719 Republican votes on all the measures enumerated in that table in the affirmative and 177 Democratic votes.

One Republican alone voted "no" on all the acts during 1890; 316 Democrats voted "no," and after consolidating all of the votes cast pro and con on all of those subjects of general pension legislation in Congress, we find a total of 1,394 Republican votes cast for pension legislation and only 2 Republican votes in the negative; and when we combine the Democratic opposition we find 472 votes for pension legislation and 810 Democratic votes against pension legislation.

Mr. President, as I said a moment ago, the Senator will not make any capital against the Republican party by anything he has said to-day. His proposed amendment, which will add one, two, or three million dollars, more or less, to the pension appropriations of this Government, is in the hands of the Commissioner of Pensions, and when the committee receives the reply it will be called together to consider whether, in its judgment, it is wise to increase this burden—because it is a burden, aggregating to-day $141,000,000, with a probable deficiency, the Senator from Colorado says a certain deficiency—and to add still further to the pension appropriations of the Government during the present fiscal year.

Mr. President, we are importuned. I have on my table to-day hundreds of letters from men who lost their arms or their legs in the late war demanding of me that I shall immediately report a bill to increase very largely the pensions to that class of soldiers, which would take several million dollars.

Mr. ALLEN. That is right. They should have it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have scores if not hundreds of letters asking me to report a bill, which has been before Congress a long time, to increase the pensions of all the soldiers who have lost their hearing as a result of their military service; and that, very likely, would take a million dollars. I have received during the past two months hundreds of letters demanding that I shall reintroduce the so-called Pickler bill and force it to immediate passage, which, according to the best computations we can get from the Pension Bureau, would involve the Government the first year in sixty or seventy million dollars of expenditure.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN. Does not the Senator think we would better take a part of the money that is being needlessly appropriated now, as I think, for rivers and harbors, and a large navy, and excessive mail contracts, and transfer it to the pension fund?

Mr. GALLINGER. The Committee on Pensions can not do that.

Mr. ALLEN. We can cover the $60,000,000 needed.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Committee on Pensions can not do that. I am in favor of very liberal internal improvements; I am in favor of very liberal expenditures for a modern navy; I am in favor of improving our coast defenses so that we will be secure among the nations of the world, and I am not sure that we can properly make any very large saving from any of the sources the Senator from Nebraska has named.

As I said a moment ago, this is the pension appropriation bill; the Committee on Appropriations have named in the bill the amount the Secretary of the Interior asked for. In a communication to that committee, the Commissioner has suggested that he is satisfied with it and will do the best he can with it. He will try to meet the obligations with $141,000,000. If he fails, he will have to come to Congress with a deficiency appropriation bill. Of course, we will pass it and enact it into law. That is all there is to this question.

The Senator from Nebraska ought not to complicate it with a question of increasing the rates provided in the general laws for pensions which are now on the statute book. Let his proposition stand by itself. It is now before the committee. I promise the Senator it will be reported to the Senate if I live. It may be reported adversely. If it is, he can have it put on the Calendar and have it considered, and then the Senator can get a yea-and-nay vote upon his proposition and put every one of us on record.

When that time comes, if I think it unwise to increase the pension roll further, or to increase the pensions paid to those who are receiving the minimum amount, I shall not be deterred by anything the Senator from Nebraska has said or anything the newspapers in my State have said from voting as my conscience shall dictate. I have tried to do my duty. If I fail in it, I shall answer to the Senate and to the people who sent me here rather than to the Senator from Nebraska or the people whom he represents.

Mr. ALLEN. Just one word, and I will be through. I have not intended to say anything respecting the Senator's administration of the office of chairman of the Committee on Pensions which would reflect upon his competency or his activity. I did say, and I repeat it, as I know it to be true, that no man who did not serve in the Army or Navy can have an appreciation of the condition or feelings of those who did.

One word more in answer to the Senator's statement that my amendment is not germane to this bill. It would not have been germane to any other appropriation bill that has been offered or that will be offered during the present session of Congress.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, my suggestion was that we passed Saturday last five general pension bills, to any one of which it might have been offered as an amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. No; it would not have been germane, and the point of order would have been sustained if it had been offered to any of them.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; it could not have been.

Mr. ALLEN. The amendment relates to pensions and the pending bill relates to pensions.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator does not understand me.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes; I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. Five general pension bills were passed.

Mr. ALLEN. I understand.

Mr. GALLINGER. And this could have been offered as an amendment to any one of them.

Mr. ALLEN. There is a matter to which I wish to call attention. It has been less than two years ago, I think possibly it was two years ago this winter, when the Senator reported some pension bills here, and I offered as an amendment a provision that Alice V. Cook should receive a pension for a stated amount, and the Senator raised a point of order and discussed the question for an hour or more, objecting to it.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from New Hampshire did not discuss it for an hour, because he is not accustomed to discuss trivial matters for an hour.

Mr. ALLEN. Is a pension matter trivial?

Mr. GALLINGER. It happened to be on that occasion. What the Senator from New Hampshire did there was to object to the Senator from Nebraska offering one private bill as an amendment to another private pension bill. The Senator remembers that.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes. It was just as germane to that bill as it would be to any other appropriation bill, but here is a specific pension appropriation bill, covering the subject of pensions to soldiers, to which it is offered. I foresee its defeat, of course. I understand that. I am not unconscious of the surroundings at all. I merely desire to say to the Republican side of this Chamber that you can not and will not escape responsibility in the eyes of right-thinking and patriotic people for this little pettifogging scheme of raising an objection without merit to the proposed amendment and by that means defeating it.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the Senator from Nebraska will see the value and importance of this rule, not only as applied to the pending bill, but as to all appropriation bills. It is the rule of both Houses, because if legislation new and different from existing laws can be proposed to appropriation bills, there is no end to the disposition of those bills. Therefore this is a wholesome rule that does not apply alone to the pending bill, but applies to every other appropriation bill that will be before Congress at the present session.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] himself desired to amend the bill and, I believe, appeared before the Committee on Appropriations——

Mr. GALLINGER. Advocating it.

Mr. ALLISON. Asking a legislative amendment as respects some of the existing laws regarding pensions; but the committee, as is their uniform custom, stated that if we allowed new legislation to be interpolated here there would be no end to the appropriation bills.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa whether, a few moments ago, the Senator from New Hampshire did not propose an amendment to this bill changing the general law, which was adopted?

Mr. ALLISON. That may be. Certainly, if it was done, it was upon the report of a committee.

Mr. ALLEN. I am informed that that is a fact—that such an amendment was offered and agreed to a few moments ago.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know what the nature of it was. I was not in the Chamber.

Mr. ALLEN. Possibly the Senator from Iowa will be kind enough to explain what difference there is between that amendment and this, so far as the principle is concerned.

Mr. ALLISON. I should be very glad to explain it, if any explanation were needed. But certainly it is manifest to the Senator, at least so it appears to me, that his amendment is general legislation in that it changes existing law as to pensions.

That, of course, is an amendment which is not in order upon the pending appropriation bill, nor is any amendment in order to any appropriation bill general in its character, changing existing law, because if that is not to be the rule, then we may as well go on and legislate upon appropriation bills without reference to other committees, and the Committee on Appropriations would be the only committee really that would consider legislation for this body.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator from Iowa will not insist upon that position. He knows that all the material legislation of the country goes on appropriation bills. Every appropriation bill that has passed Congress carried with it general legislation of far-reaching consequences, and the Senator from Iowa, as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, understands that very fully and very frequently consents that general legislation shall find a place on an appropriation bill.

No, Mr. President, that is not the trouble; that is not the difficulty. The decree has gone forth in Republican circles that pensions have reached their maximum; that they shall not be increased; that the cry of the old soldier shall be stifled; that they are passing away pretty rapidly and are not numerically so great as they were a few years ago. Therefore their votes are not quite so important, and political attention is being drawn away from them.

The other side do not want to take the responsibility and will not take it. I think I know, if I am not subjecting myself to a charge of undue egotism, the difference between general legislation and special legislation, and I think there are no two lawyers whose opinions are worth anything at the bar who do not understand the difference between general legislation and special legislation, and no mere ruling that this amendment is general legislation will satisfy any man that it is correct.

Of course I understand such a decision would deprive the amendment of the opportunity of going on the bill, but an amendment upon this bill, a pension appropriation bill, making general appropriations for pensions, which simply increases the minimum of pensions from $6 to $8, can not be called general legislation within any rule; and no mere assertion or asseveration, however strongly made or from what source it may emanate, will deceive anybody or convince them that it is right.

Mr. PERKINS. The point of order was made under Rule XVI. I called the attention of the Chair to the fact that the amendment proposed general legislation, because it changes the existing law upon our statute books. The Senator from Nebraska, however, will not accept my opinion as a layman that changing the present law on an appropriation bill is general legislation. He does not consider that I am competent to construe it. Therefore I will ask him to turn to clause 1 of Rule XVI, which reads as follows:

> No amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law.

I should like to have the Senator construe that section of the rule.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to occupy the attention of the Senate for one moment, and I should like to have the Senator from Nebraska give me his kind attention for one moment. I wish to say a word in rejoinder to an observation by the Senator from Nebraska—of course he had not weighed it when he made it—that there is an understanding between the two committees of Congress that bills passed here shall not be passed in the other House, and vice versa.

There is no such understanding. Bills are passed by this body in good faith, and they go to the other branch, and it is their responsibility as to what becomes of them. Every bill that the House sends here which the Committee on Pensions can reach will be given consideration.

I know the Senator from Nebraska is glad to have me make this statement, because he would not purposely misrepresent the two committees of Congress.

Mr. ALLEN. I did not say the bills were held up by agreement. I said the facts and circumstances under which they were held up would warrant the deduction that they were held up by agreement.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator is glad, then, to have his deduction removed.

Mr. ALLEN. No, that is what I said. I do not say it now for the first time. I say it for the second time. I said it a moment ago, and nothing else.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry, and that is whether, when a point of order is raised, debate is in order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands it to be one of the practices of the Senate to have a point of order debated. At least the present occupant of the chair has heard it done many times. The Chair is ready to decide the point of order whenever the Senate is ready.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I understand it is always by unanimous consent that debate proceeds. I think it will be found in the rules that debate upon a point of order shall proceed only by unanimous consent. If that be true, I wish, after two or three hours' discussion, to object to any further debate on the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair supposes that the debate has been proceeding by unanimous consent. If objection is made to further debate, the Chair will rule upon the point of order.

Mr. GORMAN. I know from experience that when we get on a point of order the Senate can not settle it in half an hour. As it is nearly 6 o'clock, I will move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. ALLISON. Let the Chair rule.

Mr. ALLEN. No; let it go over.

Mr. GORMAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 25, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, January 24, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATIONS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG] rises, as the Chair understands, to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I notice in the New York Journal of this morning a statement that a representative of that paper had submitted to each member of the House of Representatives this question: "Are you in favor of the pending bill?" alluding to the immigration bill pending in the other House. I notice that I am quoted as voting in the affirmative for the so-called Lodge bill. Now, I wish to state that a reporter of this paper called upon me last night at my house with this specific question as it appears in the paper to-day, and that I specifically answered "No."

Ordinarily I do not pay any attention to newspaper reports, but I do not wish the impression to go abroad that I am for the Lodge bill or any immigration bill of that sort. I am emphatically against it; and when the bill comes up for consideration I shall vote against its passage and give my reasons therefor.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG] having called attention to the poll of the House made by the New York Journal, I have availed myself of the courtesy of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] to look at the list, and I find that I am recorded in favor of the bill. That statement is without authority from me, as I saw no reporter from that paper and gave no opinion about the matter.

Mr. CANNON. I suggest that the roll be called and that the record as published in that paper be corrected. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests that the correction of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is about all we should attempt, without undertaking to correct statements which appear in the newspapers at large throughout the country.

AMERICAN REGISTER FOR STEAMER NAVAHOE.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries to present, and ask for immediate consideration, the bill of the Senate No. 3053, to provide an American register for the steamer Navahoe.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed to cause the foreign-built steamer Navahoe, owned by B. F. Clyde, a citizen of the United States, to be registered as a vessel of the United States.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I will reserve the right to object until I have heard the reading of the report in this case.

Mr. PERKINS. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. PERKINS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, having had under consideration the bill of the Senate, No. 3053, to provide an American register for the steamer Navahoe, have carefully considered the same, and beg leave to report that a similar bill was favorably reported by the Senate committee on January 6, and as the Senate report fully sets forth the facts in connection with the case, the committee adopt said report as its own, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The Senate report is as follows:

"The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3053) to provide an American register for the steamer Navahoe, have carefully considered the same, and report as follows:

"The Navahoe (then Thuringia), and at that time owned by the Hamburg-American Packet Company, while on a voyage from Havre, France, for West

Indian ports, on December 16, 1896, went ashore on the east point of the Island of Curaçao, West Indies. The wreck was salved by the Chapman Derrick and Wrecking Company of New York, under contract with the Hamburg Company, after about a month's work. The wreck was towed to Newport News, arriving March 29, 1897.

The vessel, in her damaged condition, was bought from the Hamburg-American Company on June 23, 1897, for the sum of $10,000, by B. F. Clyde, a citizen of the United States, being a member of the firm of William P. Clyde & Co., who repaired her at the shipyard of the John N. Robins Company, Erie Basin, Brooklyn, and paid additional bills for labor, material, and fittings, at a total cost of $42,405.88, vouchers for which expenses have been submitted to the committee, together with complete evidence of the other facts in the case.

As this vessel is owned by a citizen of the United States and has been repaired by him to an extent equal to more than three-fourths of her total cost when repaired, the only bar to this vessel's registry under the general law (section 4136, Revised Statutes) is the fact that she was wrecked outside of the waters of the United States instead of within the same.

It has been the practice of Congress in similar cases to remove this technical bar to registry where all the other and more material requirements of the law have been shown to have been complied with, and accordingly your committee report back S. 3053 with the recommendation that it pass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. Before consent is given, I would like to ask a question of the gentleman in charge of this bill with reference to the circumstances attending the loss and repairs of this vessel.

The law provides that a vessel wrecked within the waters of the United States, and taken into a port of the United States and repaired there, to the extent of three-fourths of the value of the vessel after it is repaired, may be registered as an American vessel on application to the Treasury Department. In many cases where vessels have been wrecked on the open sea, beyond but near the jurisdiction of the United States, the registration, where the repairs have reached that amount, has been allowed by a special act of Congress. But is not this a case where the vessel proposed to be registered was not only not wrecked on the open seas, or in waters adjacent to the United States, but in waters under the jurisdiction of a foreign country, and then was purchased and brought here to be repaired?

Mr. PERKINS. This vessel was wrecked on a coral reef in the West Indies.

Mr. DINGLEY. And under the jurisdiction of a foreign government?

Mr. PERKINS (continuing). And was brought to Newport News, where it was sold to B. F. Clyde, a citizen of the United States, a member of the firm of William P. Clyde & Co., who had her repaired at the shipyards of the Robbins Company, in Brooklyn, and paid additional bills for labor, material, and so on, amounting to a total cost of $43,405.88.

Mr. DINGLEY. Did the committee ascertain whether this was a sale for the real value of the vessel or for a nominal sum for the purpose of obtaining an American register? Ten thousand dollars would seem to be a small amount for a steamer of this class injured so slightly as to admit of her being towed from the West Indies to Newport News.

Mr. PERKINS. According to the proof before the committee the vessel was sold for less than its full value. It was estimated, by some experts, that the vessel was worth fully $18,000, at the time, if I recollect. This did not involve, also, the expense of getting her to Newport News.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to have this bill go over for another day in order that I may have an opportunity to examine the papers in the case. There is a tendency to buy old hulks, wrecked outside of our jurisdiction, and make some repairs on them, and then have them admitted to registry as American vessels. The object of the law is to simply provide for cases of wreckage, either in our waters or near our waters. It is not wise to give this privilege to vessels wrecked in waters under foreign jurisdiction, for this would soon lead to the bringing in of hulks from Europe to obtain registration under our laws.

The SPEAKER. The matter will go over on the objection of the gentleman from Maine.

PRINTING FOR COMMITTEE ON REFORM IN THE CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service to ask the immediate consideration of the resolution I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service be authorized to have printed and bound the testimony taken, and hearings on the bills pending before it, for the use of said committee during the Fifty-fifth Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I object.

ARMOR PLATE INVESTIGATION.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to report back House resolutions 145 and 146, making certain inquiries from the Secretary of the Navy.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The first resolution, No. 145, was read, as follows:

Whereas the Secretary of the Navy having forwarded to the House of Representatives, on December 6, 1897, the report of the Armor Factory Board concerning the establishment of a Government armor plant; and

Whereas it appears from said report that a great many places have been recommended as sites for the location of the proposed Government armor factory: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby requested to address circular letters to the boards of trade or chambers of commerce of all places that have been recommended as sites for the proposed Government armor factory, and that have not already forwarded data on said subject, soliciting statements from each place concerning its advantages in answer to the same questions propounded by the Armor Factory Board during its trip through the South.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby requested to cause to be prepared and to forward to the House all the data gathered by the Armor Factory Board during its trip through the South concerning the advantages claimed by places in that section as suitable locations for the proposed Government armor factory, together with all information concerning other places obtained in compliance with the foregoing resolution.

Resolution No. 146 was read, as follows:

Whereas the Secretary of the Navy having forwarded to the House of Representatives on December 6, 1897, the report of the Armor Factory Board concerning the establishment of a Government armor factory; and

Whereas it appears from said report that no reference is made to the board's visit South, and its investigations of the advantages of that section as a suitable location for the proposed Government armor factory: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby requested to cause to be prepared and to forward to the House the data gathered by the Armor Factory Board during its trip through the South concerning the advantages claimed by that section as a suitable location for the proposed Government armor factory.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred House resolutions Nos. 145 and 146, makes the following report:

The two resolutions call upon the Secretary of the Navy for information in regard to sites for a proposed Government armor manufacturing plant.

The committee find that in pursuance of legislation at the first session of the present Congress the Secretary of the Navy, on the 1st of December, 1897, advertised for sealed proposals in accordance with the act of Congress approved July 19, 1897: "Sealed proposals are hereby invited and will be received at this Department until 12 o'clock noon, January 29, 1898, at which time and place they will be publicly opened, for the construction by contract of a Government armor factory, including the land, buildings, and machinery as a whole plant, in accordance with the plans and specifications. Proposals will also be received at the same time and place for furnishing separately the land or buildings, or the whole or any part of said machinery embraced in such a plant, in accordance with the plans and specifications."

Under date of December 6, 1897, the Secretary of the Navy addressed the following communication to the Speaker of the House:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, December 6, 1897.

SIR: I have the honor to forward herewith for the information and consideration of Congress the report of the Armor Factory Board, appointed under authority of the act approved July 19, 1897, making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, which provides as follows:

"In case the Secretary of the Navy shall find it impossible to make contracts for said armor within the limits as to price above fixed he shall be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to take steps to establish a Government armor factory of sufficient capacity to make such armor. In executing this authority he shall prepare a description and plans and specifications of the land, buildings, and machinery suitable for the factory, and shall advertise for proposals to furnish such land, buildings, and machinery as a whole plant, or separately for the land or buildings or the whole or any part of said machinery, and report to Congress at its next session. The Secretary shall also appoint an armor-factory board, to consist of competent naval officers of suitable rank, to advise and assist him in executing the authority hereby conferred."

This report, with its appendixes, is transmitted to Congress in order that it may be advised at the earliest moment of all the information obtained by the board and of its conclusions.

In further compliance of this act, the Department has issued advertisements "for proposals to furnish such lands, buildings, machinery," etc., and bids will be opened on the 29th of January next, the result of which will be thereupon transmitted to Congress.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

JOHN D. LONG, Secretary.

THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE.

In view of the foregoing statement, the committee report back the resolutions with the recommendation that they lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to lay the first resolution on the table.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is that motion debatable?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I do not know whether my friend listened to the reading of this report or not. It is very difficult to hear and follow the reading of a long report, and perhaps the House has not gathered the purport of this proposed action as clearly as it might. The two resolutions called for information from the Secretary of the Navy in regard to sites, localities where a Government armor plant might be located.

In view of the fact that under a law passed at the last session of Congress the Secretary of the Navy, on the 1st day of December, advertised for proposals from all parts of the country for furnishing the land, buildings, machinery, or any part thereof, and that the bids under those proposals will be opened on the 29th of this month, which is near at hand, at which time the Secretary, in a communication just read, states to the Speaker that he will transmit all the information by a special report to Congress, under the authority of the law passed at the last session, there does not seem to be any necessity for the passage of these resolutions, and therefore the committee recommend that they lie on the table.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman will allow me, as I understand from the original report that was sent in here last December by the Secretary of the Navy, he contends that this House did not call on him for any information in reference to the establishment of this armor-plate plant except the cost of building the plant. Now, as I understand the resolution, and as I read it, it distinctly called on the Secretary of the Navy to have this board investigate the question of the proper place to locate a plant.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will state to the gentleman that there is no proposition pending anywhere calling in question the action of the Secretary in carrying out the law of Congress. These resolutions simply call specifically for certain information from the Secretary. One of them calls for a report from the Secretary of the data alleged to have been obtained by the board, of which they have made no report. Another resolution instructs the Secretary of the Navy——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Do I understand the gentleman to say——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If the gentleman will permit me to finish my sentence, I can state the information which I wish to give a great deal better than the gentleman can state it for me.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not wish to state it for him.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The gentleman will please permit me to finish my sentence. A gentleman who has had so much to do with printing and who has compiled public documents with such skill must understand that a completed sentence is more intelligible usually than an uncompleted one. One of these resolutions calls upon the Secretary to address circular letters to boards of trade and municipal authorities, asking them to submit statements of the facilities that their regions offer for the construction of this plant. The other one, as I stated before, calls for certain data alleged to have been obtained by the armor board during its tour of observation.

Now, the Secretary of the Navy, in this letter of the 6th of December, states distinctly that he transmitted the report of the board that was organized by the Department and given certain functions to perform; that in pursuance of the other portions of the instructions given him by Congress he advertised, on the 1st day of December last, for proposals in regard to the furnishing of land, buildings, machinery, etc., either for the whole or a portion of the plant, and that these proposals will be opened on the 29th of January, which is near at hand, he having given the usual notice, and that as soon as those proposals are received and opened he will report in full to Congress.

That is in pursuance of a law that was passed at the last session, and it seemed to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and it seems to me very clear, that in view of the fact that the Secretary is proceeding to carry out the law which is now in force in regard to this matter it is unnecessary for us to pass two resolutions instructing him to do the same thing.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now will the gentleman allow me just a moment?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes the House understands that this is not debatable.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I have done all the debating I care to in regard to it.

The SPEAKER. Then probably the gentleman from Maine will concede that it is not debatable. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is it proposed to print this information? That is all I want to get at. Are we to have the information obtained in that investigation?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. There is no proposition to print anything.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I understand that there is no proposition to do that now, but is the Secretary of the Navy to report to Congress the data which he has?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The Secretary distinctly stated in that letter that as soon as these bids are opened he will transmit a report to Congress.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then it will be printed.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It can be if the House wants to print it.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The Clerk will report the first resolution, and the question is on the motion to lay it on the table.

Resolution 145 was again read.

The question was taken on laying the resolution on the table; and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next resolution.

The Clerk again reported resolution 146.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact the gentleman from Maine——

The SPEAKER. This is not debatable.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I rise to ask unanimous consent for five minutes.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I have demanded the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded, and the question its on laying the resolution on the table.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 91, noes 104.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine, Mr. BOUTELLE, and the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. UNDERWOOD, will take their places as tellers.

The House again divided; and tellers reported—ayes 107, noes 105.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BAILEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, if I can be permitted——

The SPEAKER. But the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BAILEY. We may save time if I can have unanimous consent for a few moments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is desirous of facilitating business.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I wish, Mr. Speaker, the House could be in order.

The SPEAKER. The House will have the kindness to be in order.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, what we desire, and what we desire only, is that the data taken by the board of armor-plate plant commissioners shall be printed. The Secretary of the Navy says that this report with its appendixes has been transmitted to Congress. Now, what the gentleman from Alabama desired to ask of the gentleman from Maine was, if that data taken by this board is embraced in the report of the Secretary of the Navy—that we want to get it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that it is not, because the Secretary of the Navy told me he would not furnish it without a resolution passed by the House.

Mr. BAILEY. That is all I wanted to develop, and that is all we desired to be known.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, is this debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Does the gentleman wish me to reply?

Mr. BAILEY No; I simply wanted to say that if that information was not to be obtained, we will vote against the motion to table.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I want to say that the action of the committee upon this matter was entirely aside from any influence or bias in regard to this question of any nature whatever. So far as we know, the report of the armor board embodies all the report that was made by that board to the Secretary under his orders; but the only reason for our recommending that these two resolutions calling for certain data with respect to a certain locality, certainly a resolution is very unusual in character, and not general, and requiring the Secretary to furnish all information on the subject, the other one apparently of a kindred nature, instructing the Secretary of the Navy to issue a circular to all localities asking them if they had any suggestions to make in this matter, and asking them to set forth the facilities that they could offer.

Now, in view of the fact that the Secretary has already forwarded a report of one armor-plant board, the official board, and has informed the House, through the Speaker, that on the 1st of December, under distinct provision of law passed last year, he had issued advertisement for proposals from everybody and anywhere to furnish land, site, facilities, plants, machinery, etc., and that these bids would be opened on the 29th of January, it did seem to the committee, and it seems to me now, that we can not forward matters or obtain wider information by insisting upon calling upon the Secretary for information he has received, when he assures us—and I have no doubt that he will do what he says—that as soon as the bids are opened on the 29th of January he will submit a full report to Congress on the matter.

Mr. BAILEY. Has he not transmitted a report embracing the data which we desire?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. There is not the slightest basis for that statement or proposition.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. He says he has that information.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The gentleman from Alabama is stating what the Secretary of the Navy told him.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. He says he has that information and will furnish it if Congress calls for it.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If this report that the Secretary makes, after the bids are opened on the 29th of January, fails to furnish any kind or character of information that anybody in this House or the other branch desires, I will bring in a resolution again for the purpose of obtaining that information myself.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I accept the gentleman's proposition and I withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I think it should be printed now to aid in securing bids.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays having been ordered by the House, they can not be vacated except by unanimous consent.

Mr. BAILEY. Then I ask unanimous consent to vacate the order for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the order for the yeas and nays on this resolution be vacated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The vote on this question being ayes 107, noes 105, the ayes have it, and the resolution is laid on the table.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I demand the regular order.

REPRINT.

Mr. BARLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a reprint be ordered of the bill (H. R. 6894) to provide rules and regulations governing the importation of trees, plants, shrubs, vines, grafts, cuttings, and buds, commonly known as nursery stock, and fruits into the United States, and rules and regulations for the inspection of trees, plants, shrubs, vines, grafts, cuttings, and buds, commonly known as nursery stock, grown within the United States, which become subjects of interstate commerce or exportation.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

CONVEYANCE OF LAND TO JOHN H. GAUSE AND OTHERS.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, this being the day set apart for District business, I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 5526) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to convey a certain lot in the District of Columbia to John H. Gause and others.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant and convey by quitclaim deed to the said John H. Gause and Charles E. Gause, of the city of Washington, as tenants in common, their heirs and assigns, all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to a certain lot of land in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, known upon the plat or plan of said city as lot No. 10, in square No. 1041. This act shall have the effect only of a quitclaim of all the right, title, and interest of the United States therein, but shall not affect an adverse title to said land, if any, nor create any liability on the part of the United States, nor operate to discharge any taxes or assessments levied thereon by the District of Columbia; but the deed shall not be delivered until satisfactory proof has been made that all taxes and assessments, both general and special, levied on said lot by the District of Columbia, have been paid.

The SPEAKER. This bill being in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, its consideration in the House requires unanimous consent. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is to transfer to the individuals named in it the rights of the United States in and to a certain lot in the District of Columbia, which for a better description I may say is located near the navy-yard. The Committee on the District of Columbia carefully considered the matter, and occupied some two weeks' time in obtaining the necessary data to enable them to act intelligently on this question, and they unanimously recommend the bill with a certain amendment for the further protection of the rights of the United States.

It seems that in 1794 the United States was the owner of this lot in question, and there seems to have been no controversy about the property until 1836. In 1794 the United States was the owner in fee of this lot, and sold it to an individual by the name of Greenleaf. We find no further reference in the records until 1836, when about that time an action was commenced in the courts of chancery for the purpose of settling title to all the property in a certain block or lot, as it was then called, and this lot in question was involved in it. At that time the decree went upon a stipulation, and it provided that certain parties should be made parties complainant and certain other parties should be dropped out as defendants. And the decree further provided that the title to the entire block, including this lot, should be awarded to the United States, but for what reason we are unable to learn, as the records do not disclose whether the United States received a consideration for it or for what reason the title in the purchaser was divested and returned to the United States Government.

But we do find that in 1837 this identical lot was assessed to individuals, and has been annually assessed to individuals from that time to the present day. The United States never asserted any claim to this property. Three or four years ago the beneficiaries in the bill bought this lot in issue, at the time believing that the title of the United States was a tax title. After they bought it they were advised that the United States by its decree was the owner of the lot in question, and from that time down to the present day they have not paid taxes, awaiting the action of Congress to settle this question. They have paid taxes on this property, except for the years mentioned, since 1837, and the committee felt that it was only just that these parties should be awarded the title to this lot upon condition that they pay the remaining taxes. The District of Columbia has received from the owners of the property a sum far in excess of the value of the lot.

I do not know that I can add anything to the statement; the report is full upon the question, and the committee and the attorney for the District have recommended it as an equitable and just measure. Inasmuch as the property has been sold twice by the District of Columbia for taxes, and the present owners claim their rights under the tax title, the committee felt that it was just that the United States should quitclaim their title upon the payment of these taxes.

Mr. DOCKERY. I should like to ask the gentleman the value of the property involved?

Mr. JENKINS. It is less than $1,000; it is a matter of small value, but a just one.

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman to say that the title to the property was taken back by the United States in 1836?

Mr. JENKINS. No; there was an equitable action brought in the court of chancery to settle the title to a large tract of land and this lot was included in it. The title to this lot passed under the decree to the District of Columbia, but the United States did not claim title to it, and never has. Since that time the District of Columbia has been assessing the property, not as the property of the United States, but as the property of individuals. The United States never asserted any claim to it.

Mr. RIDGELY. By what authority could the District of Columbia assess taxes upon property which they owned themselves?

Mr. JENKINS. It was assessed and sold by mistake; they seem to have proceeded upon the theory that individuals owned the property.

Mr. RIDGELY. Can you tell us the dimensions of this piece of ground?

Mr. JENKINS. I can not; perhaps the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] may be able to state.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No; I am not able to give the dimensions.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand the gentleman from Wisconsin to say that this is only a small piece of land. I would like to ask the gentleman if the United States now owns the rest of the block?

Mr. JENKINS. No; the title to that passed to other individuals long ago.

Mr. PAYNE. So that there is now only this small lot involved in this bill?

Mr. JENKINS. That is all.

Mr. RIDGELY. Can not the gentleman approximate somewhere near the amount of land included in the lot?

Mr. JENKINS. It is very small. They have paid on it since 1837 more than $1,000 in taxes—more than the value of the lot.

Mr. RIDGELY. Is there an acre in it?

Mr. JENKINS. Oh, no; less than one-eighth of an acre. Now, unless there is some other question that some gentleman wishes to ask, I will ask for a vote on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

TAXES AND TAX SALES IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up for immediate consideration the bill (H. R. 2283) in relation to taxes and tax sales in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the assessor of the District of Columbia shall prepare a list of all taxes on real property in said District subject to taxation on which said taxes are levied and in arrears on the 1st day of July of each year hereafter; and the Commissioners of said District are hereby authorized and directed to appoint a sufficient clerical force to prepare said list and perform such other duties as may be assigned to them by the assessor. And the Commissioners of said District shall fix date of sale and publish the said list, with notice of sale, in a pamphlet, of which not less than 2,000 copies shall be printed for distribution to taxpayers applying therefor. Said Commissioners shall, on the third Tuesday in March of each year hereafter, give notice, which shall contain the name of each and every person in which each piece of property is assessed, together with the amount of tax against each, by advertising twice a week for three successive weeks in the regular issue of two or more daily newspapers published in said District, that said pamphlet has been printed, and that a copy thereof will be delivered to any taxpayer applying therefor at the office of the collector of taxes of said District; and if the taxes due, together with the penalties and costs that may have accrued thereon, shall not be paid prior to the day fixed for sale, the property will be sold, under the direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, at public auction at the office of the said collector of taxes, commencing at least three weeks after the first publication of said notice and continuing on each following day, Sundays and legal holidays excepted, until all said delinquent property is sold. A description sufficient to identify the property shall be considered a proper description: Provided, however, That property which has once been advertised and sold for nonpayment of taxes shall not be again advertised for the same tax.

SEC. 2. That upon the day specified aforesaid the Commissioners shall proceed to sell or cause to be sold any and all property upon which such taxes remain unpaid, and continue to sell the same every secular day until all the real property as aforesaid shall have been brought to auction and sold. In case no other person bids the amount due on any lot the said collector of taxes shall bid the amount due on the same and purchase it for the District.

SEC. 3. That every purchaser other than the District, at any sale of property sold as aforesaid, shall pay the amount of his bid to the collector of taxes within five days after the last day of sale. If any such purchaser shall not have paid his bid, or the same shall not have been collected from him within the time above mentioned, the Commissioners may set aside the sale for which the bid was made, and all the rights of the purchaser under such bid shall thereby be extinguished. Immediately after the close of the sale, upon payment of the purchase money, the said collector of taxes shall issue to the purchaser a certificate of sale, and if the property shall not be redeemed by the owner or owners thereof within two years from the last day of sale, by payment to the collector of taxes of said District, for the use of the legal holder of the certificate, the amount for which it was sold at such sale and 15 per cent per annum thereon, a deed shall be given by the Commissioners of the District, or their successors in office, to the purchaser at such tax sale, his heirs or devisees, or to the assignee of such certificates, which deed shall be admitted and held to be prima facie evidence of a good and perfect title, in fee simple, to any property bought at said sale herein authorized: Provided, That no deed shall be issued until all taxes and assessments appearing upon the tax books against the property are paid, with penalties, interests, and costs, including taxes for the years for which the District purchased the property at tax sale: Provided, That no property advertised as aforesaid shall be sold upon any bid not sufficient to meet the amount of tax, penalty, and costs; but in case the highest bid upon any property is not sufficient to meet the taxes, penalties, and costs thereon said property shall thereupon be bid off by the said collector of taxes, in the name of the District of Columbia; but the property so bid off shall not be exempted from assessment and taxation, but shall be assessed and taxed as other property; and if within two years thereafter such property is not redeemed by the owner or owners thereof, or their legal representatives, by the payment of the taxes, penalties, and costs due at the time of the sale, and that may have accrued after that date, and 10 per cent per annum thereon, or if any property, two years after having been so bid off at any sale in the name of said District, under this or any other law, whether heretofore or hereafter made, is not or has not been so redeemed as aforesaid (unless it shall be shown that the sale for taxes was irregular and void), then the Commissioners of the District, or their successors, shall, in the name of and on behalf of the District of Columbia, sell said property at public or private sale and issue to any purchaser of such property a deed, which deed shall have the same force and effect as the deed hereinbefore provided for in this section for property sold at the regular annual sale: Provided, however, That no such deed shall be issued until all assessments, taxes, costs, and charges due the District, of whatsoever nature, shall have been paid in full, and that before the deed is issued, as hereinbefore mentioned, notice shall be published three times in two daily newspapers published in the District that a deed has been applied for, and that unless the owner comes forward within thirty days from date of said notice and pays all arrears of taxes, general and special, then due, the deed will be issued in accordance with the provisions of this act: And provided also, That minors or other persons under legal disability be allowed one year after attaining full age, or after the removal of such legal disability, to redeem the property so sold, or of which the title has, as aforesaid, become vested in the District of Columbia, from the purchaser or purchasers, his, her, or their assigns, or from the District of Columbia, on payment of the amount of purchase money so paid therefor, with 10 per cent per annum interest thereon, as aforesaid, together with all taxes and assessments that have been paid thereon by the purchaser or his assigns, between the day of sale and the period of redemption, with 10 per cent per annum interest on the amount of such taxes and assessments: Provided, however, That failure on the part of the District, from any cause whatsoever, to enforce the liens acquired aforesaid shall not release the property from any tax whatsoever that may be due the District.

SEC. 4. That the owner or authorized agent of the owner of any property sold as aforesaid, or any other person having an interest therein at the time of sale, may redeem the same from such sale at any time within two years after the last day of sale by paying to the collector of taxes, for the use of the purchaser, his heirs and assigns, the sum mentioned in the certificate of sale therefor, with interest thereon at the rate of 15 per cent per annum after the date of such certificate of sale, together with any tax or assessment which the holder of said certificate shall have paid between the days of sale and redemption, with interest on the same at the rate of 10 per cent per annum.

SEC. 5. That the collector of taxes shall, within twenty days after the last day of the sale hereinbefore provided for as aforesaid, file with the recorder of deeds a written report, in which he shall give a statement of the property sold, other than that sold to the District of Columbia, to whom it was assessed, the taxes due, to whom sold, the amount paid, the date of sale, the cost thereof, and the surplus, if any. Any surplus remaining after the collection of taxes, penalties, and costs on any real estate shall be collected as provided in sections 161 and 162, chapter 6, of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia, and shall be deposited by the collector of taxes to the credit of the surplus fund, to be paid to the owner or owners or their legal representatives in the same manner as other payments made by the District.

SEC. 6. That the said Commissioners shall not convey any property sold for taxes if they shall discover, before the conveyance, that the sale was for any cause invalid and ineffectual to give title to the property sold; but they shall cancel the sale and cause the purchase money to be refunded to the purchaser, his representatives or assigns.

SEC. 7. That the expenses of advertising and the printing of said pamphlet shall be paid by a charge of $1.20 for each lot or piece of property advertised. A sum sufficient to pay the salaries of two clerks, at the rate of $1,200 per annum each, up to and including the year ending June 30, 1899, is hereby appropriated, payable in equal proportions out of the Treasury of the United States and the revenues of the District of Columbia, to be immediately available; and the Commissioners of said District shall hereafter, in their annual estimates, include all necessary provisions to carry out the purposes of this act.

SEC. 8. That this act shall take effect from and after its passage; and all acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I understand this is a bill in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and I suggest that it be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. SHERMAN in the chair).

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House bill No. 2283, in relation to taxes and tax sales in the District of Columbia.

The amendments reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia were read, as follows:

Amend section 3, lines 22, 23, 24, and 25, by striking out all after the word "authorized," in line 22, all of line 23, and all of line 24, and the words "date of sale," in the first part of line 25.

Amend section 3 by striking out all after the word "deed," in line 51, and all of lines 52, 53, and 54, down to and including the words "hereinafter provided," in line 54, being the words "which shall have the effect to convey and vest in such purchaser all the right, title, and estate of all persons whatsoever claiming an interest in such property, except as hereinafter provided," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Which deed shall have the same force and effect as the deed hereinbefore provided for in this section for property sold at the regular annual sale."

Amend section 7 by striking out the word "eight" where it occurs after the word "ninety," and insert in lieu thereof the word "nine;" so that the same will read "ninety-nine" instead of "ninety-eight."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendments as read and reporting them to the House with a favorable recommendation. If there be no objection, the question will be put on the amendments all together.

The question being put, the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. JENKINS. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] wishes to raise some question with reference to an amendment which he thinks proper——

Mr. HEPBURN. I was seeking the attention of the Chair while the question was being put just now on agreeing to the amendments. One at least of those amendments ought, I think, to have separate consideration. In my judgment, that amendment destroys the whole value of the bill. I refer to the amendment on page 4, beginning at line 22.

Mr. DOCKERY. In view of the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], I ask that the bill be read by paragraphs, under the rule, for amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I have hastily glanced at the bill, and in connection with the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa, I wish to call attention to section 6. That, it seems to me, is a remarkable section to be put in any bill. If I understand the scope of that section, a man can go and buy property at a tax sale, and when there has been a failure to redeem the property by the payment of the proper penalties within the proper time, he can, after the deed is made out, decline it and ask to have his money returned because of some defect which he alleges.

Mr. JENKINS. I think the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is not correct. I believe it is based on a misapprehension of the present law on this subject. The section referred to by the gentleman has relation to a case where the Commissioners are compelled to buy in property for the District of Columbia because there are no other bidders and then at some time or other are forced to sell it. Now, when they proceed to make sale of this property which they have purchased at a tax sale, if it is discovered that the Commissioners or the District of Columbia have no good title, then the sale can be canceled and the property resold. I do not think the section has relation to regular sales to some outsider.

Mr. CANNON. If the bill is to be read by sections for amendment, that amendment can be considered when we reach it.

Mr. JENKINS. Perhaps, under the circumstances, it will be best that the bill be read by paragraphs, subject to amendment. I will ask that that course be taken.

Mr. HEPBURN. That will vacate the action agreeing to these amendments in gross.

The CHAIRMAN. Not necessarily. If the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] desires it, the Chair will put the question on vacating by unanimous consent the action by which the agreements were agreed to.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the action of the Committee of the Whole in agreeing to the amendments be vacated. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The first section of the bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the assessor of the District of Columbia shall prepare a list of all taxes on real property in said District subject to taxation on which said taxes are levied and in arrears on the 1st day of July of each year hereafter; and the Commissioners of said District are hereby authorized and directed to appoint a sufficient clerical force to prepare said list and perform such other duties as may be assigned to them by the assessor. And the Commissioners of said District shall fix date of sale and publish the said list, with notice of sale, in a pamphlet, of which not less than 2,000 copies shall be printed for distribution to taxpayers applying therefor. Said Commissioners shall, on the third Tuesday in March of each year hereafter, give notice, which shall contain the name of each and every person in which each piece of property is assessed, together with the amount of tax against each, by advertising twice a week for three successive weeks in the regular issue of two or more daily newspapers published in said District that said pamphlet has been printed, and that a copy thereof will be delivered to any taxpayer applying therefor at the office of the collector of taxes of said District; and if the taxes due, together with the penalties and costs that may have accrued thereon, shall not be paid prior to the day fixed for sale, the property will be sold, under the direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, at public auction at the office of the said collector of taxes, commencing at least three weeks after the first publication of said notice and continuing on each following day, Sundays and legal holidays excepted, until all said delinquent property is sold. A description sufficient to identify the property shall be considered a proper description: Provided, however, That property which has once been advertised and sold for nonpayment of taxes shall not be again advertised for the same tax.

Mr. HEPBURN. I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill, What was the purpose of the committee in imposing the duty of preparing the delinquent tax list on the assessor of the District? He is not the custodian of such information, I believe. Why not impose this duty on the collector of taxes? He has the books; he knows who have paid their taxes and who have not. Why should the assessor be charged with this duty?

Mr. JENKINS. This whole section is practically the existing law to-day in this District. The only difference between the existing law and this provision is that this specially directs the Commissioners to employ sufficient clerical force to prepare the list. This provision has been recommended by the Commissioners, by the attorney of the District, and by all gentlemen interested in this question of assessment and collection of taxes. And, due publicity having been given to the matter, no one came before the committee to interpose any objection whatever. This is the only change from the present law.

Mr. KING. Allow me to add——

Mr. JENKINS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KING. Allow me to state that according to the custom in this District, as elsewhere, the duties of the collector, as I am advised, are restricted primarily to his services for the current year, so that he is not conversant with the records of the preceding year. But the assessor, when he proceeds to make an assessment for the present year, always, or usually at least, examines the records of the preceding year, and he is therefore more familiar with such records than the collector himself could possibly be.

Mr. HEPBURN. But is not the collector the custodian of the records—the tax records?

Mr. KING. As I understand it, these records are made in duplicate, and the collector has the custody of one set of the records, and on that record the collections for that year are made.

A MEMBER. Mr. Chairman, let us have order on the floor. It is impossible to understand what is going on.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will please resume their seats.

Mr. HEPBURN. But who would make collections, or how would collections be made, of unpaid taxes for the preceding year, supposing they are delinquent?

Mr. KING. The collector would simply consult the records for the preceding year.

Mr. HEPBURN. Of which he has the custody?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS. That is the existing law.

Mr. BELFORD. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill a question.

Mr. JENKINS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BELFORD. I find in this bill a provision to the effect that there shall be no second sale of property for the same taxes. Now, assume that there is a default in payment for the property by the first bidder, what provision has been made in the bill for a new sale under such conditions?

Mr. JENKINS. That is provided for by the existing law, and there is no attempt in this bill to change it. It is amply provided for as the law now stands, and we have not sought to make any change in that provision.

Mr. BELFORD. What is the existing law?

Mr. JENKINS. That if it is not struck off it shall be reported as delinquent.

Mr. BELFORD. But that is inconsistent with the provisions you make, is it not?

Mr. JENKINS. Not at all. The main features of the bill are now the existing law, I will state to the gentleman. This provision and others in the bill which are inserted are made for the purpose of harmonizing the law in all of its parts.

Mr. MITCHELL. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. JENKINS. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. You provide in the last clause of the bill that this act shall take effect from and after its passage, and then go on to provide "that all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with it shall be repealed." Would not that interfere with the provisions of existing law?

Mr. JENKINS. No; because those laws are reproduced in this bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment to the first paragraph of the bill.

I move to strike out all after the word "hereafter," in line 6, up to and including the word "assessor," in line 10, as follows:

And the Commissioners of said District are hereby authorized and directed to appoint a sufficient clerical force to prepare said list, and perform such other duties as may be assigned to them by the assessor.

Now, sir, I object to that provision because, in the first place, it carries an indefinite appropriation. It gives the Commissioners authority to appoint a clerical force, and the only limitation upon it is their judgment in respect to what may be considered a "sufficient force."

It also provides that they shall perform such duties as may be assigned to them by the assessor.

Now, I suggest to the eminent gentleman in charge of this bill that the custom has been to authorize the performance of certain duties under the law, and then it becomes the duty of the proper committees of the House having the matter in charge to provide the necessary appropriation for their compensation. I hope the gentleman will consent to allow that to go out, because it is in conflict with the usual action heretofore taken.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman, I will state that inasmuch as we have conferred with the officials of the District at great length, and have endeavored to prepare a bill that is in the interest of economy in the public service here, and after having had a talk with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] and the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT], on the Appropriations Committee, I appreciate that perhaps there is much force in what they say, and the Committee on the District of Columbia are perfectly willing to accord to the Committee on Appropriations full authority over the matter to which the gentleman refers. As we are anxious to get through another part of the bill, which is more important—the main object of the bill—and very much more important to the District than the mere increase in the clerical force if that should follow under the bill, I will not for my part make any objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman, before passing from this point, I wish to make a single suggestion.

In the first section of the bill, in line 10, the language is "that the Commissioners of said District shall fix the date of sale, and publish the said list with notice of sale in a pamphlet, of which not less than 2,000 copies shall be printed for distribution to taxpayers applying therefor," etc.

It then goes on to provide that there shall be a list of the property prepared, which shall be published in the newspapers.

That is done now, Mr. Chairman. Every piece of property on which the taxes are delinquent is described in the pamphlet to which reference is made, and is published at large expense in the District newspapers.

Mr. JENKINS. If the gentleman from Vermont will yield just one moment, I should like to ask him if it is not a fact that, instead of being a tax upon the District of Columbia, it is a tax upon the property, and if the law does not so provide?

Mr. GROUT. Oh, it would be a tax on the property if the taxes were paid, but so many fail to pay the taxes——

Mr. JENKINS. But the District gets it back.

Mr. GROUT. So many people fail to pay the taxes that in those cases it is a tax upon the Government and not upon the persons who own the property, as stated in the report of the assessors. Well, now, the point I make is that it does not seem to be necessary to have a pamphlet describing specifically each piece of property on which taxes are due, and at the same time advertise the same property in the newspapers.

This section provides that notice shall be given in the newspapers of the publication of these pamphlets. That is well, so that those who desire them may apply and see whether their taxes are unpaid or not, or whether there is property in which they are interested on which the taxes have not been paid by others upon whom they are depending; but it does not seem to be necessary to put the Government to the expense of preparing a pamphlet and also to the expense of advertising each piece of property in the newspapers. As I understand it, the present law does not require this pamphlet. The gentleman in charge of the bill seems to understand that it does, but is not quite certain. I do not wish to be positive myself, but my understanding is that the present law does not call for the publication of these pamphlets.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will find out.

Mr. GROUT. But if the newspaper were substituted for the pamphlet, we certainly do not need both. I am very clearly of the opinion that the pamphlet would be much less expensive, and perhaps just as effectual a way to make the advertisement, because notice would be given in the papers of the existence of the pamphlet, so everyone who was at all interested or who suspected he might be interested could apply for the pamphlet and obtain the desired information.

Mr. Chairman, I will formulate an amendment——

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to pass over that section for a moment, and will state that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] has gone to examine the law, in order to be more certain whether these pamphlets are now required or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS] asks unanimous consent to pass over section 1 temporarily. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read sections 2 and 3.

The Committee on the District of Columbia proposed the following amendments to section 3:

On page 4, line 2, after the word "authorized," strike out the following: ", and all proceedings prior to said deed shall be held to have been regular, and no deed shall be set aside except on proof of fraud or that no tax was due at the date of sale."

On page 5, after the word "deed," in line 51, strike out the following: "Which shall have the effect to convey and vest in such purchaser all the right, title, and estate of all persons whomsoever claiming an interest in said property, except as hereinafter provided:" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Which deed shall have the same force and effect as the deed hereinbefore provided for in this section for property sold at the regular annual sale."

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There are two committee amendments to be acted upon first.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have some reason assigned by the committee, if the gentleman in charge of the bill pleases, as to the necessity or propriety of the first committee amendment, on page 4. It occurs to me that the language sought to be stricken out is the most valuable part of this bill. It is about the only thing that will make it really effective and compel the payment of taxes in this District.

Mr. JENKINS. I want to say to the gentleman from Iowa that I differ with him entirely about the availability and value of the language that is proposed to be stricken out. It does not aid in the collection of taxes at all, and it seems to me that the amendment recommended by the committee, which was suggested by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, is the proper one.

I do not think the law should provide that the deed shall be conclusive evidence that everything that the law requires has been done and deprive a man of his day in court and of his opportunity to show that the law has not been complied with. As recommended by the committee, it means, practically, that the proceedings shall be held to be prima facie regular. This bill, without the amendment, undertakes to say that all proceedings prior to the deed shall be held to be regular, which is absolutely unfair. If the officers of the District do not see fit to comply with the law or faithfully to discharge their duty, the property owner ought to have the right to take advantage of that fact.

The provision which is sought to be stricken out certainly does not aid in the collection of taxes. I doubted whether such a law could be upheld, and I went this morning and very carefully examined all the law upon the subject, and I found that every time the matter has been brought to the attention of Congress, for over twenty-five years last past, the change suggested by the committee has been made. Formerly it was held that the deed should be conclusive evidence of the regularity of all proceedings prior to the giving of that deed, but upon recommendations made from time to time that law was changed so as to practically provide that the deed should only be prima facie evidence of the regularity of the proceedings prior to the issuance of the deed. Now, I simply say to the gentleman that those most interested in this question have suggested the amendment. The committee have no pride with reference to it, but after hearing the Commissioners by letter, and the assessor in person, and the attorney who wrote to the committee with reference to it, the committee have seen fit to recommend this amendment. That is about all I can say to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HEPBURN. The committee put in the amendment at the suggestion of the Commissioners?

Mr. JENKINS. That amendment is recommended by the Commissioners, and if the gentleman from Iowa will look at the report, he will find that it is suggested to the committee in their letter.

Mr. HEPBURN. My observation has been, Mr. Chairman, that no tax deed is of any value unless the parties taking it are concluded as to these matters preliminary to the sale. I have had some experience as a practicing attorney. The law upon the subject that I am most familiar with is the present law of the State of my residence, which is the same as that provision in the bill without the amendment. It has worked well in that State for thirty years. It has resulted in a diminution of tax sales and an increase in the collection of taxes. I think that a man cares but little for these minor penalties; but it is the fear of the loss of the title that compels prompt payment of taxes. Now, you see what an infinite variety of questions may be raised after the purchaser has got his deed if this language is stricken out of the law.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman from Iowa permit one question?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. Does the law in your State make it conclusive or merely prima facie?

Mr. HEPBURN. It makes it conclusive. It does not allow a contest on any other question but that the tax was due.

Mr. KING. Does the gentleman think that where an effort was made to deprive a man of title to real estate a law should be passed of the character that he describes—where he may be deprived of title without strict compliance with all the provisions of the statute? And is it not in derogation of common law? And where you seek to deprive man of his title to property under a tax law, ought there not to be a strict compliance with all the provisions of the statute?

Mr. HEPBURN. I think there should, and one of the strict compliances with the statute, and the one in which the public are most interested, is the prompt payment of taxes. That is a duty that devolves upon every citizen, and it is his duty to bear his full share. Now, there can be no injustice in this. Every man knows within two years prior to the time that he should perform his duty. Whether he has performed that duty or not, he knows it. If he has any doubt about it, he knows where to find out, and it seems to me not asking too much of him that he should take that trouble upon himself, and that when he has been derelict he shall not be permitted to say that he shall escape the consequence of his own negligence by suggesting that in some immaterial matter some other man has made a mistake, and thus avoid his own dereliction of duty. Every question that is conceivable may be contested in this class of litigation without you have a provision like that in this bill.

No tax deed is worth the paper it is written upon without you have such a provision in this bill; and I undertake to say that no attorney at law knows of an instance where there has been a successful foreclosure and holding of a tax title where there has not been a similar provision to that.

Mr. HUNTER. I agree with the gentleman. Whilst I agree with his argument very fully, I will ask him if it is not also true that a large number of people rely upon these technicalities, and expect to depend upon them instead of paying their taxes themselves?

Mr. HEPBURN. I think so.

Mr. HUNTER. That is my experience in Illinois.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I think my learned friend from Iowa is mistaken, and I think he is contending for a very unjust rule of law. I for one see no objection to this amendment, and answering him for the committee, I can say that we have no pride of opinion concerning it, but we simply considered this question in the presence of the officers of the District of Columbia in reference to this matter, and are following their judgment about it. I might say, in addition to that, that the law requiring an individual to pay his taxes is for the protection of the Government; but the law regulating the sale of a man's property is in the interest of the individual. Now, the law points out very clearly each successive step that this District may take for the purpose of taking a man's property if he does not pay his taxes, and this is for the protection of the individual.

Now, my friend from Iowa will have us understand that it is not necessary for officers of this District to conform to the law; they may blindly omit to follow any direction of this law whatever, in order to take a man's property. In other words, they may never have any assessments, may never have made any attempt on the part of the officers to collect taxes on this property, before giving the deed; and, without giving warning to the owner that so much taxes on this particular property are due, and "if you do not pay it your property shall be sold," and then a deed shall be conclusive evidence of the regularity of all proceedings before the giving of the deed. This is very fair to the man who owns the property, and he is given information of the amount that it is to be taxed. It simply says, in the event of the nonpayment of his tax, to the party who purchases it, you comply with the law step by step and if you do you can take his property, and if you do not you can not.

The deed is prima facie evidence of the regularity of all proceedings up to the issuing of that deed, and all he has got to do is to introduce his deed and rest, and the burden rests upon the man claiming against the deed to show that the law has not been sufficiently complied with. That is all there is about it. I do not know the law of the State of Iowa. All I know is the law in my own State and that I am charged with this matter as a representative duty. I want to say to the gentleman from Iowa that if that is the law of Iowa it is not the law here, and it ought not to be the law of any land. The taxpayer ought to have some rights as well as the Government, and this is introduced in the interest of the taxpayer. All the law says is, if the owner does not pay his taxes the Government can take it if they only proceed according to due course of law.

Mr. COWHERD. Can I make a suggestion?

Mr. JENKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman from Iowa seems to think, in response to a question of the gentleman from Illinois, that a man would prefer to fight the case instead of paying the tax. As a matter of fact, the tax is almost invariably on lots sold for taxes, and amounts to a very small sum. Fighting a case in court is usually a great burden, and, as a matter of fact, it is protection of the property from the land shark, as the gentleman from Wisconsin has suggested, that needs to be looked after, as well as protection to the Government. It is almost invariably true that any person who holds a title to land is willing and glad to pay the penalty in order to have the title cleared up, while the holder of the title, if it can be bought for a small sum, if he can make it absolute and get a deed to protect it in all ways, will hold on to his property and get it for a small percentage of its worth. That is the ordinary experience.

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, Mr. Chairman, let us take one of these large buildings here in the city as an illustration. Suppose, now, the owner omits to pay his tax. He knows the tax is due, he knows it is delinquent, he knows the time of the tax sale, but suppose there is an error in the description of his property; he lets it go one or two years. Can he not recover that property? Can he not avoid the penalties? Can he not avoid the delinquent interest? In the meantime another has bid on his land.

Mr. JENKINS. If the gentleman from Iowa will permit me, the laws of the District of Columbia anticipate all that and provide against any such thing.

Mr. HEPBURN. In what way?

Mr. JENKINS. By providing that the officers of the District can resell the property.

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes; but here is a man who has a deed, a man who has got his deed, who has paid his subsequent taxes, and that deed is set aside because of informality in the original description, although in fact that delinquent has known all along of the delinquency. Every fact he has actual knowledge of. But you are defeating the whole process of this effort to collect and enforce collection and to enforce prompt payment by striking out this valuable provision in the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate upon this section has expired, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment recommended by the committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate is exhausted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I want to move a further amendment. I propose to add, after the word "extinguish," in the eighth line, section 3, the following:

And the said collector of taxes shall be held to have bid the amount due on the same and to purchase it for the District.

That is the same language used in the preceding section in case there was no bid.

Mr. JENKINS. We make no question about that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Section 4 was read.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I move that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with. The most of it is existing law, and any gentleman can offer any amendment that he wishes.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask if the bill will be open to amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be subject to amendments.

Mr. HEPBURN. I was requested by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] to move to strike out all of section 7 after the word "advertised," in line 3.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 7 after the word "advertised," in line 3.

Mr. DOCKERY. I want to state briefly the reason for that. If this bill should pass, proper provision will be made for the United States clerical force in the usual appropriation bills.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that since we passed over section 1 the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] has examined the law and finds it to be as I stated this morning, that it is the present existing law on the subject. The law provides that "the property shall be described in the pamphlets as well as in the newspapers."

Mr. DOCKERY. That was a controversy between the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS] and the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT].

Mr. JENKINS. Well, no point is made about it, because it is the existing law and there will be no change in the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman, I learn, on examination, that the law does provide for a pamphlet as well as advertisements in the paper. This year we have reported in the District appropriation bill $7,000 for this advertising, and it seems to me that that is an expense altogether too large for the object attained, and that the book ought to carry sufficient notice. It would undoubtedly have to be printed in a larger edition than the 3,000 copies. Perhaps, however, that might be sufficient if notice was given in the paper of the existence of such a book. I propose this amendment:

On page 2 strike out all of line 16 after the word "notice," all of line 17, all of line 18, all of line 19, and all of line 20.

Mr. JENKINS. If the words indicated in the gentleman's amendment be stricken from the bill, the existing law will not be changed.

Mr. GROUT. But this bill, as I understand, when it becomes law, will be accepted as containing the whole law on the subject without reference to the former enactment. The present law would be repealed, and if not so expressed in this act, it would at least be so by implication.

Mr. JENKINS. If the gentleman will look at the last section of this bill he will find that he is mistaken. That section simply repeals the existing law so far as inconsistent with this bill. The amendment of the gentleman from Vermont would introduce confusion where there ought to be certainty.

The provision of the bill will involve no expense whatever to the District. This expense is all charged up to the property, and it is a very small amount at any rate. The pamphlet referred to is published for the convenience of persons who wish to engage in this kind of business. While the provision may appear to be a harsh one, it is largely in the interest of the Commissioners, because it affords them a ready revenue. This publication is made in the newspapers in the interest of those who have to pay taxes; but it is not generally published in any other way. The Commissioners, however, recommend this as a business proposition, and we did not feel inclined to object to it. If, however, the provision be stricken from the bill, it will not affect the present law.

Mr. GROUT. The gentleman says that the expense is all charged up to the property. This would appear not to be the fact, for, as I have already said, we appropriate $7,000 to cover these expenses. The amendment proposed by me will leave the law to read thus:

Said Commissioners shall, on the third Tuesday of March of each year hereafter, give notice that said pamphlet has been printed, and that a copy thereof will be delivered to any taxpayer, etc.

Mr. JENKINS. Very well, for the sake of expediting the passage of the bill we will make no point against the amendment.

Mr. GREENE. As I understand, if these words be stricken out no method will be provided by which notice shall be given.

Mr. JENKINS. None at all.

Mr. GREENE. If we leave in line 20 the section would provide that the Commissioners "shall give notice in two or more daily newspapers published in said District that said pamphlet has been printed." By retaining line 20 and inserting at the beginning of it the word "in," it seems to me the object of the gentleman from Vermont would be accomplished.

Mr. GROUT. I accept the suggestion of the gentleman; it will certainly make it plainer to insert the word "in" as he suggests and to leave in line 20.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's amendment will be read as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, beginning in line 16, strike out the words "which shall contain the name of each and every person in which each piece of property is assessed, together with the amount of tax against each, by advertising twice a week for three successive weeks in the regular issue of."

At the beginning of line 20 insert the word "in;" so as to read:

"Give notice in two or more daily newspapers published in said District."

Mr. JENKINS. If this amendment be adopted, it will make the law absolutely confusing, so that the officers can not operate under it.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. GROUT was rejected.

Mr. JENKINS. I move that the committee rise and report the bill, with the amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHERMAN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2283) in relation to taxes and tax sales in the District of Columbia, and had directed him to report the same back with amendments and with the recommendation that it be passed as amended.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed

On motion of Mr. JENKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PROTECTION OF GAME IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I now call up for immediate consideration the bill (H. R. 2524) for the preservation of game and for the prevention of its sale during certain closed seasons.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no person shall kill, expose for sale, or have in his or her possession, either dead or alive, any partridge, otherwise quail, between the 1st day of February and the 1st day of November; nor kill, expose for sale, or have in his or her possession, either dead or alive, any woodcock, between the 15th day of January and the 15th day of July; nor kill, expose for sale, or have in his or her possession, either dead or alive, any prairie chicken, otherwise pinnated grouse, between the 1st day of February and the 1st day of September; nor kill, expose for sale, or have in his or her possession, either dead or alive, between the 1st day of February and the 1st day of November; nor kill, expose for sale, or have in his or her possession, either dead or alive, any snipe or plover, between the 1st day of May and the 1st day of September; nor kill, expose for sale, or have in his or her possession, either dead or alive, any wild duck, wild goose or brant, between the 1st day of May and the 1st day of September; nor kill, expose for sale, or have in his or her possession, either dead or alive, any water rail or ortolan, reed bird or rice bird, between the 1st day of February and the 1st day of September, under a penalty of $5 for each bird so killed, exposed for sale, or in possession, and in default thereof to be imprisoned in the workhouse for a period not exceeding thirty days.

SEC. 2. That no person shall expose for sale or have in his or her possession any deer meat or venison, between the 1st day of January and the 1st day of September, under a penalty of $10 for such exposure for sale or having in possession, and the forfeiture of all such deer meat or venison to the officer making the arrest, who shall destroy the same; and, in default of fine, to be imprisoned in the workhouse for a period not exceeding sixty days.

SEC. 3. That no person shall expose for sale or have in his or her possession dead, at any time, any turkey buzzard, wren, bluebird, humming bird, blue jay, robin or migratory thrush, wood or song robin, martin, mocking bird, swallow, oriole, red or cardinal bird, catbird, pewit, whip-poor-will, goldfinch, sapsucker, hanging bird, woodpecker, blackbird, or other insectivorous bird, save, as hereinafter provided, for scientific purposes, and excepting the English sparrow; not rob the nest of any wild bird of eggs or young or destroy such nest, except in the clearing of lands of trees or brush; nor trap, net, or ensnare any wild bird or water fowl mentioned in this chapter, or have in his possession any trap, snare, net, or illuminating device for the purpose of killing or capturing any wild duck, wild goose, wild brant or bird, under a penalty of $5 for each wild duck, wild goose, wild brant, or bird killed or captured, or bird's nest and eggs destroyed, and, in default, to be imprisoned in the workhouse not exceeding thirty days; and a further penalty of $20 for having in possession any net, trap, snare, or device as heretofore mentioned, and forfeiture of such net, snare, trap, or illuminating device to the District of Columbia, to be treated and considered as other abandoned property coming into the hands of the police; and, in default of payment of fine, to be imprisoned in the workhouse not exceeding ninety days.

SEC. 4. That no person shall kill or shoot at any wild duck, wild goose, brant, or wild bird in the nighttime; nor kill or shoot at any wild duck, wild goose, wild brant, or wild bird with any other firearm, gun, or device than such as are habitually raised at arm's length and fired from the shoulder, under a penalty of $5 for each wild duck, wild goose, wild brant, or wild bird killed, and in default thereof to be imprisoned in the workhouse for a period not exceeding thirty days; and the further penalty of $20 for having any firearm, gun, or device other than the gun habitually used at arm's length in possession for the purpose of violating the provisions of this chapter, and in default to be imprisoned in the workhouse for a period not exceeding ninety days.

SEC. 5. That to carry out the provisions of this chapter any police officer, game warden having police authority, or health officer, in the District of Columbia is authorized and empowered to thoroughly inspect any house, boat, market box, stall, cold storage, or other place of whatever character or kind, where he may believe game, meats, or birds, as heretofore mentioned in this chapter, may be stored or kept; and any proprietor, agent, employee, or other person refusing to permit such inspection shall be deemed guilty of interference with the police, and, upon conviction therefor, be fined not more than $100 nor less than $25, and, in default of such payment, to be imprisoned in the United States jail not exceeding six months.

SEC. 6. That any person who shall knowingly trespass on the lands of another for the purpose of shooting or hunting thereon, after due notice by the owner or occupant of lands, shall be liable to such owner or occupant in exemplary damages to an amount not exceeding $100. That notice shall be given by erecting and maintaining signboards, at least 8 by 12 inches in dimensions, on the borders of the premises, and at least two such signs for every 50 acres; and any person who shall maliciously tear down or in any manner deface or injure any of such signboards shall be liable to a penalty of not less than $5 for each and every signboard so torn down, defaced, or injured; and, in default, to be imprisoned for a period not exceeding thirty days in the workhouse.

SEC. 7. That there shall be no shooting, or having in possession in the open air the implements for shooting, on the first day of the week, called Sunday, and any person violating the provisions of this section shall be liable to a penalty of not more than $20 nor less than $10 for each offense.

SEC. 8. That wherever in this act possession of any birds, fowls, or meats is prohibited, the fact that the said birds, fowls, or meat were killed or captured outside the District of Columbia shall constitute no defense for such possession.

SEC. 9. That any officer or other person securing the conviction of any violator of any of the provisions of this act, in the police court or other court of the District of Columbia, shall receive one-half of any fine which may be imposed and paid for such violation.

SEC. 10. That all acts now in force in the District of Columbia inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill for the protection of birds, preservation of game, and for the prevention of its sale during certain closed seasons in the District of Columbia."

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

Section 1, line 13, after the word "alive," insert "any ruffed grouse, otherwise known as pheasant, between the 26th day of December and the 1st day of November; nor kill, expose for sale, nor have in his or her possession, either dead or alive, any wild turkey between the 26th day of December and the 1st day of November; nor kill, expose for sale, nor have in his or her possession, either dead or alive;" after the word "rabbit" insert "except that species known as the English rabbit or squirrel;" line 19, strike out "April" and insert "May" in lieu thereof; line 21, strike out the second and fourth commas; also the third word "or," and insert after the words "rice bird" the words "or marsh blackbird;" lines 22 and 23, strike out words "first day of September" and insert in lieu thereof the words "twentieth day of August; nor shoot at nor kill the same except on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, between the 21st day of August and the 1st day of February."

Section 3, line 6, after "woodpecker," insert word "crow;" line 7, strike out "as hereinafter provided;" line 8, after word "purposes," insert "upon permit from the executive curator of the National Museum;" also strike out "not" and insert "nor" in lieu thereof.

Section 7, line 3, after "Sunday," insert "except to transport said implements within or without the District of Columbia;" line 5, strike out "not less than $10."

Mr. TERRY. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman in charge of this bill to the fact that the committee seem to have left out one very important bird which ought to be protected, namely, the cuckoo. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. That species is extinct in the District now.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I had the honor to report this bill. It is of the same general character as the bill reported one week ago for the protection of fish in the District of Columbia. It is simply a modification of existing law, embracing such amendments as are deemed necessary to meet the changed conditions, the present law having been enacted twenty years or more ago. The bill is very earnestly supported by the Fish and Game Protection Association of the District of Columbia, composed of 400 or more members. It is recommended by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and has received the unanimous approval of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HUNTER. I wish to ask the gentleman a question with reference to the language of the bill as I find it on page 4, where provision is made as follows:

And a further penalty of $20 for having in possession any net, trap, snare, or device as heretofore mentioned, and forfeiture of such net, snare, trap, or illuminating device to the District of Columbia, to be treated and considered as other abandoned property coming into the hands of the police; and, in default of payment of fine, to be imprisoned in the workhouse not exceeding ninety days.

It does seem to me that that language is so exceedingly broad that after the fishing season, for instance, is closed a person, whose legitimate business was that of a fisherman, found in possession of such articles would be liable to the penalty fixed in the bill. It seems to me that there ought to be some modification of that language, and not embrace persons holding, innocently and legitimately, that class of property, which they hold and use from year to year.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that if he deems it necessary to offer an amendment to that provision we will not object. Any reasonable amendment will be accepted by the committee.

I do not think, however, that the point he makes has any special force, because in the construction of the law by the courts they will consider rather the spirit than the letter. Still no reasonable amendment will be objected to, as we desire to have the most efficient measure that is practicable under the circumstances.

Mr. HUNTER. And the same difficulty applies to firearms in another section of the bill. The same penalty may apply there as for the killing of ducks and geese out of season.

Mr. RAY of New York. There is one suggestion I would like to make to the gentleman in charge of the bill, with his permission—one matter that struck me while it was being read.

As I listened to the bill it seemed to read as providing a penalty against killing or having in possession certain game or birds "within the District of Columbia," or having in possession such birds and game when killed, and yet it may not be an offense to kill such birds or game in the State of Virginia or Maryland adjoining. Why should you place a penalty upon bringing them into the District of Columbia? Is that not rather a rigorous provision of law? Suppose there is no law in Virginia against the killing or having in possession this class of game; yet a man bringing them into the District would be guilty of an offense against this law and be subject to the provisions of the law.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I would suggest to the gentleman from New York, as I have already suggested to the gentleman from Illinois, that the only purpose is to make this provision of law as efficient as possible, and any amendment will be considered which will tend to promote the object for which the bill was drawn. We have no objection to any reasonable amendment.

Mr. RAY of New York. I wished to ascertain from the gentleman if the bill is as broad as I have suggested?

Mr. FLEMING. It is absolutely worse than the gentleman has suggested.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. With the permission of my colleague, I would state that this law conforms practically to the law of the State of Maryland. That State has a county law as well as a State law in reference to the killing of game out of season, and the gentlemen who framed the bill endeavored to conform it as nearly as possible, I think, with the Maryland law, which has, I believe, been shown to be efficient.

Mr. JENKINS. If I may be permitted a moment, it is suggested by a gentleman sitting near me that you can not protect game in the District of Columbia if no protection is afforded in the adjacent States. For that reason the bill has been drawn in this form, because in the judgment of the Commissioners it is necessary to have it as stringent as possible while at the same time as nearly as practicable in accordance with the laws of the adjacent States.

Mr. RAY of New York. But how can you protect game in the District of Columbia unless you could also provide that a man may not shoot it in Virginia or Maryland, just across the line, where there is no law? How are you to prevent him from bringing it here and cooking it?

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. The gentleman from New York understands how difficult it might be under certain circumstances to enforce a law of that sort.

Mr. RAY of New York. That may be, but this seems to be a conspiracy, practically, in favor of the dealers in food in this city to increase the cost of living. I do not know what other purpose it can possibly serve. If you prevent game which has been killed in Virginia or Maryland (and the law does not prohibit the killing) from being brought into the District and sold, I would like to ask what other purpose the bill can have than to enhance the cost of such provisions?

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. With the permission of my friend, the provisions of the bill were thoroughly advertised in the papers. Ample opportunity was given to the citizens of the District of Columbia to examine the matter and object to it if they saw fit.

Now, the fact—and it is quite enough for the committee to know—in respect to the provisions of this bill is that they are approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, by the district attorney, by the Game and Fish Protective Association, composed of some of the best citizens of the District, all of them having urged the passage of the bill.

The amendments suggested here were considered by those gentlemen, and when presented to the committee no member of the committee could see any objection to them, it seeming to be the desire of the people of the District that this proposed legislation should be enacted into law. I will say to my friend that, in my opinion, any amendment such as he suggests would be dangerous, and might destroy the efficiency of the bill.

Mr. SHATTUC. I want to say that this law is just about the same as the laws in the various States. This very issue has been tested recently in a decision by the supreme court of Illinois. Ohio and Illinois have similar provisions. I am quite sure that Texas has it. Arkansas has it. I do not know as to Virginia, but being a sportsman myself, I know that the proposed enactment is similar to the laws of almost every State in the Union. If you cut out that clause, and allow them to bring in game from States where it is legitimate to shoot it at a time when it is illegal to shoot it in other States, you can not, after the game has been brought into the District, separate that which is legitimately killed from that which is not.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. The law is just the same in the neighboring States.

Mr. FLEMING. I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JENKINS. I do.

Mr. FLEMING. Suppose game is legally killed within the time provided by the law of a State, and a hotel keeper or a restauranter in Washington buys that game, it being legal for him to do so in the State in which he buys it, and puts it on cold storage in order to preserve it for a few weeks, to be sold later to his customers in the District. By the provision of this bill he will not even be allowed to serve in his hotel or restaurant a partridge or pheasant, or wild duck, or wild turkey, or anything of that kind that he may have bought legally, that may have been killed legally, and which he has preserved by cold storage.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this bill goes too far. I know that these gentlemen who are fond of hunting, and who look after game, get together sometimes and frame these measures and seek to get us, who are supposed to be men of common sense, to indorse them and vote the measures through, but it does seem to me that this bill is a sort of an outrage not only on every hotel man in the District, and every keeper of a restaurant in the District, but is a sort of an outrage on every man who has to eat in the District.

If a partridge or a wild turkey is legally killed in Georgia and a restaurant keeper or hotel keeper in Washington wants to buy it and put it on cold storage, and then sell it to his customers, why should he not be allowed to do so?

You can not hit upon any dates that will fit every State in the Union. You can kill deer at some periods in Georgia when you can not kill them in some of the Northern States, and vice versa. You may kill partridges in some of the Western States when you can not kill them in other States. Now, when game is legally and properly killed under the law of a State, why should not a hotel keeper or restaurant keeper in the District of Columbia be allowed to bring the game here, put it on cold storage, and sell it out to his customers as occasion demands?

Mr. JENKINS. Will the gentleman from Georgia yield for a question?

Mr. FLEMING. Certainly.

Mr. JENKINS. I want to ask the gentleman from Georgia if any restaurant keeper or hotel keeper in this District has been to the gentleman from Georgia to make any complaint against the provisions of this bill?

Mr. FLEMING. I have no doubt that if you will go and call upon the restaurant keepers and hotel keepers in Washington and ask them if they indorse this bill not one out of a dozen will do so.

Mr. JENKINS. Then why have they not come to the committee and made some complaint?

Mr. FLEMING. They are busy about their own affairs, not supposing that the National Legislature would put such an obnoxious provision upon the statute book.

Mr. JENKINS. If anyone had come to the gentleman from Georgia and he had referred him to the committee, the committee would have given him a hearing.

A MEMBER. There are going to be some amendments to the bill.

Mr. FLEMING. They will have to be quite extensive in order to meet the difficulty.

Mr. HUNTER. I want to offer an amendment to section 3, on page 4, to strike out, after the word "days," in line 19, all of the section down to the word "days," in line 26. That strikes out all of the following:

> And a further penalty of $20 for having in possession any net, trap, snare, or device as heretofore mentioned, and forfeiture of such net, snare, trap, or illuminating device to the District of Columbia, to be treated and considered as other abandoned property coming into the hands of the police; and, in default of payment of fine, to be imprisoned in the workhouse not exceeding ninety days.

Now, what is the provision of this bill? It can have no other effect than to subject to punishment any person having in his possession at any time, whether during the hunting and fishing season or not, the necessary devices, traps, or articles by which he may take game. During the season or after the season he may be arrested, fined, and imprisoned in the workhouse not exceeding ninety days. Now, it does seem to me that entire provision ought to be stricken out, because it attempts to interfere with rights of property that can not be interfered with. It attempts to say a man, after the season has passed, may have his gun or hunting apparatus taken from him and then that they may have to be reproduced at the beginning of the next legal season. This law is so extremely broad upon that particular section that it seems to me that the entire section ought to be stricken out. It would be an injustice to any man who secures this game as a livelihood, and therefore I move to strike out section 3.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, there is no desire on the part of the committee or the distinguished gentlemen suggesting this legislation to impose hardship upon anybody. It is represented to your Committee on the District of Columbia that Washington has been made the storehouse for "pot hunters" throughout the country, and that legislation here is not sufficiently restrictive.

It is represented that very mature deliberation has been given to the subject, and that this proposed bill has been compared carefully with the laws of the adjoining States, and that the majority are fully as rigid in their provisions as this proposed measure. Now, the committee will have no objection whatever to any amendment which does not destroy the true intent of the measure. I do not presume that the committee will object to the amendment offered by my friend. Personally, I see no objection, and am inclined to believe that the committee will accept it.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HOPKINS). The gentleman from Georgia will suspend for a moment. The question is on the adoption of the committee amendment, including the one offered by the gentleman from Illinois. Without objection, the vote will be taken on the committee amendments, including the one of the gentleman from Illinois.

There was no objection.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. FLEMING. Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer an amendment which I think will best come in on section 8. The section reads as follows:

> SEC. 8. That wherever in this act possession of any birds, fowls, or meats is prohibited, the fact that the said birds, fowls, or meat were killed or captured outside the District of Columbia shall constitute no defense for such possession.

I wish to add:

> Provided, That this act shall not apply to any game brought into the District and which has been killed or captured not in violation of the law of the State or Territory where such killing or capturing was done.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Does the gentleman propose a new section?

Mr. FLEMING. I put that in as a proviso to make the law apply or not apply.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Will the gentleman kindly read that again?

Mr. FLEMING (reading)—

Provided, That this act shall not apply to any game brought into the District and which has been killed or captured not in violation of the law of the State or Territory where such killing or capturing was done.

Mr. JENKINS. I would say to the gentleman from Georgia that this amendment is not necessary, for I submit to him that this law is in harmony with the laws of Virginia and Maryland.

Mr. FLEMING. But there are forty-five States.

Mr. JENKINS. The prohibition applies here as well as in those States.

Mr. FLEMING. But bear in mind there are forty-five States in the Union. Venison is shipped here from all over the West and North.

Mr. JENKINS. That is true; but this law is in harmony with the laws of these two States.

Mr. FLEMING. And only, perhaps, with these two.

Mr. JENKINS. I do not think it is in harmony with all legislation of all the States.

Mr. FLEMING. Of course it can not be.

Mr. JENKINS. But it very seriously impairs the usefulness of this bill. Now, I want to say that this bill has been very carefully considered by the committee, and gentlemen largely interested in this question were heard in reference to it, and to accept an amendment like this will demoralize the entire bill.

Mr. FLEMING. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JENKINS. Certainly.

Mr. FLEMING. Is it not true that venison often is kept three, four, five, and sometimes six months in cold storage, and even dried?

Mr. JENKINS. Oh, I do not know; but I do want to say that the people interested in the question as presented by the gentleman from Georgia have never made any complaint whatever. We submitted it to the people of the District who are interested in it, but no one has been complaining.

Mr. FLEMING. They do not know what we are going to do. I have seen bird and game laws put upon the statutes that are perfectly ridiculous, some of them. They put numerous game laws on the statute books of Georgia while I was a member of the legislature, and every time the legislature met we have had to change them, and the change had to be made simply because the members refused to subject bills to their investigation and to their common-sense judgment. They allowed some man who was a hunter and fond of game preserves to draw a bill, and they would bring it in and indorse it. They passed such bills there, and we are doing the same thing here.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I am willing to admit that the State of Georgia makes some bad legislation, but we do not want to repeat it here.

Mr. FLEMING. You are doing worse. We only had one State to subject to bad legislation and you are trying to subject forty-five States to it and to do something worse. The man that wants to put game in cold storage, game taken in season and sold out of season after being put in cold storage, is not allowed to do it. You do not allow a man to have game in his possession in close time, even if it was legally killed in season. You put a penalty on it. He can not sell it; he can not preserve it; he can not keep it; he can not serve it in any way, notwithstanding it was legally killed and has been kept in cold storage.

Mr. GREENE. One question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. GREENE. I ask for information. Suppose game was killed in some of the Western States in season; as I understand, this bill would prevent anybody from handling it in this District in close time. It was lawfully killed, brought into this District here from the State where it was killed in season, and yet under your bill it is out of season in this District, and any party having it in possession can be fined.

Mr. FLEMING. It is well known that the restaurant keepers frequently take venison and keep it in cold storage for several months. The longer you keep it the better it is; and here is game and meat preserved for the very purpose of putting it in better condition, and you refuse to allow them to serve it in the restaurants.

Mr. COWHERD. May I be allowed just one question?

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Yes, I will yield.

Mr. COWHERD. The only way to enforce the game laws is to stop the man that hunts for the market. He is the man that destroys the game, and the only way to destroy the market hunter is to close the markets. If you leave the market open, you provide for keeping the market hunter going. For that reason the game laws in nearly every State that I have had occasion to examine close the markets. The game laws not only provide that game shall not be killed in certain seasons, but they say that it shall not be shipped out of the State, it shall not be shipped in the State, and it shall not be sold in the markets, and it is a crime to have game found in the possession of anybody during the closed season.

It is true they do put game in cold storage and sell it. It is true this law would close the open market, and that is the only way to stop the market hunter. If the gentleman's amendment should prevail, it would destroy the whole efficacy of the law.

Mr. FLEMING. Well, if that kind of a provision would destroy the efficacy of the law, I think it should be destroyed to that extent.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. FLEMING].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FLEMING) there were—ayes 19, noes 46.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PLUMBING AND GAS FITTING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 6954) to regulate plumbing and gas fitting in the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to appoint a plumbing board to be composed of two master plumbers, one journeyman plumber competent to be licensed as master plumber, and two employees of the District of Columbia having a knowledge of plumbing and gas fitting and sanitary work, whose compensation shall be $300 per annum each, payable monthly. A majority of the board shall be deemed competent for action.

SEC. 2. That in addition to such advisory duties as said Commissioners shall assign them, it shall be the duty of said plumbing board to examine all applicants for license as master plumbers or gas fitters, and to report to said Commissioners, who, if satisfied from such report that the applicant is a fit person to engage in the business of plumbing or gas fitting, shall issue a license to such person to engage in such business.

SEC. 3. That applicants for licenses as master plumbers or gas fitters must be 21 years of age, must make application in their own handwriting, and must accompany such application with a certificate as to good character, signed by at least three reputable citizens of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 4. That the fee for a license as master plumber or gas fitter shall be $3.

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any person to engage in the work of plumbing or gas fitting in the District of Columbia unless he is licensed as provided in this act, or is an employee of a licensed master plumber.

SEC. 6. That it shall be unlawful for the owner or lessee of any building in the District of Columbia, or the agent or representative of such owner or lessee, to knowingly employ an unlicensed person to do plumbing or gas fitting in or about such building.

SEC. 7. That it shall be unlawful for any person to make any cut or trench in any highway, reservation, or public space in the District of Columbia, or to disturb or remove any public work or materials therein, without a permit so to do from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to apply to public buildings of the United States, or to diminish the authority of the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds, or the Architect of the Capitol.

SEC. 8. That any person violating any of the provisions of this act shall, on conviction thereof in the police court, be punished by a fine of not less than $5 nor more than $100; and in default of payment of such fine such person shall be confined in the workhouse of the District of Columbia for a period not exceeding six months; and all prosecutions under this act shall be in the police court of said District, in the name of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 9. That this act shall go into effect thirty days from and after its approval, and all acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ELDRED G. DAVIS.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I now call up House bill 6542, for the relief of Eldred G. Davis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to Eldred G. Davis, out of the money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $634.33, the same being the amount paid by the said Eldred G. Davis into the Treasury of the United States to make good the loss occasioned by the larceny from the office of the collector of the District of Columbia of the like sum of $634.33.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I yield the floor to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], who reported this bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have no desire to discuss it; it is a unanimous report from the committee.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ADULTERATION OF FOOD AND DRUGS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I now call up for consideration Senate bill 471, relating to the adulteration of foods and drugs in the District of Columbia.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. I understand amendments should be moved at the end of the reading of the entire bill and not by sections?

The SPEAKER. That is the case in the House.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no person shall, within the District of Columbia, by himself or by his servant or agent, or as the servant or agent of any other person, sell, exchange, or deliver, or have in his custody or possession with the intent to sell or exchange, or expose or offer for sale or exchange, any article of food or drug which is adulterated within the meaning of this act; and the courts shall construe the provisions of this act liberally, so as to prevent the mischief intended to be guarded against.

SEC. 2. That the term "drug," as used in this act, shall include all medicines for external or internal use, antiseptics, disinfectants, and cosmetics. The term "food," as used herein, shall include confectionery, condiments, and all articles used for food or drink by man, and if there be more than one quality of any article of food or drug known by the same name the best quality thereof shall be furnished to the purchaser, unless he otherwise requests at the time of making such purchase, or unless he be notified at such time of the inferior quality of the article delivered.

SEC. 3. That an article shall be deemed to be adulterated within the meaning of this act:

(a) In the case of drugs: First, if, when sold under or by a name recognized in the United States Pharmacopœia, it differs from the standard of strength, quality, or purity laid down in the edition thereof at the time official; second, if, when sold under or by a name not recognized in the United States Pharmacopœia, but which is found in the German, French, or English Pharmacopœia, it differs from the strength, quality, or purity laid down therein; third, if, when sold as a patented medicine, compounded drug, or mixture, it is not composed of all of the ingredients advertised or printed or written on the bottles, wrappers, or labels of or on or with the patented medicine, compounded drug, or mixture: Provided, That if the defendant in any prosecution in respect to the sale of any such patented medicine, compound drug, or mixture, shall prove to the satisfaction of the court that he had purchased the article in question as the same in nature, substance, and quality as that demanded of him by the purchaser, and with a written warranty to that effect; that he had no reason to believe at the time when he sold it that the article was otherwise, and that he sold it in the same state as when he purchased it, he shall be discharged from the prosecution.

(b) In the case of food: First, if any substance or substances have been mixed with it, so as to reduce or lower or injuriously affect its quality or strength; second, if an inferior or cheaper substance or substances have been substituted wholly or in part for it; third, if any valuable constituent has been wholly or in part abstracted from it; fourth, if it is an imitation of or is sold under the name of another article; fifth, if it consists wholly or in part of a deceased, decomposed, putrid, or rotten animal or vegetable substance, whether manufactured or not; sixth, if it is colored, coated, polished, or powdered whereby damage is concealed, or if it is made to appear better or of greater value than it really is; seventh, if it contains any added poisonous ingredient or any ingredient which may render it injurious to the health of a person consuming it; eighth, in the case of milk, if it contains less than 3¼ per cent of fat, less than 9 per cent of solids not fat, and contains more than 87½ per cent of water; in the case of cream, if it contains less than 20 per cent of butter fat; ninth, in the case of butter or cheese, if it is not made exclusively from milk or cream, or both, with or without common salt; the butter, if it contains more than 12 per cent of water, more than 5 per cent of salt, and less than 83 per cent of fat; tenth, in the case of coffee, if it is not composed entirely of the seed of the Caffea arabica; eleventh, in the case of lard, if it is not made exclusively from the rendered fat of the healthy hog; twelfth, in the case of tea, if it is not composed entirely of the genuine leaf of the tea plant not exhausted; thirteenth, in the case of all kinds of vinegar, if it contains an acidity equivalent to the presence of less than 4 per cent of absolute acetic acid; and cider vinegar, if it is not made from the pure apple juice and contains less than 1⅓ per cent of total solids; fourteenth, in the case of cider, if it is not made from the legitimate product of pure apple juice; in the case of wines and fruit juices, if not made from the pure fruit as represented; and in the case of cider, wines, fruit juices, and malt liquors, if not free from salicylic acid or other preservatives; and in the case of malt liquors, if not free from piric acid, coculus indicus, colchichine, colocynth, aloes, and wormwood; fifteenth, in the case of glucose, if it contains more than five one-hundredths per cent of ash; sixteenth, in the case of flour, if it is not composed entirely of one single ground cereal; seventeenth, in the case of bread, if there is any addition of alum, sulphate of copper, borax, or sulphate of zinc, or other poisonous or harmful ingredient, and if it contains more than 31 per cent of moisture, more than 2 per cent of ash, and less than 6.25 per cent of albuminoids; eighteenth, in the case of olive oil, if it is not made exclusively from the olive berry (Olea europœa), and its specific gravity at 15.6 degrees centigrade (60° F.) "actual density" to be not more than .917 nor less than .914: Provided, That an offense shall not be deemed to be committed under this section in the following cases, that is to say, first, where the order calls for an article of food or drug inferior to such standard, or where such difference is made known by being plainly written or printed on the package; second, where the article of food or drug is mixed with any matter or ingredient not injurious to health and not intended fraudulently to increase its bulk, weight, or measure or conceal its inferior quality, if at the time such article is delivered to the purchaser it is made known to him that such article of food or drug is so mixed.

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the health officer of the District of Columbia, under the direction of the Commissioners of said District, to adopt such measures as may be necessary to facilitate the enforcement hereof, and prepare rules and regulations with regard to the proper method of collecting and examining drugs and articles of food in said District.

SEC. 5. That it shall be the duty of the health officer to investigate a complaint for a violation of any of the provisions of this act on the information of any person who lays before him satisfactory evidence by which to substantiate such complaint.

SEC. 6. That every person offering for sale or delivering to any purchaser any drug or article of food included in the provisions of this act shall furnish to any analyst or other officer or agent of the health department, who shall apply to him for the purpose and shall tender him the value of the same, a sample sufficient for the purpose of analysis of any such drug or article of food which is in his possession.

SEC. 7. That in all cases where any drug or article of food shall be taken as a sample to be examined and analyzed the person making the analysis shall reserve a portion of the sample, which shall be sealed, for a period of thirty days from the time of taking such sample, and in case of a complaint the reserved portion alleged to be adulterated shall, upon application, be delivered to the defendant or his attorney.

SEC. 8. That no person shall hinder, obstruct, or in any way interfere with any inspector, analyst, or other person of the health department in the performance of his duty in carrying out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 9. That all prosecutions under this act shall be in the police court of said District, on information brought in the name of the District of Columbia, and on its behalf; and any person or persons violating any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not less than $5 nor more than $100.

SEC. 10. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed: Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed as modifying or repealing any of the provisions of "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886, or of "An act defining cheese, and also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of 'filled cheese,'" approved June 6, 1896.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I had the honor to report this bill to the House from the Committee on the District of Columbia, as I had also the honor of doing in the last Congress. The bill passed the House in the Fifty-fourth Congress practically without opposition, but too late for consideration in the Senate. The bill was reintroduced in the Senate and there amended and passed the Senate without division or debate.

The necessities of the proposed legislation are fully explained in the mass of literature before the Committee on the District of Columbia, the bill having been recommended by the Commissioners, by the health officer, by the presidents of the several medical societies in the District of Columbia, and we are informed there was no objection whatever to the bill or any of its provisions on the part of pharmacists of the District or the dealers in food and drug products. I yield now to my friend from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD], who desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to the bill. I move to strike out lines 9, 10, and 11, in section 1.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PAYNE). The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, after the word "act," in the eighth line, the words "and the courts shall construe the provisions of this act liberally, so as to prevent the mischief intended to be guarded against."

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. The committee will accept that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. COWHERD. I move to further amend in line 5, on page 2. After the word "man" strike out the rest of the section.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I will simply say I hope my friend the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] will not insist on this amendment. This bill has been very carefully considered during the present session of Congress, as well as in the Fifty-fourth Congress, and I feel that it will be dangerous to accept an amendment of that character. It seems to me to destroy one of the principal objects of the bill. The bill certainly provides no hardship whatever. It simply provides that the article sold by the dealers shall be what it is represented to be, and nothing more. I hope the gentleman will not insist on the amendment. I have no disposition to further prolong the debate upon the amendment or bill.

Mr. COWHERD. I do not want to debate the question, either; but it seems to me there is in this bill a great deal that is in the nature of sumptuary legislation. This particular provision is not calculated to protect health in any way. There is another provision that covers that part of the question. But this portion of the bill provides that no matter what quality of food a man may desire to purchase, the best must be furnished him, if there is more than one quality, unless he calls for an inferior article. Now, there are in grocery stores numerous articles of commerce of which there are several qualities, and frequently there may be a great difference of opinion as to which is best. Yet unless the dealer furnishes the best where no other quality is asked for, he is to be regarded as committing a crime and is subjected to punishment. This sweeping provision, it seems to me, is a bad one.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I move the previous question on the amendment and on the bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman had better move the previous question on only the first section or the first two sections. He does not desire to cut off all amendments to the remaining sections?

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope it is not proposed to move the previous question at this stage on a bill of this kind.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I ask a vote on the pending amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman withdraw the demand for the previous question?

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Yes, sir.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. COWHERD, it was rejected; there being—ayes 9, noes 37.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to indicate an amendment, which, however, I will not offer if it is not deemed prudent by gentlemen of the committee familiar with this subject. In section 3, beginning in line 14, I find this provision:

Provided, That if the defendant in any prosecution, in respect to the sale of any such patented medicine, etc.

I suggest the language should be "in any prosecution under this act," because, under our laws, there are various forms of prosecution.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. The committee will make no objection to the amendment indicated by the gentleman from Maine.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

In line 15, section 3, after the word "prosecution," insert "under this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I desire to offer an amendment to line 65, page 4. The clause as it stands in the bill reads:

Sixteenth, in the case of flour, if it is not composed of one single ground cereal.

I move to amend by striking out that clause. There is now universally in use throughout the United States a flour called by the millers "blended flour." It is composed of nine-tenths wheat and one-tenth corn.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Let me say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY] that the bill which passed the House in the last Congress did not contain this exact provision, but was amended in the Senate on the suggestion of the then Secretary of Agriculture. I think the committee has no objection to the amendment indicated.

Mr. CONNOLLY. If the committee will accept the amendment I have nothing further to say.

Mr. GAINES. What provision is there in this bill that prevents the commission of the fraud—mixing wheat with corn meal and calling it and selling it as "flour"?

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. The committee will accept the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GAINES. The gentleman has not answered my question. As I understand, he concurs in the provision preventing this adulteration?

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. The bill is designed to prevent adulteration.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. CONNOLLY, it was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I now ask for a vote on the bill.

The question being taken, the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. There is no further business to be presented to-day from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. HEPBURN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6896. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of paying the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and in full compensation for all offices the salaries for which are specially provided for herein, for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and fulfilling treaty stipulations for the various Indian tribes, namely:

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman: I desire to occupy a few moments of the time of the committee with reference to the Methodist Church matter which has been pending before the House for two entire days.

There is no government on earth that has treated its loyal people who lived in a section of the country which was controlled by the opposing forces so badly as this Government has treated the loyal people of the Southern States. In 1863, 1864, and 1865 the United States needed money to run the Government and carry on the war, and they also needed supplies for the Army in the localities where they were operating.

Now, I want to contrast the treatment of the two classes of men who furnished these supplies. A man in Pittsburg, or New York, or anywhere North, was called upon and he gave $400 in gold and received a bond for $1,000 bearing 6 per cent interest. This money was used for the prosecution of the war. That man has received for that bond $2,000 in the shape of interest, and the interest upon the coupons from the date they were paid amounts to $2,000 more. The bond can be sold now for about $1,200. Therefore that man in Pittsburg, or New York, or elsewhere in the North, who contributed $400 to the cause, has received in return $5,200.

A man living in that locality would not have dared to be disloyal to the Government. It would have been as much as his life was worth, either in New York or Pittsburg, or, in fact, in any other part of the Northern States, to be disloyal or to hesitate to give his support to the Government, either in personal service or in upholding its credit.

Now, what has the Government done for the people who contributed supplies to the Federal Army in the Southern States? The loyal men in the State of Tennessee or Alabama took their wagons and carried corn, meat, and other supplies to the Army. The man who did so received from the quartermaster a receipt for the articles which he furnished. It must be remembered that he carried these supplies to the Federal Army at the risk of his life. He did it at the risk of the destruction of all that he had on earth. He did it at the risk a man incurs in giving aid and comfort to the enemies of the country in which he lives.

Take the man who carried 400 bushels of corn to the Federal Army. That corn was worth $400 in gold at that time. What has he received for it? That loyal man who risked his life and gave his property in the support of the Union, what treatment has he received at the hands of the Government? He has been for thirty-five or thirty-eight years asking not for the $5,200 that you give to the man in the North, at Pittsburg or some other Northern city, who furnished $400 in gold to the Government, but he is simply asking that that $400 which is due to him for this grain—the grain being fully worth that price—shall be paid for it, simply and only the price that the officer who bought the grain promised should be paid to him.

Well, these matters were brought before you for consideration. The accounts were presented. You appointed a commission. The loyal man came here before that commission and submitted his claim. No question was raised but that he furnished the corn. That was all right. But after his evidence was submitted, some man comes and testifies that the claimant some time during the war gave a Confederate soldier a crust of bread or a cup of milk, or possibly an entire breakfast. Of course he did—perhaps a neighbor's son, perhaps a relative. Any decent man would have done this. It would not have been safe for him to refuse anyone a crust of bread. The whole community, whether Union or Confederate, would have denounced such meanness. Any brave Union soldier would have denounced it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I would like to have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman will proceed for five minutes longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Now, Mr. Chairman, that was a pretty hard case. But there are worse cases than that. Down in my district a very good citizen furnished his supplies to the Government in the same way. He was a Union man; he voted against secession, and when the armies came he did not hesitate to furnish them with supplies. He received vouchers from the proper officers, and came here and sought payment. All the evidence was produced that was necessary; but, now, upon what grounds was the claim rejected?

The proof was positive that the supplies were furnished to the Federal Army; that the prices charged were reasonable. They could not prove that he gave a crust of bread or a cup of milk to a Confederate soldier, and therefore the commission had to hunt up some other ground upon which to reject this loyal man's claim. I hold in my hand the third general report of the Southern Claims Commission. It contains, on page 221, the decision in the case of Lindsay Allen, of Russellville, Franklin County, Ala. His claim was rejected. The grounds for objection are as I will read:

This claimant professes to have been loyal to the United States, and his witnesses testify to his loyal reputation and to his very strong expressions of condemnation of the Confederacy and its leaders; yet he was never personally threatened, molested, or injured on account of his Union sentiments. Yet one of the witnesses, who expresses the opinion that Mr. Allen was a Union man, says: "Threats against Union men were constantly in circulation during the war, and he knows that such threats were in several instances carried into effect. Five Union men were shot and thrown from a bluff within 6 or 7 miles of claimant, and another was hung in Marion County, Ala., all because of their Union sentiments. They were noncombatants, connected with no army, and two of them were between 60 and 70 years old when killed." The loyalty of the claimant and his escape from personal injury are wholly irreconcilable with the facts above recited.

[Laughter and applause.]

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is typical of the proceedings of the Southern Claims Commission.

In the same report and on the same page the claim of Asa F. Allen, from Athens, Ala., was rejected. The commission gravely say:

Mr. Allen was never threatened nor molested.

The next case was that of Francis B. Appliny. The commission reject his claim, and say:

He was not molested, but pursued his usual avocations in peace. He swears to loyal sympathies, and a couple of witnesses support him, but no facts or acts of loyalty are detailed in support of his claim to loyalty. We are not therefore satisfied with the sufficiency of the evidence of loyalty.

There was no fraud ever put upon the Government equal to the fraud of that commission. It was organized simply for the purpose of rejecting Southern claims. I could read very many instances where they rejected claims simply because the claimant, who was proved to be loyal, gave a breakfast or a dinner to a Confederate soldier. But the Lindsay Allen case is one in which they admit that the proofs are perfect as to the loyalty of the claimant, but they say because he was not killed, because he still lives, that fact is entirely irreconcilable with the proof of his loyalty.

Mr. BRUCKER. That fact, they say, is conclusive evidence that he was not loyal.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Is conclusive evidence, in their opinion, that he was not loyal.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON], in citing the action of other governments, has called attention to the fact that every claim produced by the citizens of France for furnishing war supplies was instantly paid. So with other countries.

Now, Mr. Chairman, bad as is the case about supplies, how is it about churches? No government on earth ever failed before to give compensation for churches that were used or destroyed by an army while occupying a country. The necessity for taking down or using churches often occurs. Soldiers were sick and had to be cared for. I have a bill before this Congress, on which there is a favorable report, for compensation for a church that was torn down for the purpose of building chimneys for the cantonment. When this was done the trustees of the church were assured that this great Government would compensate them for it. We have the certificate of the officer in command, Major-General Stanley, that the church was taken possession of in pursuance of his orders and that it was destroyed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have three minutes and a half more time.

There was no objection.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Now, I appeal to this House, in considering these things, to consider them in the light of Christianity and justice. These church claims do not amount to much. All that the people ask is that we help them to rebuild edifices erected for the glory and worship of God, edifices used in the cause of humanity, used as hospitals for sick and wounded soldiers while they were in a country where they had no other sufficient shelter, or torn down, as I have already instanced.

Another church in my district is the Cumberland Presbyterian Church of Athens. In that case the Federal authorities took possession of the church because it was very near a depot, and they used it during the greater part of the war as a warehouse. They took out all the benches and utterly destroyed the interior. After the war was over the quartermaster offered them $2,000, but they said that was not enough. The proof was positive that $6,000 was necessary to restore it so that it could be used as a house of worship. During the discussion the quartermaster was ordered away, and although he offered them this amount, they have been knocking at the doors of Congress for twenty-five years, asking simply for the $2,000 which the reports of the Federal officers show were justly due to these people for the use of and damage to their building.

It is true that in some cases the people have borrowed money and rebuilt their churches, but the debt is still hanging over them. They borrowed the money under the implied pledge that the money should be paid, a pledge in which they placed confidence. The interest has been running on. They have been struggling under reverses and adversities, to which all the people of the South have been subjected, and now, when there are other cases on the Calendar which appeal to you in stronger language than I can give utterance to—the Florence Masonic Lodge, the La Grange College, the Huntsville Normal College, the Decatur Masonic Lodge, and a case high upon the Calendar, which you will be called to vote for soon, the Methodist Episcopal Church of Huntsville—I appeal to every man who believes in the principles of Masonry to give favorable consideration to the bills which will enable the destroyed lodges to be rebuilt. I appeal to every man who believes in the cause of education to lend his voice and vote in aiding us to restore public edifices of learning. I appeal to every man who believes in the living God to vote for the bills to repair the damage done to the buildings which were for His glory, honor, and worship. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

At the Round Valley Agency, Cal., $1,500.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to strike out lines 9 and 10 on page 5. It is a printer's mistake that those lines appear there. The Round Valley Agency has been put in charge of the principal of a school at that point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5 strike out all of lines 9 and 10, as follows:
"At the Round Valley Agency, Cal., $1,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

At the Sisseton Agency, S. Dak., $1,500.

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Chairman, I am very much surprised that this House should have stricken out, without any discussion whatever, the provision in the bill that has just passed the House which prohibits the sale of adulterated flour. There are certain manufacturers who mix flour and corn meal and sell it for pure flour. It is not only an outrageous fraud on the man who consumes the flour, but it goes further than that. It breaks down the manufacturer who undertakes to make genuine flour.

It is a deliberate fraud upon the people of the country that here in this city of intelligence and wealth, sobriety and good morals, we should stand by and let such an outrage be perpetrated upon the people without calling it to the attention of Congress and to the country. Think of it, Mr. Chairman. Suppose a mother having a sick child is directed by her physician to go out into the market and buy flour. Suppose she buys this adulterated stuff. What is the result? Why, instead of giving her the genuine flour prescribed by the physician, she gets, ignorantly, this fraud. It is not only a fraud upon her, but it is a fraud upon the man who is laboring to give us better food and to build up the flour industries of the country.

In my State, Mr. Chairman, they are complaining against it. There they have splendid mills, and they tell me and write me—and they are not selfish people—that they can no longer continue to give my city and people a genuine article of flour when such amalgamated rot and stuff as this is permitted to be palmed off on an intelligent people as flour.

Now, Mr. Chairman, is it the business of this House to perpetrate frauds upon this country? The advocates of this measure tell us that it is a big business in their city and in their neighborhood, and for that reason ask us to permit it. A fine thing to come up here and ask men who want to do the clean thing and give a clean, unadulterated thing to their people to eat, to say, "It is the business of my people to make it and you must not oppose it."

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to frauds of all sorts. I have been trying to cure the "fraud of 1873," and now I stand here trying to call the attention of this country to another fraud that has been perpetrated upon these people by a Republican Congress. It seems to me it is easier to pass a fraud through this House than to pass anything else.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if a man thinks he can not make an honest living by giving us honest flour, let him be honest enough and decent enough, at least to the sick people of this country, to brand this mixture "meal flour;" and then if a man goes and buys it, he does so with his eyes open. I think, Mr. Chairman, that an outrage such as this is should be called to the attention of this honorable body; and I trust the Senate will reject the amendment, striking out the prohibitory provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the Tongue River Agency, Mont., $1,500.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I was struck by the force of the remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee, and I, like him, deprecate very much the fact that this House has set a precedent in allowing adulterated food to come into this District so far as it concerns flour and corn meal—in other words, that it permits the mixture of corn meal and flour; for in such a measure we set a precedent to the entire country and in effect to every legislature in the Union to permit a thing of this kind to go on and to have the adulteration of flour. I agree with the gentleman that this matter has been complained of all over the country; that during this last year, when flour was high, people have indulged in the adulteration of flour, and that the adulteration of flour by meal was so great that sometimes it could be detected.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman is not only not speaking to this bill, but is speaking on a matter that has already been disposed of by the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. KLEBERG. I have the right to consume the remainder of my five minutes, and I will proceed in order.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. A post-mortem examination is always proper.

Mr. KLEBERG. If we can not have the reading of the bill and not have a vote, I do not think it is any crime to denounce it after it has been rushed through under whip and spur. I believe there are sufficient members on this floor opposed to such practices, if they had understood that bill, to have defeated the amendment to strike out this provision which prohibits the adulteration of flour and meal. Now, it is not only the deleterious effect that it has upon our own people, not only the injury it inflicts upon domestic commerce, but just the minute it is found out in the foreign market that we are not selling a clean article of flour complaints will come from abroad and injure every farmer who is raising wheat and every miller who is trying to make a clean article of flour. I do not want to trespass upon the time of the House, but I simply want to protest against any such adulteration in food, whether in this District or in any State of the Union; and I say this is encouraging adulteration in every State, and therefore I protest against it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to be heard on the other side of this amendment just a moment in reply to the last two gentlemen who attacked the bill which has just passed the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would like to know what the amendment is.

A MEMBER. To strike out the last word.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I beg leave simply to say that the amendment which the gentleman attacks was not originally in this bill which was passed; it was not a part of the bill as reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia and which we asked the House of Representatives to pass. That bill was an attempt to protect the people of the District of Columbia in the purchase of pure food. The amendment which these gentlemen complain of was that of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY], and which the committee or the House of Representatives adopted, attaching it to the bill, and the Committee on the District of Columbia is not responsible for that.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I only want to inquire, if this bad effect of this amendment was known by the gentlemen who are now so promptly and quickly after the passage of the bill assailing it, whether it was not the duty of the two gentlemen to have sounded a brief note of warning just before the catastrophe and not wait to blow the whistle of alarm after it was all over. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think one of the gentlemen—at least I can testify to one—was doing his best to give his opposition to the measure. The bill passed before he knew it, it seems.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Before he knew it? [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is he not such a Christian gentleman, then, that he will extend the sanction of his forgiveness to gentlemen on this side who did not know anything about it? [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. Perhaps so.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

At the Yankton Agency, S. Dak., $1,600; in all, $86,500.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to change the words "eighty-six thousand five hundred" to "eighty-five thousand." That change is made necessary by the agency being stricken out on the former page.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingencies of the Indian service, including traveling and incidental expenses of Indian agents and of their offices, and of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; also traveling and incidental expenses of five special agents, at $3 per day when actually employed on duty in the field, exclusive of transportation and sleeping-car fare, in lieu of all other expenses now authorized by law; for pay of employees not otherwise provided for, and for pay of the five special agents, at $2,000 per annum each, $40,000: Provided, That each special agent, supervisor of schools, or other official charged with the investigation of Indian agencies and schools in the pursuit of his official duties shall have power to administer oaths and to examine on oath all officers and persons employed in the Indian service, and all such other persons as may be deemed necessary and proper.

Mr. DOCKERY. Reserving the point of order on the last proviso, I would like to have the gentleman explain in regard to this. It seems to be a new provision.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is a new provision; that is correct. It was put in to meet this objection: These officers are sent out to make investigations and they have no right to administer oaths, and it is often a source of inconvenience and expense to procure the presence of an officer who has that right.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, that seems to be a proper provision.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the expense of purchasing goods and supplies for the Indian service, and pay of necessary employees; advertising, at rates not exceeding regular commercial rates; inspection, and all other expenses connected therewith, including telegraphing, $45,000.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I would like the gentleman to explain the increase in the paragraph last read.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is an increase, Mr. Chairman, of $5,000 over the appropriation of last year. This appropriation is used for advertising bids to be presented and for operating the various warehouses, telegraph bills, inspectors, etc. The bids are opened and afterwards the goods are examined, and all that sort of thing. The Commissioner says that the increase is necessary principally for advertising. Last year there was a considerable deficiency, and it is necessary to increase it.

Mr. DOCKERY. I would like to have the chairman, the gentleman from New York, explain the $25,000 in the next paragraph.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Secretary of the Interior informs us:

The law requires that contracts for transportation of goods and supplies shall be advertised and let to the lowest bidder (act March 3, 1877, section 1, 19 Statutes, 291). So the amount to be spent depends upon the number of pounds to be transported. As has been said, the quantity of goods purchased for Indians has been increasing, and consequently transportation has been increasing. In 1890 $300,000 was appropriated for transportation; then $290,000 for two years, and since then, $275,000. For the fiscal year 1897, there was a deficiency of about $7,500. This will be greater for 1898, even if no more pounds are transported, for the reason that transportation rates are higher.

Mr. DOCKERY. Was there an actual deficiency last year?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; and he estimates that it will be larger than that this year.

The Clerk read as follows:

For necessary expenses of transportation of such goods, provisions, and other articles for the various tribes of Indians provided for by this act, including pay and expenses of transportation agents and rent of warehouses, $300,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer this amendment, to follow line 25, page 10:

For expenses of citizens serving without compensation, appointed by the President, $4,000.

That is precisely similar to the provision that was in the bill in years past.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For interest on $330,257.92, at 5 per cent per annum, for education, support of the government, and other beneficial purposes, under the direction of the general council of the Choctaws, in conformity with the provisions contained in the ninth and thirteenth articles of treaty of January 20, 1825, and treaty of June 22, 1855, $19,512.89; in all, $30,032.89.

For expenses of the commission of citizens serving without compensation, appointed by the President under the provisions of the fourth section of the act of April 10, 1869, $4,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to strike out the last four lines, as that is the provision inserted by an amendment on the other page. It was erroneously inserted at this point in the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the erection and completion of suitable buildings for an industrial boarding school on the Red Lake Indian Reservation, in the State of Minnesota, $35,000, to be immediately available and to be reimbursable.

Mr. DOCKERY. This is a new item, and I desire to ask some explanation.

Mr. SHERMAN. That and the following item are new. On motion of the gentleman from Minnesota, $75,000 was divided, and it was specially desired that a portion of it should be expended for the two schools.

Mr. DOCKERY. The amount appropriated for the two is no larger than the amount formerly appropriated?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, it is $5,000 larger than the estimate. The estimate was $125,000; so that if you should strike out, on page 13, the word "five," you would make it the same as the estimate.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest whether or not the two paragraphs should not come in ahead of schools, on page 43 of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; because it is under the head of "Treaty stipulations," and if it goes over there, it would be a gratuity.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It seems to me this whole bill is full of sections and paragraphs increasing the expenditures of the Government, and instead of the majority in power in the House restricting expenditures, they seem to be more extravagant than ever. Now, in view of the fact that we have continually, nearly every day, been hearing of the falling revenues of the Government, that expenditures exceed the revenues—in view of the fact that Saturday's report shows that we fell off $225,000 below the receipts—it seems to me that we ought to commence and retrench expenditures. Everywhere all over the country the burdens of taxation are falling with heavy weight upon the shoulders of labor.

The President, in an interview printed in yesterday's New York Journal, laments the condition that the laborer is confronted with, and says as a remedy that restriction be placed upon further immigration to this country—"that it is impossible to protect labor against foreign competition." If there is to be unrestricted immigration, surely these are bad conditions. We were informed in the last campaign that the protective tariff the party was going to give the country would insure prosperity to the laborer. Now the President of the United States says that "nothing will bring prosperity unless we restrict immigration." A few years ago we used to hear the refrain that Uncle Sam was rich enough to give us all a farm. The President of the United States, in effect, says, "We have not got any farm; we are bankrupt; we are mortgaged, and about to go into bankruptcy."

How do these conditions come about? In the last thirty years under Republican rule we have surrendered to Great Britain more than they ever expected to get in their wildest dreams through the aid of the scalping knife and tomahawk and the aid of hired Hessians. They allowed the foreigners through subtle influences to control our legislation and frame our laws, and that is what has brought us to this condition. We pay annually as a tribute to the foreign landholders in Great Britain about $200,000,000 and another $150,000,000 goes as a tribute to them for the franchises they own and control in this country. We have sent abroad $350,000,000 more than we have brought in, and what have we to show for it? Nothing. It has gone as a tribute to monopolists abroad.

Not alone that, but they control our circulating medium. Our system of finance is at their dictation. This has largely come about under Republican rule, and we are face to face with these conditions. As was proven the other day by the leader of the House, the laborers in New England cotton factories can not any more compete with the ex-slaves in the Southern factories.

I heard a discussion here only a short time ago about the adulteration of food. Why, sir, in a country where such conditions exist, food must be adulterated in order that the people who labor may get cheaper food. [Laughter and applause.] And, sir, the Agricultural Department has lately sent experts to the slums of New York to investigate the cost of living of those who live in tenement houses; and those experts have brought out the remarkable fact that the dwellers in those slums are extremely extravagant, and that their poverty is due to their extravagance. We have it reported to us that in many instances they actually buy beefsteak and butter, and a recommendation is made in one case that they live on bananas, because, as is stated, there is in 10 cents' worth of bananas more nutriment than in 2 pounds of beefsteak. [Laughter.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I think my friend from Kansas is making fun. I have observed that during his service in past Congresses he has dwelt upon the miseries in Kansas. During this session I have not heard a word from him as representing the miseries of Kansas. That is an indication of progress.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. DINGLEY. I have but two or three minutes.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I will say that Kansas is now under Populist rule, and has no more miseries. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENDERSON. That is misery enough in itself. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. DINGLEY. I am glad the gentleman from Kansas has risen here to-day (he usually does so when there is no question up of appropriation or increase of appropriation) and called upon this side of the House to unite with him in maintaining economy in the administration of the Government and in our appropriations. I am glad he has made that suggestion to-day; for I have observed that every proposition that has come up thus far for an increase of the appropriations as reported by the committee has received the vote of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I want to correct the gentleman. I say that is not true. I have in a number of cases voted against appropriations.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think I have the floor, or at least I ought to have it. As to the matter immediately at issue, gentlemen on my right, as well as those on my left, who have seen the gentleman from Kansas passing between the tellers here on propositions for increase of appropriations, must judge for themselves as to the truth of the matter.

Taking seriously the suggestion of my friend, I certainly hope that the members of this House and the gentleman from Kansas himself, on the various propositions that may come up hereafter for increasing appropriations, will remember the injunction which our friend has bestowed and will endeavor to act according to the words that he has uttered here to-day, and not follow the bad example which he has given us in the past. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For completing the necessary surveys within the Chippewa Indian Reservation in Minnesota, including expenses of examining and appraising pine lands, under the provisions of the act approved January 14, 1889, to be reimbursed to the United States out of proceeds of the sale of their lands, $50,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall allow, and there shall be paid out of this appropriation to the chief examiner of pine lands, appointed under the provisions of the act of January 14, 1889, his actual and necessary traveling expenses and expenses for subsistence while actually engaged in the discharge of his duties, not exceeding $3 per day, in addition to the per diem allowed him by law: And provided further, That there shall also be allowed the chief examiner, to be paid out of this appropriation, not to exceed $6 per month for office rent: Provided further, That all lands acquired and sold by the United States under the "act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," approved January 14, 1889, shall be subject to the right of the United States to construct and maintain dams for the purpose of creating reservoirs in aid of navigation, and no claim or right of compensation shall accrue from the overflowing of said lands on account of the construction and maintenance of such dams or reservoirs. And the Secretary of War shall furnish the Commissioner of the General Land Office a list of such lands, with the particular tracts appropriately described, and in the disposal of each and every one of said tracts, whether by sale, by allotment in severalty to individual Indians, or otherwise, under said act, the provisions of this paragraph shall enter into and form a part of the contract of purchase or transfer of title.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I desire to make a point of order upon the three provisos embraced in the paragraph just read. I submit that each one of those provisos embraces new legislation, undertaking to amend provisions of law now on the statute book.

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman is correct as to the first two provisos, but incorrect as to the last, which is not new legislation, but is old. I admit that lines 15 to 25 are subject to a point of order; but if the gentleman will reserve his point I shall be glad to make a brief explanation of the reasons for incorporating those provisos in the bill.

Mr. CONNOLLY. As to the proviso beginning at line 25, it seems to me that it, as much as the other two provisos, is entirely new legislation. It is supplementary to the act of January 14, 1889, and provides—

That all lands acquired and sold by the United States under the "Act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," approved January 14, 1889, shall be subject to the right of the United States to construct and maintain dams for the purpose of creating reservoirs in aid of navigation, and no claim or right of compensation shall accrue from the overflowing of said lands on account of the construction and maintenance of such dams or reservoirs. And the Secretary of War shall furnish the Commissioner of the General Land Office a list of such lands, with the particular tracts appropriately described, and in the disposal of each and every one of said tracts, whether by sale, by allotment in severalty to individual Indians, or otherwise, under said act, the provisions of this paragraph shall enter into and form a part of the contract of purchase or transfer of title.

If that provision is anything on earth but an amendment of the act of 1889, I can not see it.

Mr. SHERMAN. The language which the gentleman has just read is identically the language of the last appropriation act. The gentleman will find it if he will take the trouble to look up that act.

Mr. CONNOLLY. That suggestion is entirely immaterial. If the provision was inserted out of order last year, that is no reason why it should go in now.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is a matter of indifference whether the provision was originally enacted out of order or in order, if it has once been enacted.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Our rules provide in substance that no new legislation shall be incorporated in an appropriation bill. This certainly is legislation. If it is not necessary, why put it in? If the act of 1889 is sufficent as it stands to accomplish this purpose, why do you seek to amend it by a provision on a general appropriation bill?

I would, as the gentleman from New York in charge of this bill suggests, reserve the point of order; but if it is out of order, I see no reason for merely reserving it, and think it had better be made at once and determined. Our rules prohibit that kind of legislation. If the rule is a good one, why not enforce it? As they stand to-day the House, under the rules, has its hands absolutely tied. We turn the House over to the Senate. We say we are unable to do anything of this kind, but you can put the amendment on in the Senate.

Then, when the amendment is put on it is brought back here, and the whole House is pocketed in the pockets of a conference committee and can not be heard. We can not raise the question then. It is too late. We tie our hands absolutely. We leave it all to the committee of conference, composed of members of the House, together with conferees on the part of the Senate, who may act in that roundabout way and violate our rules. I insist that it is not a sensible and it is not a reasonable way for the House to act any longer, and the best time to put a stop to it is right now.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, the statement as to the parliamentary situation of this paragraph made by the chairman of the committee is correct. All of the provisions embraced in lines 15 to 25, on page 14, are new legislation. But from line 25, on page 14, down to the close of the paragraph on the next page, is simply the reenactment of existing law, and therefore not new legislation.

Mr. CONNOLLY. If that is the law already, then why reenact it?

Mr. DOCKERY. It is the existing provision of the appropriation bill for the current year.

Mr. CONNOLLY. That provision can not fail. It is general and will survive after the appropriation is expended. This proviso is as perpetual as any law that Congress can pass if the last Congress passed it; and if so, as the gentleman states, then it is entirely unnecessary to reenact it here.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not desire to take part in the contention between the gentlemen from Illinois as to that part of the paragraph following line 25, on page 14, for I do not know anything about it.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the same provision as in the bill for the present fiscal year.

Mr. DOCKERY. I so understood. But I intended to reserve the point of order on the other provisions myself, because it seemed to me that they at least require explanation.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would like to have an opportunity of making the explanation.

Mr. DOCKERY. I would like to proceed for a moment longer, inasmuch as the gentleman from Illinois has criticised the rules.

As I understand it, under all administrations of the House, legislation has never been held to be in order on an appropriation bill except such as, being germane to the subject, would retrench expenditures by the reduction of the amount—reduction of salaries, etc., of persons employed by the Government. I sincerely hope that the rule which prevailed in the Forty-eighth, Forty-ninth, and Fiftieth Congresses will be reenacted, because we are constantly confronted with situations where we could effect real reforms but for the provisions of the rule now operating forbidding any legislation upon an appropriation bill.

The old rule permitted legislation if it reduced expenditures. It proved to be a satisfactory rule, and commended itself, I think, generally to the country, and I hope the House, when we come to consider the adoption of rules, will restore the old provision that existed prior to the Fifty-first Congress.

As to the new paragraphs, against which the gentleman from Illinois has made the point of order, I know nothing.

Mr. HOPKINS. Before the gentleman takes his seat, I would suggest the reason that the change was made. The consensus of opinion in the House had agreed that it was bad legislation to enact on an appropriation bill any kind of legislation; that if it was a matter requiring new law, a bill should be introduced into the House, sent to a committee of the House, and formally adopted as a legislative measure, and it was believed to be an evil to permit, even in the shape of a proposition to reduce appropriations, a provision of new legislation to be incorporated in an appropriation bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman from Illinois who has just taken his seat is theoretically right, but I think practically wrong. As a matter of fact, unless a bill has a great amount of pressure behind it, when offered as an independent measure it rarely passes through both bodies.

The question of the aggregate of appropriations is, of course, not only important now, because of the existing condition of the Treasury, but always so. If we desire to keep appropriations within proper limitations, we should have power to change a law which in the judgment of the House or the committee is unwise, so as to bring down appropriations.

I will not pursue this question further now, but will submit some observations when the rules are presented to the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY] will reserve his point of order, and is willing to hear an explanation of the paragraph, and is susceptible to being reasoned into a withdrawal of his point, I shall be glad to make an explanation. I admit that his point of order, as far as the first two provisos are concerned, is well taken, and if he intends to insist upon it, I will not burden him or the committee or unnecessarily consume time with an explanation with reference to the matter.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me to be idle to spend time in debate over it. I do insist on it. I think that we ought to enforce our own rules.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well then; I will not waste any time in making an explanation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will sustain the point of order with reference to the first and second provisos, and overrule the point as to the third proviso.

Mr. DOCKERY. You ought to change the language of the third proviso to harmonize with the action just taken.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to strike out the word "further."

Mr. CONNOLLY. Does the Chair hold that the last proviso is not new legislation?

The CHAIRMAN. He does. It is simply a repetition of an existing statute, and while the legislation may be unnecessary, that fact will not bring it within the scope of the rule which the gentleman has invoked.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Then I move to strike out that last proviso, as the pretext for holding it in is that we have already the law upon the statute book. That being the case, it is entirely useless to reenact what is now on the statute book in full life and force.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last proviso of the section.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON] a few minutes ago, in answer to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], suggested that we had prosperity in Kansas because the Populists were in power. I want to say to the House that by reason of abundant crops we, in the last twelve months, have paid off $50,000,000 of our indebtedness. [Applause on the Republican side.] That is a record every Kansan is proud of. But since the Populist party came into power one year ago there is evidence of mismanagement in every department. Last fall, for the first time in years, as a result of that mismanagement, our State warrants were stamped "Not paid for want of funds."

Mr. MCCORMICK. Are they not paying State warrants in the State of Kansas now as fast as they are presented?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. State warrants are being stamped "Not paid for want of funds" as fast as they are presented, except in the case of a few laborers, where, by an arrangement with the Topeka banks, they have provided for borrowing the money. [Applause on the Republican side.] The people are proud of the Republican party, for it has made the United States the grandest nation in the world; it is the richest; it leads in manufacture, in agriculture, and in everything else that goes to make a great nation, while if the Populist party was in power in this country they would enact laws which would destroy every material interest that redounds to the public good. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] says that the condition of the State treasury of Kansas is in bad shape because the Populist party is in power. Let me state to the gentleman a few facts that probably he is not in possession of. Three years ago, when the Republican party succeeded the Populist party in Kansas, they found that there was a half million dollars of surplus in the treasury.

When they went out of power and the Populists succeeded them two years later, the treasury was bankrupt and warrants were stamped "Not paid for want of money," because of Republican extravagance in the two years they were in possession. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, since the Populists have gone in, and economy has set in again in Kansas, the warrants are being paid when presented.

In regard to the prosperity of the State of Kansas, seven years ago, when we began the agitation, there was a mortgage indebtedness on the homes and farms of $230,000,000 in that State. When we called attention to that fact, they said we were setting up a calamity howl and destroying the credit of the State. Since that time we have carried on that agitation. The people of Kansas have reduced that mortgage indebtedness, and the Republican papers are boasting that we have paid off $140,000,000 of the mortgage indebtedness of the State during the time that the Populists have been largely in control of the State.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I can not yield. Now, they told us at that time that the mortgage indebtedness of the State of Kansas stood for our prosperity, for our investments, etc. Hence if we have got rid of one hundred and forty-odd million dollars of our prosperity, according to Republican theories, then the State ought not to be prosperous. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Not just now. I have just a few minutes. The Populist party since it came into power in Kansas has passed a great number of very wholesome laws, reducing the charges in the stock yards of Kansas City, and in that way will save to the pockets of the people of Kansas annually more than $200,000. They have enacted a text-book law, for publishing the schoolbooks of the State by the State, giving a saving to the people of the State who are endeavoring to secure an education for their children by sending them to school, and freeing them from the monopoly of the book trust. That saved many, many thousands of dollars a year, and will go on for some time to come.

They have also enforced the law against railroad corporations and reduced freights in many instances, making another saving of thousands of dollars to the people of Kansas. These reforms the Republicans failed to inaugurate or carry out while in power, and so the people of Kansas to-day realize the vast advantage there is in having the Populist party in power in Kansas compared with the Republican party.

Now, in regard to something the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] said in regard to my having voted to increase the appropriations: I do not think the gentleman would have said that if he had been in possession of the whole facts. The other day when the military appropriation bill was up, appropriating money for the Army, I offered an amendment that would have reduced the expenditures on that bill some $200,000, and every member of that side of the House, including the gentleman from Maine, if I recollect correctly, voted against that amendment. I am for curtailing expenditures where it will not cripple the public service; I am for increasing expenditures when it is for the benefit of the Government. I will vote against any expenditure of money where it goes to increase the earnings of any incorporation or any private individual who is not entitled to the same.

In the Fifty-second and Fifty-third Congresses, when the gentlemen over there were in the minority, many times we were reminded that this was "a billion-dollar country, you know!" [Laughter.] And I remember they made his life a burden on every occasion to the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. Holman, now dead. They offered amendments all the way through, and it was always the habit of gentlemen on that side to remind gentlemen on this side that this was "a billion-dollar country," and that they did not believe in "cheeseparing economy." Well, I do not either——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. But I will vote for no extravagant expenditure for a corporate or private interest.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, the people of Kansas expressed their opinion of the Populist administration in the last election. In the election last fall, when county officers and district judges were elected, the Republicans had an average majority of 30,000 over the combined opposition. [Applause on the Republican side.] The gentleman says they made certain promises. That is true, but they never made a pledge or a promise to the people of Kansas which they have kept.

They shouted themselves hoarse for a maximum freight rate bill; but with the senate, the house, the governor, and every State officer they failed to keep that pledge. [Applause on the Republican side.] The gentleman himself and every Populist from Kansas declared to the people of this country that if Kansas were sold under the hammer she would not bring sufficient to pay her debts. The Republicans have always claimed that if you would give the people of Kansas a show they would pay every dollar they owed; and they have demonstrated their ability by paying off fifty millions in the last year. [Applause.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the House to the statement made by the gentleman from Kansas, in which he attempts or purports to give the language of the President of the United States with reference to the present condition of labor in this country. I do not do so because of any purpose to speak by authority of the President, but I do it because I am unwilling to sit here and by my silence lead any man to understand that I believe one word of that statement. I will call attention to the language of the gentleman, and he said his justification for it was an interview with the President published in the New York Journal of yesterday; and here is the language of the gentleman from Kansas:

> These are bad conditions. We were informed in the last campaign that the protective tariff the party was going to give the country would insure prosperity to the laborer. Now the President of the United States says that "nothing will bring prosperity unless we restrict immigration."

I stop here to say that I deny that the President of the United States ever said any such thing and that the statement is absolutely without foundation in fact.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Will the gentleman deny the fact of the interview in the New York Journal?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It does not appear. There is no such interview in the New York Journal. I hold it in my hand.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Will the gentleman please read it?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I certainly will read it if I have time.

Now, says the gentleman from Kansas:

> A few years ago we used to hear the refrain that Uncle Sam was rich enough to give us all a farm. The President of the United States says we have not got any farm, that we are bankrupt, that we are mortgaged and about to go into bankruptcy.

I deny that the President of the United States ever said anything of that sort.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. The gentleman will permit me. I did not say that the President said that.

Mr. GROSVENOR. You certainly did. I am reading your language.

That is the trouble with the gentleman; he is always on his feet, and as usual has shown he is wholly irresponsible for his utterances. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I can assure the gentleman that what I did say was——

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have got what you did say.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I did not say that the President said that.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I say you did.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I say I did not.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I say you did. I can prove it. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] Let me read it again, and that is where the trouble comes in. It is this language which accounts for the gentleman's irresponsibility:

> A few years ago we used to hear the refrain that Uncle Sam was rich enough to give us all a farm. The President of the United States says "We have not got any farm; that we are bankrupt; that we are mortgaged and about to go into bankruptcy."

Now, let us see what further he said:

> The President, in an interview printed in yesterday's New York Journal, laments the condition that the laborer is confronted with, and says, as a remedy that restriction be placed upon further immigration to this country; "that it is impossible to protect labor against foreign competition."

I say in the interview quoted by the gentleman no such thing appears. Now, a word about this interview. I do not believe the President of the United States has ever given an interview on this question, and when you come to carefully examine what has been written in this paper, you will discover that a lady was taken into the presence of the President and introduced to him by a prominent Senator. She purports to give some of the private conversation. The President responded to some of her conversation, but no word such as has been quoted by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON] appears anywhere in the paper.

Coming now to the subject of immigration, she puts this language in the President's mouth—and, of course, Mr, Chairman, I neither affirm or deny that that language was used, although I have an opinion about it. Here is what he purports to have said about the immigration matter:

> "I have for a long time been in favor of restricting immigration," he said, decidedly, "and a great industrial disturbance like this accentuates the importance of acting promptly. As you know, the immigration bill now before Congress has passed the Senate, and I hope it will pass the House. In fact, I will use what personal influence I have with the House members to have the measure considered promptly and favorably. I think there is no doubt that it will be passed."

Is there a man on this floor who believes that the President of the United States ever said that? [Cries on the Republican side of "No, never!"] That will do for sensation mongers, but for nobody else. Do you believe, Mr. Chairman, that the President of the United States ever told a newspaper correspondent that he would use his personal influence with the members of this House to force a bill through the House? As a man of some experience and some knowledge, I make bold to say that he never used any such language. Now, then, nowhere has he used this language. She does put this into the mouth of the President, but the gentleman from Kansas——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio be allowed to proceed for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Let me point out to the gentleman from Kansas what the correspondent has said in support of his position, which, even if uttered by the President, never had that meaning. Let me read again what the gentleman says. Now, the President says that "nothing will bring prosperity unless we restrict immigration."

But what the correspondent says the President said was that "restriction is the first thing to be done if we expect prosperity to be permanent." The gentleman from Kansas said that the President said that was the only thing that would bring it, as though the President admitted that it had not come, while the correspondent undertook to say that the restriction of immigration would aid the bringing about of the permanent retention of the prosperity that we already have.

Now, I have gone over the whole of this alleged interview. The restriction of immigration is the first important thing to be done if we expect permanent prosperity; and beyond that the President has not said one word, and instead of the President's intimating or admitting that we did not have prosperity, he uses this language, referring to the strike in New England:

> The advices from other portions of the country indicate that times are very much improved and that the improvement, while gradual, is of a permanent and healthy character.

And yet the gentleman from Kansas has stood in his place on this floor and stated that the President of the United States had admitted that there was no prosperity, and he was looking away from the great principles he had advocated; that restriction of immigration was the only thing that would bring prosperity; while in fact the remainder of the very paragraph stated, in what purported to be the language of the President, that elsewhere throughout the country there is prosperity of a very marked and important character.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I shall not at this time go further. I wanted to correct at the moment what I understood to be an error that the gentleman by his eloquence and spontaneity had been led into. At the proper time I will point out to the gentleman how far the people of Kansas were able to pay their debts. I will point out to him how it was that the prices of their commodities advanced so that the condition between the Populistic prophecies and the Republican results enabled them to get $145,000,000 off from the books of Kansas.

I will point out to him how the labor interests of my district are being improved day by day, earning through September, October, November, and December more than twice as much per diem and working more than double the amount of time than under the Wilson-Gorman bill.

I will not occupy the time now. Let it be sufficient to say that this spasmodic declaration of poverty and ruin and failure in this country falls without the slightest weight upon the ears of intelligent men. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just one word. I regret that this discussion has been so prolonged [laughter on the Republican side], to the annoyance of my Republican brothers, but the very frequent reference to myself by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] compels me to make some reply, if the House will indulge me for a few minutes.

Now, this interview, Mr. Chairman, is from a reputable New York journal. [Derisive laughter on the Republican side.] I happen to know personally this lady; I know that she is reliable; she to all appearance was the accredited representative of this great metropolitan daily journal; therefore I assumed, of course, that she had had this interview with the President, and I have no doubt of its truth.

Now, then, the gentleman from Ohio tries to make it appear that the President does not now say that the permanent prosperity of this country depends on the restriction of immigration.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Not at all.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman will allow me——

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I will read exactly——

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman will allow me——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield?

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. No, I can not; because I have but five minutes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. You will have plenty of time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas declines to yield.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas (reading)—

I have for a long time——

Mr. GROSVENOR. I tried to call the attention of the gentleman——

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I decline to yield. I hope the Chair will protect me in my rights. I have not very many here, but I hope to be protected in the few I have.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will protect the gentleman.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. The gentleman from Ohio need not seek an opportunity to keep me from presenting my case. He is amply capable of presenting his own case. If he will give me my way in my own time I will present my case, and he no doubt will have the opportunity to present his. Here is what the President says:

"I have for a long time been in favor of restricting immigration," he said decidedly; "and a great industrial disturbance like this accentuates the importance of acting promptly."

"A great industrial disturbance!" "A great industrial disturbance." Not a small disturbance, but a great one in a country where the gentleman from Ohio says we have prosperity! What does "great" mean? "A great industrial disturbance" down in the New England States—in the very heart of the manufacturing region, where, if protection were going to "protect" and promote industry, it certainly ought to have done the good work before this.

The President says further:

As you know, the immigration bill now before Congress has passed the Senate, and I hope it will pass the House. In fact, I will use what personal influence I have with the House members to have the measure considered promptly and favorably.

And no doubt he will succeed, because I am informed that very little of the Republican "pie" has been distributed yet. And in view of that fact the "boys" will be ready to march when he tells them, as the gentlemen on the other side were ready to march when the Speaker said "March" before the committee assignments were made at the last session.

The President further says:

I think there is no doubt that it will be passed. I have held for some time that we can not avoid serious industrial disturbances if we leave the gates of our country wide open and allow immigrants to come here when our own people are not fully employed.

In other words, we must have "serious industrial disturbances" if we allow unrestricted immigration from foreign countries. Is not that an admission that this is the first and most necessary thing; and is it not an abandonment of the policy of protection, which it was claimed was going to cure the evils of society in the United States? The President further says:

The restriction of immigration is the first important thing to be done if we expect permanent prosperity.

And is that not an admission that Uncle Sam has not longer any room or opportunities left?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON] has expired.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I ask for unanimous consent to occupy five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. The President proceeds to say what I was about to read:

"Restriction of immigration is the first important thing to be done if we expect permanent prosperity. I hope the strike will not extend throughout the textile industries," continued the President earnestly.

That is an admission, as I claimed in my former remarks, that the President has abandoned the hope of bringing permanent prosperity to the country through the so-called Dingley bill. He falls back on this statement, that now we must pass laws restricting immigration into this country. He says that this is the first great step, "the first important thing"—not the second, but the first—so that it takes precedence of the Dingley bill as a prosperity bringer. What does this all mean? It means the breaking down of the protective-tariff system as a means of increasing the prosperity of the country, of advancing the welfare of those who work by daily labor in the manufacturing establishments of this country.

Prosperity, the President says, has come to some parts of the country. What parts? Why, out in Kansas and Nebraska, the two States that gave the largest vote for Mr. Bryan in the last election. How did prosperity come there? It came in part through the misfortune of other countries—through a failure of the wheat and other food crops in the Asiatic countries, in the Argentine Republic, in Australia, in northern Europe, because of the failure of rain. Because of deficient production abroad, we were the only country that had any surplus of wheat to sell. On the other hand, we had in our country an abundant crop because of seasonable weather during the whole growing period.

Does the gentleman from Ohio contend that Mr. HANNA, Mr. McKinley, Mr. DINGLEY, or any of the great leaders of the Republican party, brought temperate weather or seasonable weather to that portion of the country? Did they control the rainfall in this country as well as in foreign lands? Is it reasonable to suppose that Mr. HANNA would have given Kansas and the adjacent States abundance of rain in the midsummer when they needed it and left his own State of Ohio to swelter in the heat of the summer for one hundred and six days without a drop? [Laughter and applause.] And yet gentlemen on the other side claim credit for what they call a year of prosperity!

My friend from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] thinks that all of this prosperity has come to the State because the Republican party is in power in the nation. But I do not agree with him. That is not the cause at all. It came from conditions, Mr. Chairman, beyond the control or the power of the Republican party.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Did not the Dingley bill do something for Kansas? Was it not responsible for the increase in the price of wool in our State from 7 cents to 15 cents a pound? [Applause on the Republican side.] Was it not responsible for the increase in the value of cattle and sheep—the increase in the value of sheep being from 90 cents to $3.50 a head?

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Oh, the gentleman from Kansas knows just as well as I do that there is no great amount of wool raised in Kansas, and hence that it was not largely beneficial to the people of the State. It did benefit some——

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. There are over 2,000,000 sheep in Kansas to-day.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas (continuing). But I can tell him, and I will tell this House, that for every man who is engaged in raising and selling sheep a hundred are using the goods produced from them; and it certainly could not be seriously contended that any marked increase in the price of wool, woolen goods, would be of any material advantage to them. But that is the logic of the gentleman, and that is a sample of the logic that is generally used by the other side of the House in connection with questions of this character.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take up any longer the time of the House in the discussion of this matter; and, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] has intimated, we may take this subject up some other time and consider it at much greater length. I shall be very glad to meet him at any time, especially on the question of the Dingley bill bringing prosperity to the country. I think I can furnish the gentleman and the House with some illustrations which may be of interest to them.

Has it come to this, sir, that the great Republic which our forefathers established to be a notable example to all the world as the asylum for the oppressed and downtrodden of all nations—has it come to this, that we must declare now to the nations of the world, in the face of all of our claims in the past, that monopoly of opportunity has set in here, and that the people are better off abroad than those in our own land? That the same laws which have brought about distress and suffering in other countries have produced precisely the same conditions here? I believe for my part that the gates should be thrown wide open, so that any man on the face of God's earth who desires to improve his condition and better his fortunes shall be permitted to make his home here in this land, under a Government which we have received as an inheritance from our forefathers, an inheritance to be transmitted to posterity for all time to come. [Applause.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I do not feel quite clear that it would be wise or prudent to accept the challenge of the gentleman from Kansas to discuss these matters at some other time, for the reason that he is too perfect in evasion to justify any man in trying to keep up with him. [Laughter.]

A few minutes ago he shouted out at the top of his voice that it was Populism largely in Kansas that made times prosperous and that paid off the debt of the State.

Now, when he is driven from that position, he says that it was the scarcity of food somewhere. Did the Populists make food scarce somewhere? [Laughter.] It was the Populists that killed the cattle with murrain some place, was it not? [Laughter.] I have never made such a charge as that against the Populists in my life. When was it that the Populists caused the advance in beef cattle in the State of Kansas? How did they get at it? Tell me, my Populist friends, so I can invoke your aid still further.

When was it and how was it that the Populists came into the State of Ohio, where there are 75,000 woolgrowers who are voters, and lifted the price of their wool from 14 and 15 cents a pound to 29 and 31 cents a pound? How did they do that? Did the sheep die somewhere? [Laughter.] And if so, was it the Populists that killed them? My impression has always been that the Democrats and the dogs were a little hard on sheep, but I never knew that the Populists were. [Laughter.]

Now, I want to tell the gentleman that that which I came on the floor to deny he has not referred to. I desire that he will now allow me to say that the point wherein I tried to correct him a moment ago was this: He said I denied that the President said that immigration was necessary to the permanent prosperity of the country. Everybody who heard me knows that I said nothing of the kind, and no man knows it better than the gentleman from Kansas, who refuses to allow me to correct him.

He knows that I was arguing that the President had said, inferentially at least, that prosperity had come, and that the restriction of immigration would be an adjunct beneficial to the retention or the creation of permanent prosperity. That is what I said. But let me call the attention of the gentleman to this statement of his. I charge that when he used this language he used language that was not true:

> The President of the United States says we haven't got any farm; that we are bankrupt; that we are mortgaged and about to go into bankruptcy.

I said that the President never said that. I say that now. I will face the world in arms to vindicate the President of the United States from the charge of being a common falsifier. [Applause and laughter.] The gentleman has occupied his time, and has made no reference to that statement. There it is. It is in the RECORD now. I hope it will be in the RECORD to-morrow morning. Certainly the gentleman has said it. There it is. There is not any getting away from it, and yet he would make these platitudes take the place——

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Always. That is one difference between the gentleman from Kansas and the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I presume there is not a man on the floor who understood me to intend to quote the President literally. I said those words in connection with others that have come true, meaning that everyone present should understand that that was what the President's language really meant.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is all right. I yield no further. Now, let us see. The gentleman ought to employ a lawyer and not try to defend himself until he sees the indictment. Here is what he says:

> Now the President of the United States says nothing will bring prosperity unless we restrict immigration.

That was as utterly without foundation as was the others.

> A few years ago we used to hear the refrain that Uncle Sam was rich enough to give us all a farm. The President of the United States says we have not got any farm; that we are bankrupt; that we are mortgaged and about to go into bankruptcy.
> Oh, what a tangled web we weave
> When first we practice to deceive.

[Laughter.]

Mr. GREENE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. SHERMAN. I rise to a point of order. Debate on this amendment was exhausted something like an hour or two ago.

Mr. GREENE. I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think we ought to get along to another section.

Mr. GREENE. I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska is recognized.

Mr. GREENE. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me this is a kind of field day for the different States of the American Union. We have been having a sort of general "round-up" here about Ohio and Kansas and the effect of the Populist party being in power in the latter State. The gentleman on my right [Mr. CURTIS of Kansas] has depicted in horrifying terms what the Populists have done for the State of Kansas. I am proud to say that I stand before this House as coming from a State that gave the largest Populist majority of any State in the Union; a State every officer of which is a Populist save one, and he is a Bryan Democrat; a State with the smallest percentage of illiteracy of any State in the Union; a State which is the home of Mr. Bryan. I repeat, I am proud that I come from that State. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I am glad to say, too, that we took charge of the State when it had been in the hands of the Republican party from the time it was admitted to the Union, and I am proud in connection with that to say that we have put some of the leading Republicans of that State in the penitentiary since we took charge of its affairs. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.] When we got control of it, we found the State treasurer short in his accounts nearly $800,000, and he is now in the penitentiary, under the control of a Populist warden, doing time and studying "sound money" and how to preserve "national honor." [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

We found the auditor of the State in the hole for about $35,000. He is on the road to the penitentiary, where he, too, can join his fellows in their efforts to "preserve the credit of the State." We found every head of a State institution in the State, upon investigation by a committee appointed by a Populist legislature, to be short in his accounts. And that is not all. We found that the credit of the State had run down until State warrants were being hawked about the country for 94 and 95 cents on the dollar, and in one year under Populism Nebraska warrants are selling at 1½ cents premium. The school fund is no longer stolen, but is paid out to educate our children, and in the management of our State institutions thousands of dollars have been saved to the taxpayers, and the statehouse has ceased to be a den of thieves.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GREENE. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Does my friend intend to tell the Republican majority here that the Republican majority in Nebraska did not maintain the public credit?

Mr. GREENE. That is what I said.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And when the Populists came in afterwards they did maintain the public credit?

Mr. GREENE. I mean to say that they did not only fail to maintain the public credit, but they stole the State blind from Dan to Beersheba [laughter], and I am here to say, in the language of the poet, that we have not only put lots of them in the penitentiary, but "still there's more to follow." [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Chairman, I crave the indulgence of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs while I make reply to the remarks of my colleague [Mr. GREENE]. In our State, as in other States of the Union, the average Populist is full of cyclone. [Laughter.] He makes a good deal of fuss, and by fooling the people part of the time he aspires and is elected to office, but after the people open their eyes and see anew they stop the imposition.

Now, what the gentleman has said in reference to two of the State officials of Nebraska is partially true. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] However, he might criticise some of the present State officials, who are Populists, without missing the truth. A few Republican officials in Nebraska—less than half a dozen—have violated our laws, and in so doing have injured the Republican party temporarily, but, thanks to Republican officials and a Republican sentiment, those same officials have been prosecuted and sent to the penitentiary.

A county treasurer in my home county was found to be a defaulter, but, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of this House, a Republican county attorney and a Republican court sent him to the penitentiary for a term of years. [Applause on the Republican side.] The State treasurer of our State did embezzle some of the funds, but a Republican county official and a Republican court sent him to the penitentiary for twenty-one years. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GREENE. Is not the attorney-general a Democrat?

Mr. MERCER. Why, Mr. Chairman, the attorney-general of our State—and this is the first time the Populists have had an attorney-general—did bring suit against the bondsmen of the defaulting State treasurer, but he made such a miserable, blundering mess of it that he was laughed out of court and forced to begin the case de novo. He was so badly frightened that he took a day off to repair his fences. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GREENE. I want to ask you this question.

Mr. MERCER. I do not yield.

Mr. GREENE. Did not the supreme court sustain the attorney-general?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Chairman, the Republican officials of the State of Nebraska have left nothing undone to convict criminals within the party, and I am pleased to add that the Republicans of the State rejoice at their success. But as much can not be said of the Populist party in our State. Why, the Populists may talk about applying remedies, but they went and searched with dark lanterns in many counties last year to find Populists with crooked records to put them in nomination for county offices, and in two counties they discovered gay deceivers, men known to have violated one of the Ten Commandments, and they said they thought such men would run ahead of the ticket. They nominated and elected them and they did lead the ticket. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, just the other day the assistant to the superintendent of the deaf and dumb asylum at Omaha, Nebr., a good Populist, was found selling railroad transportation to obtain a few dollars—transportation given him by the State; and now he is under investigation by a Populist State board which has spent $10,000 investigating trumped-up charges against Republican officials, and will most likely ask for another appropriation to defend this erring brother [laughter]; and, mind you, he was a new importation from the State of Kansas. [Renewed laughter.] I could cite you a great many cases in the State of Nebraska, if I had time, where Populist officials have either been embezzlers or have been short in their accounts, and wherever Populist county attorneys were in office they never prosecuted a case. I think they lie awake at nights hoping these men will escape liability. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I love my State, and I respect her people, and I am free to add that, irrespective of politics, her people, for intelligence, sobriety, good morals, and good government, take rank with any State in the Union. I do not think any political party should be placed on a par with an erring member, but I also feel that no guilty man should escape. In saying this I represent the Republican party of Nebraska. I notice this difference in our State between Republican and Populist officials: When a Republican officeholder violates the laws within the jurisdiction of other Republican officials, he is prosecuted and punished as he should be; but when a Populist officeholder commits the same offense, but under the jurisdiction of Populist officials, he is permitted to go scot-free.

Mr. Chairman, in our State, unfortunately, the Populist party is in power. We have fusion there, but the affliction is only temporary. Last year we decreased the majority in our State 12,000 over the year when Mr. Bryan was running for President; and while at the time of the Presidential election the Republicans were in power, last year the Populists had full control of all the State institutions and were strongly intrenched in half the counties of the State.

But, Mr. Chairman, there are some things that I can charge against Populist officials in our State which time will not allow——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MERCER. I ask five minutes more.

Mr. GREENE. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks that his time be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Chairman, unfortunately, in our State we have a crime that we can charge against some Populist officials for which we have no remedy in law, and that is incompetency. [Laughter.] They have so badly mismanaged the positions they occupy, from the county superintendency up to the office of governor, and from the office of governor down again, and the people are becoming so tired of the situation, that I think I can frankly promise you that when the election is held this year we will redeem the State of Nebraska and make it once more a Republican State. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GREENE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the paragraph.

Mr. SHERMAN. I raise a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

A MEMBER. Oh, let Nebraska have the floor.

Mr. GREENE. Mr. Chairman, I think I am entitled to the floor. I moved to strike out the last word.

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not hear the gentleman's motion. I want to have this matter go along in order that we may at some time in the future get through.

Mr. GREENE. Mr. Chairman, in the reply of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MERCER] to the statements I have made, the only thing he does is to add an additional fact, and that is the embezzlement by a Republican treasurer of Douglas County of a large sum of public money. I did not mention that, for I had forgotten it. The fact is these cases of Republican stealing are so numerous that I overlooked some, and so I thank my friend from Douglas County for bringing it to the attention of the House.

The only thing that he brings up is a case in Saunders County, where a Populist was nominated and a Republican charged him with the crime of adultery. Republicans fell over one another in order to cast their votes for him as soon as they heard that. [Laughter.] They always do when they hear that there is something wrong with a candidate.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman permit one question? I want to inquire if this is an advertisement for the Trans-Mississippi Exposition? [Laughter.]

Mr. GREENE. I want to say that is the only thing that the gentleman from Nebraska brings in rebuttal to what I have said. One man out there, he says, was charged with the crime of adultery and was elected. Of course he was. You could not have kept a Republican from voting for him, because when they found there was something wrong with him that was enough for the average Nebraska Republican. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] My friend says that the people are so disgusted with Populism in Nebraska that they will never go into power again in that State. I want to tell him that instead of having four Populists from Nebraska in the next Congress there will be six. [Cries of "Please don't!" from the Republican side.]

Yes, we are going to do it. Now, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MERCER] says the attorney-general of our State was so incompetent that the case against Bartley fell down. I want to say that a Republican district judge ruled that he had no case in court, but the attorney-general took it to the Republican supreme court, and that court held that the attorney-general was right and reversed the Republican district judge. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I want to say to you gentlemen that Nebraska is Populist for all time to come. [Jeers on the Republican side.] Nebraska is for Bryan, and the country will be for Bryan in 1900. The country is tired of this shilly-shally Administration.

Mr. MERCER. Is Bryan a Populist?

Mr. GREENE. He is not a Republican, thank God. [Applause on the Democratic side.] In answer to the interrogatory of my friend from Iowa [Mr. PERKINS] as to whether this is an advertisement for the Trans-Mississippi Exposition, I want to say that it is not particularly so. I also say to you that when you come out to the Trans-Mississippi Exposition you will realize all the beauties and glories of the State of Nebraska under Populism as it has been described here by myself and the gentleman from Douglas County, and we will promise, if possible, to have on exhibition some relic of a now almost extinct race in Nebraska—a Republican. [Great laughter.]

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Mr. Chairman, we have heard from the calamity side of the House, and I desire now to direct your attention to the industrial situation in the State of Michigan, which I in part have the honor to represent upon this floor. Our State has been governed by the Republican party for more than a quarter of a century. It has never withheld its electoral vote from the party of protection and equal rights. I desire to say in behalf of my State that her industries were never more prosperous in its history than they have been during the last eight months of McKinley's Administration. Our factories are all running, labor is generally and steadily employed, the farmer is getting good prices for his products, and a general air of prosperity prevails among all classes of our people. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the good governor of our State, who our Populistic friends on the other side of the Chamber frequently mention with some hope, but, as I can confidently say, with little expectation that he may ever champion their foolish notions, caused the labor commissioner of Michigan to take the census of our towns and cities, and he has just made his report, which shows that in over 200 villages and cities of our State there is not a single unemployed man to-day who is willing and desires work. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I represent the largest furniture manufacturing city in the world, a city that has over sixty large furniture manufactories, a city that employs thousands of skilled laborers in making furniture that is sold all over the civilized world. Buyers have just made their semiannual pilgrimage from the East, and the South, and the West. They have not only come from New York and New England, but from Kansas, and Missouri, and Nebraska, and are now on their way home after having made purchases of our handiwork larger than ever before in the history of the furniture trade in the city of Grand Rapids. [Applause.]

I say, then, for the benefit of the Populist calamity howlers, that there has not been such industrial activity in our State since the last Republican Administration went out of office. The nightmare of the Wilson bill has now been thrown off, and prosperity has promptly returned with the American policy of protection rewritten in our national law. [Applause.]

It must be to your political disadvantage to admit what is so apparent to the honest observer. You thrive best where calamity prevails; therefore Populism does not take root in the State of Michigan, upon whose soil the Republican party was born and to whose principles our people have ever been true, where prosperity at this moment penetrates the humblest home of every citizen in the Commonwealth. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HEPBURN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6896) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 25, 1898.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. QUAY, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. It will take but a moment, I suppose.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

INDEMNITY TO STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. QUAY. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1225) to indemnify the State of Pennsylvania for money expended in 1864 for militia called into the military service by the governor under the proclamation of the President of June 15, 1863.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to reexamine and reaudit the claim of the State of Pennsylvania for money expended in 1864 in liquidating the indebtedness incurred by the governor and Secretary of War for militia called into the military service under the proclamation of the President of June 15, 1863, and to fully indemnify the State for the money expended: Provided, That the amount to be paid to the State of Pennsylvania under the provisions of this act shall not exceed the sum of $46,345.26: And provided further, That the amount found due be paid out of the unexpended balance of the appropriation made by act of Congress approved April 12, 1863, for the payment of said militia, which is hereby reappropriated, if the same is not available.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I observe by the last clause of the bill that this is the reappropriation of an indefinite sum of money.

Mr. QUAY. No; the Senator from Iowa is mistaken. It is not an indefinite sum. The amount is limited to $46,345.46.

Mr. ALLISON. In the bill itself?

Mr. QUAY. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. I notice that the appropriating clause authorizes the payment to be made of rather an indefinite appropriation, not to exceed the sum of $46,000. Do I understand the Senator correctly?

Mr. QUAY. Yes, sir. The objection may be absolutely met by an amendment, to which I do not object, inserting, after the word "reappropriated," in the eighteenth line on the second page, the words "to the amount hereinbefore stated." That will make it read:

Which is hereby reappropriated to the amount hereinbefore stated.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. QUAY. That is embraced in the preceding proviso.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know that any amendment is necessary. I did not know that there was a limitation in the text of the bill.

Mr. QUAY. Very well; I will withdraw the amendment and let it go through without amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VENEZUELA AND BRITISH GUIANA BOUNDARY LINE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

Mr. TURPIE presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Vanderburg County, Ind., remonstrating against the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the memorial of H. H. Ragon, publisher of the Lowell Tribune, of Lowell, Ind., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Loud bill, relating to second-class mail matter; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented the memorials of R. T. Vent and 18 other citizens, of O. B. Anderson and 52 other citizens, of John W. Steel and 18 other citizens, of J. E. Poor and 18 other citizens, of S. T. Townsend and 19 other citizens, of E. T. White and 18 other citizens, of W. R. Stone and 18 other citizens, of H. W. Ruton and 18 other citizens, of A. H. Grafftey and 18 other citizens, of G. R. Spinney and 18 other citizens, of J. D. Salkeld and 19 other citizens, of J. Hanley and 15 other citizens, of M. Warner and 18 other citizens, of E. J. Rall and 18 other citizens, of John T. Bullen and 18 other citizens, of W. P. Furey and 18 other citizens, of S. C. Simmons and 19 other citizens, of I. Haughton and 19 other citizens, of F. S. Howard and 19 other citizens, of Thomas Creamer and 26 other citizens, of W. C. McCready and 19 other citizens, of A. T. Miller and 19 other citizens, of E. E. Walker and 19 other citizens, of I. F. Boaz and 19 other citizens, of W. M. Kerr and 19 other citizens, of Ed Howell and 19 other citizens, of H. M. Read and 19 other citizens, of A. R. Frantz and 19 other citizens, of W. R. Smith and 19 other citizens, of S. A. Swiggett and 19 other citizens, of V. T. Willson and 19 other citizens, of J. W. Travis and 19 other citizens, of C. L. Ayers and 19 other citizens, and of F. Otten and other citizens, all in the State of Indiana, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called anti-scalping ticket bill or any similar measure; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Derry, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

DISTRICT WATER SUPPLY.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have a communication which was sent to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine, dated January 13, 1898, by the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service, relating to the pollution of water of the Potomac River, which I ask may be printed as a document, and, with the other documents, be referred to that committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

VALUE OF FINE GOLD BULLION.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent to have printed a letter of only a page and a half, from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury to me, giving the value of an ounce of fine gold bullion in England in United States gold coin and also here, and giving the calculation, and so on. I ask to have it printed as a separate document, and I hope it will be printed as soon as possible.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none, and that order will be made.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. KYLE. I am instructed by the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3051) to disapprove an act passed by the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, approved March 17, 1897, to submit an adverse report thereon.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I understand that that is not a unanimous report, and I ask that the bill may be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. BATE. We can not hear the Senator from Connecticut on this side.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut asks that the bill be placed upon the Calendar, inasmuch as the report is not a unanimous report from the committee. There being no objection, that will be the order.

Mr. CANNON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 736) granting a pension to James A. Southard, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PROCTOR, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1901) to place Lieut. Col. and Bvt. Maj. Gen. Alexander Stewart Webb on the retired list of the United States Army, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3307) to amend the act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 668) granting a pension to Francis E. Pease, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3286) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. E. S. Kelly, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3326) granting a pension to Cincinnatus Jeans, to submit an adverse report thereon and ask its indefinite postponement. This is a bill which proposes to put on the pension roll a teamster of the late war who did not perform any unusual service, so far as the committee can discover.

The bill was indefinitely postponed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 327) granting a pension to Lucy F. Watson, widow of Joseph W. Melton, deceased, to submit an adverse report thereon.

This is a bill that proposes to pension the widow of a soldier in the Missouri militia. That military organization not having been mustered into service, the soldiers themselves were not pension able, and the committee think it would be a bad precedent to commence pensioning the widows.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will permit the bill to go on the Calendar for consideration.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is the Senator's privilege to have it go to the Calendar. I will say to the Senator that the very distinguished and always courteous Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], who introduced the bill, was quite willing that it should be reported adversely if the committee thought such action was proper.

Mr. ALLEN. That is no reason why I should be willing.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly not. Let the bill go to the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will take its place on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. ALLEN. I wanted to say just one word.

Mr. GALLINGER. The bill having gone to the Calendar, it strikes me that it ought not to be discussed. Let it be discussed when it is taken up.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not want to discuss it. If I can not make the statement here, if the Senator from New Hampshire is getting so nervous that he does not want me to say anything——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I raise the point of order that discussion is not in order, the bill having gone to the Calendar.

Mr. ALLEN. I will take occasion to say something further along.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have raised the point of order, and I would like to have it ruled upon.

Mr. ALLEN. I am very thankful for the courtesy of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will take its place on the Calendar.

Mr. QUAY. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6546) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, to report it with amendments, and to submit a report thereon. I desire also to give notice that to-morrow at the close of the morning business I shall ask the Senate to place the bill upon its passage.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. From the Committee on Indian Affairs I report back favorably an amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] to the Indian appropriation bill. With it is a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, and also one from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I do not think it very important, as the matter has already been incorporated in the bill by the House of Representatives, but I report the amendment back favorably, and ask that it may go, without printing, to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection.

WILKINSON CALL.

Mr. LODGE. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 92) for the relief of Wilkinson Call, late United States Senator from the State of Florida, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the public documents assigned to Wilkinson Call, late a Senator of the United States, for distribution during his terms of service be delivered to him or subject to his order, the clerk of the committee of which he was chairman having been unable, from sudden and severe illness, to complete the distribution of them before the time limited in the law expired.

Mr. VEST. It seems to me that the word "be" should be inserted before the words "subject to his order," so as to read "be delivered to him or be subject to his order."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. LODGE. I could not hear the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 5, before the word "subject," insert the word "be;" so as to read:

For distribution during his terms of service be delivered to him or be subject to his order.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTUS. I should like to inquire whether this has been the custom of the Senate?

Mr. VEST. It has been done. It might be better that the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] should be here, but it has been done within my recollection several times. Both Senators and Representatives have had their documents left over assigned to them. I never knew any objection to be made by the successor, but it probably would be better if the junior Senator from Florida were present.

Mr. LODGE. I consulted Senator Call's successor before reporting the joint resolution, and he told me he had no objection to it.

Mr. VEST. It is all right, then.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. ALLEN introduced a bill (S. 3385) to increase minimum pensions, and for other purposes, which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask that the bill be read at length.

The bill was read the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Pensions, as follows:

Mr. BURROWS introduced a bill (S. 3396) to amend section 1225 of the Revised Statutes, so as to provide for the detail of officers of the Army and Navy to assist in military instruction in the public schools; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MCMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 3397) to provide for completing the system of sewage disposal and protection against floods in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to Senate concurrent resolution No. 22, declaring that all bonds issued or authorized to be issued under certain acts of Congress are payable, principal and interest, at the option of the Government, in silver dollars, etc.; which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. ALLEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. PETTIGREW submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FORAKER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

THE RURAL FREE DELIVERY SYSTEM.

Mr. BUTLER. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the Post-Office appropriation bill. I ask that it be read.

The proposed amendment was read, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. BUTLER to the bill (H. R. ——) entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes."

Under head "Office of Second Assistant Postmaster-General" insert:

"For experimental free rural delivery, under the direction of the Postmaster-General, at offices in rural communities and at small offices in towns and villages not having the requirements of population and revenue under existing law, $250,000: Provided, That these experiments shall be extended to every State and Territory, and to as many different sections of each State and Territory as possible: And provided further, That the Postmaster-General is authorized to expend such sum or sums of this appropriation, not exceeding $10,000, as he may deem necessary for experimenting with postal boxes or other accommodations to facilitate the delivery of mail in rural districts."

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, in asking the reference of the amendment to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads I ask the attention of the Senate for a moment to the fact that each year since I have been a member of this body I have offered an amendment to the Post-Office appropriation bill providing for experimental rural free delivery. These experiments were made under the last Administration and under the present Administration. The appropriation commenced with $30,000; the next year it was $40,000; and last year it was $50,000. The report from every place where the experiments have been made is highly satisfactory. There has not been a word of complaint, but all the patrons of offices where the experiments have been made are greatly pleased with the system on trial and ask that the service be continued and extended.

I have a report from the last Postmaster-General, Mr. Wilson, and one from the present Postmaster-General on these experiments. I ask the attention of the Senate to one paragraph of the report of the present Postmaster-General. No one has ever made any objection to this proposed system except the one of cost. This is what the Postmaster-General says:

The question as to the net cost of rural free delivery is at nearly all points complicated by considerations as to the possibility of discontinuing other service with which the rural delivery to some extent comes in conflict. So long as the system remains a tentative one, and until the intentions of Congress as to its perpetuation become known, it has been thought the part of wisdom to "make haste slowly" in the abolition of other service which it might be found necessary to resume soon after its discontinuance. Hence the results of the experiment, from a pecuniary point of view, have not in many instances been as satisfactory as they could easily be made if the service were established on a permanent basis. The uncertainties of the situation have acted like a spring frost on blossoming fruits and have checked many buds of promise.

I have read that to call the attention of the Senate and Congress to the fact that these experiments have been highly satisfactory and successful, and that we are now near the point when we must abandon the system altogether or extend it and make it permanent. No one questions the desirability of such a service, and the only element in considering the matter favorably is the element of cost.

The Postmaster-General states that with the experiments conducted so far no fair estimate can be made of the cost, because services that are now in operation must be continued, unless he knew that this system would be made permanent, when the expense would be greatly reduced.

The amendment I have offered proposes an appropriation of $250,000 for one more experiment, which experiment should and no doubt will be final. The amendment has been drawn after full consultation with the Postmaster-General; and it is his opinion that $250,000 will enable him to make an experiment in every State in the Union and in different sections of every State; that is, he would be able to make the experiment in four or five different localities, covering the different sections and divisions of each State. With such an experiment in every State and every Territory in the Union he will be in a position to make a recommendation to Congress as to making the system permanent and a nearer estimate as to cost.

The Department, however, as we see from the report both in the last Administration and in this, are very much in favor of the system if Congress is ready to appropriate the necessary money. This appropriation, it is true, is quite large for an experiment, but it is necessary if the experiment is to be thoroughly made and if Congress is to have the fullest information before embarking upon this important reform, which would be a blessing to every family in America.

I ask the attention of the Senate to a few extracts from the letters written by citizens where the experiments have been made, which are a sample of the whole lot now in the possession of the Post-Office Department recommending this system.

The following are extracts, taken at random, from letters from different States:

If those who live in the cities can appreciate free delivery, how much more can those do so who live in the country, 8 or 10 miles from a post-office? During the busy season it will certainly save a good many days' work to the farmer. I hope it may continue.

This short letter is an attempt to give utterance to our appreciation of the free mail delivery. There is no loss of time after the mail arrives at Tempe before it is delivered carefully and kindly. Not only the loss of time in going for the mail each day but also the worry and anxiety are thus saved. Our only fear is that the service will be discontinued.

We are much pleased with the free-delivery system. It is an improvement that could not be fully appreciated till tried.

I am more than ever proud of being an American citizen, and gratefully appreciate the benefit the farmers of Tempe are receiving from the rural delivery system. I live 3½ miles from the Tempe post-office, and have been sick for a week past, yet my mail is brought to my door every morning except Sunday. I hope the Government is satisfied that the experiment is a grand success, for I assure you that we "hayseeds" (as we are sometimes dubbed) are more than pleased with the system. It looks as if "Uncle Sam" had at last turned his eye in our direction and had determined to help the farmer.

The service has proved to be an absolute success in every respect. Rather than be deprived of the great benefits they have received from it, the patrons say they would willingly defray the expense themselves.

In my opinion free delivery will stop the farmer from going to town after his mail when he should be at home at work. It will help him to economize in living, to increase his business, and to advance in prosperity. I would be glad to pay an additional amount of postage for the additional transportation charges, if necessary to do so.

I have been told that you would like to hear from the people benefited by your free delivery. If you should find anybody that is dissatisfied, I wish you would send them to me. I should like to see what they look like. Wishing the experiment all the success it deserves, etc.

We have often hitherto been without mail for a week, and now that we get our mail every day, we feel that we are in the world.

A daily rural postal delivery means a wider range of reading for the people who live in the country, and that (if it be the proper kind of reading) means education. A daily delivery brings the people of the country into closer touch with the people of the cities and towns. It gives the farmer daily information concerning the markets upon which he relies to sell the products of his farm. Many advantages not now apparent would accrue to the people of the country if a permanent system were established.

I am greatly pleased with the present system. I now get my mail fresh every day. Heretofore I would either have to send or make a special trip to town (a distance of 4 miles) to get it, and the reading matter would often get so old it would not be interesting. Now I can answer my correspondents promptly, can take a daily paper if I choose, and get the paper fresh and newsy every day instead of four or five in a bunch, as would often occur under the old system. Rather than have free delivery discontinued I would suggest hiring a private carrier, and would be willing to pay my part of the expense.

I hardly know how to express myself about the free delivery without saying too much. It will, if continued, save me several hundred miles' travel in the course of a year, besides collecting my mail daily.

I call special attention to the following. It was evidently written by a very intelligent person and contains a very important suggestion. It is from a person where an experiment has been made in reply to a request from the Postmaster-General asking for the opinion of the patrons of the service. He says:

This removes one of the disadvantages of country life, as we can now have a daily paper. I believe if the system were continued, it would induce more people to live in the country. It would also increase the circulation of newspapers and tend to educate people up to the times. Education is the foundation of our Government, and the free distribution of mail is a long step in the right direction. The expense can cut but little figure. It simply will put the money in circulation among our own people. I am a farmer, living 10 miles from Loveland, and naturally very much in favor of free delivery.

The next one is from a lady, who says:

You wish to know how I like the free delivery. I think it a very nice thing. We can now be a little more like city folks, and have our mail fresh instead of stale. So all I can say is, keep the good work going.

This amendment contemplates a little more than rural free delivery. Under the present law no town can have free delivery unless it has a population of 10,000 or the post-office established there yields a certain amount of revenue. Small villages and towns which do not come up to that requirement are to-day deprived of free delivery, just as the rural population is. This amendment directs the Postmaster-General to make the experiment in towns having less than 10,000 inhabitants, as well as in country districts.

I ask that the amendment be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made, in the absence of objection.

POSTAL TELEGRAPHS, TELEPHONES, AND SAVINGS BANKS.

Mr. BUTLER. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk and ask that it be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the message of the President to the Senate, under date of December 18, 1897, relating to postal telegraphs, telephones, and postal savings banks, and the twenty-five replies from our diplomatic representatives referred to in said message, the original copies of which are now on file in the Committee on Printing and have not been printed, together with Senate resolution No. 150, Fifty-fifth Congress, first session, passed on July 8, 1897, directing the Secretary of State to send out circular letter to our diplomatic representatives abroad, asking for information on the above subjects, and the circular letter of instructions sent by the Secretary of State, under date of July 17, 1897, be printed as a Senate document and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. And the Senate Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads is hereby authorized and directed to secure the services of a competent translator and to have translated into English such of said replies from our diplomatic representatives as are in foreign languages before said document is printed, and that the expenses incurred be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. BUTLER. I suppose that the resolution will have to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and I hope to get an early report, for this document was sent in on the 17th day of December. A number of replies are in foreign languages, Spanish, German, French, and so on. I have requested the Department to have it translated, and I have a letter from the Secretary of State, just sent to me, stating that it will be six or seven weeks before the State Department can have time to have the matter translated. The information is desired for the purpose of the Senate in considering the postal savings bank bill, now under consideration before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and to-morrow that committee will give its entire time to the consideration of that bill. As I have stated, this document has been here since the 17th day of December and has not been printed. It is necessary to secure a translation of certain papers and have them all printed, so as to get all this matter before the committee at an early day.

I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I should like to have the resolution once more read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be again read.

The Secretary read the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution has been referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. On January 5 the Senate passed a resolution ordering the documents referred to in the resolution which has just been sent to the Committee on Contingent Expenses to be printed. At that time it was not known that there were a number of replies in foreign languages, and I had requested the Secretary's office to hold up the order until we could get the Department of State to have the replies translated. But the Secretary of State has replied that the translation can not be done by the Department for six weeks. Therefore I ask that the previous order be rescinded, and that the resolution adopted to-day stand in its stead.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, that will be the order.

MEMORIAL OF R. LACEY EVERETT.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent for the printing as a document, for the information of the Senate, of a memorial by R. Lacey Everett, which was submitted to the royal commission in England, with regard to the decline in agricultural prices.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota? The Chair hears none; and that will be the order.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

A bill (H. R. 2283) in relation to taxes and tax sales in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 2524) for the protection of birds, preservation of game, and for the prevention of its sale during certain closed seasons in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 5526) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to convey a certain lot in the District of Columbia to John H. Gause and others;

A bill (H. R. 6542) for the relief of Eldred G. Davis; and

A bill (H. R. 6954) to regulate plumbing and gas-fitting in the District of Columbia.

ADULTERATION OF FOODS AND DRUGS IN THE DISTRICT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 471) entitled "An act relating to the adulteration of foods and drugs in the District of Columbia," which were, on page 1, line 8, to strike out all after the word "act" down to and including line 11; on page 2, in section 3, line 15, after the word "prosecution," to insert "under this act;" and on page 4, in line 65, to strike out all after the word "ash" down to and including the word "cereal," in line 66.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the amendments made by the House of Representatives, and ask a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. MCMILLAN, and Mr. FAULKNER were appointed.

UNDISTRIBUTED PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. TURNER. I introduce a joint resolution and ask unanimous consent for its consideration at this time.

The joint resolution (S. R. 94) relating to the undistributed quotas of the Official Records of the Union and Confederate Navies in the War of the Rebellion was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the undistributed quotas of the Official Records of the Union and Confederate Navies in the War of the Rebellion, which were to the credit of Senators and Members of Congress whose terms of service expired on the 4th of March, 1897, and who, not being reelected, failed to distribute their entire quotas before the first Monday in December, 1897, shall be placed to the credit of the successors of those Senators and Members; and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to send such undistributed quotas to such libraries, organizations, and individuals as may be designated by the above-mentioned Senators and Members of Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PERKINS. If the morning business is closed, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of House bill 4303, being the bill making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4303) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the point of order made by the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] that the amendment is not in order. The Chair sustains the point of order, the amendment, in the opinion of the Chair, being obnoxious to both sections 3 and 4 of Rule XVI.

Mr. ALLEN. I move to insert the word "eight" after the word "forty," in line 2, on page 2 of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 2, after the word "forty," it is proposed to insert the word "eight;" so as to read "$148,000,000."

Mr. ALLEN. I move that amendment for the purpose of making the appropriation comply with the estimate of the Interior Department. I do not know that I have anything to say on this measure more than I said yesterday, but I think it due that I should now say something on another measure.

Bills have been introduced to pension those who served in the Missouri Militia during the late war, and when interrupted by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] I was about to say, from personal knowledge, that the Missouri Militia were in the field constantly, and were a very efficient branch of the Army during the late war. I think they should be pensioned and placed on an equality with all other volunteer soldiers; and I hope the Committee on Pensions, to whom many bills for that purpose have gone, will report them favorably, or at least report a general bill which will admit all such soldiers to the pension list.

The amendment I now offer is within the estimate made by the Interior Department. I think it ought not to go to the country that we are making an appropriation below the amount estimated and by that means create the impression that our pension appropriation is decreasing. We know as a matter of fact that it is practically at a standstill, and probably it will decrease in the course of a very few years owing to the age of many pensioners.

While I am on this subject, Mr. President, I will read as expressing the sentiment of the old soldiers a letter I received from one of my constituents last night after the adjournment of the Senate. The letter is from A. N. Coffey, commander of Grand Army Post No. 47, Department of Nebraska, located at Tecumseh. It is as follows:

TECUMSEH, NEBR., January 21, 1898.

DEAR SIR AND COMRADE: While my political faith is not in accordance with yours, I know a right and just thing when I see it, and as commander of Post No. 47, Department of Nebraska, Grand Army of the Republic, I take pleasure in extending to you my thanks and the thanks of the old soldiers of this part of Nebraska for the stand you have taken in your resolution recently introduced in the Senate, because we can see back of Mr. Evans's ruling the fact that last year 36,000 of the old boys died. Next year there will probably be more than that number pass over the dark river, and Mr. Evans will be saved the trouble of acting on their claims at all. So we consider the ruling an outrage on justice.

Yours, respectfully, A. N. COFFEY,
Commander Post No. 47, Nebraska Grand Army of the Republic.

Hon. W. V. ALLEN.

I have another letter, which I also received last night after adjournment, but will not read in full, expressing the opinion of a man who served in the Army, descriptive of the condition of one of the Government's pensioners. Speaking of this gentleman, in a letter dated Creighton, Nebr., January 20, 1898, addressed to me, the writer says:

I have known him for over forty years. I was raised beside him at Independence, Iowa, and was a mere boy when he went into the Army. He was in the Twenty-seventh Iowa Infantry, and served his time honorably, came home, and has since been an honorable, hard-working man.

Mr. President, this gentleman served in a regiment which was brigaded with my regiment for two years and a half during the war.

He married late in life and now has a family of six children, the oldest, a girl, is in her fifteenth year, and the wife is far from being a healthy, robust woman. During the past few years from one cause and another, doubtless in part from bad judgment, he has lost every dollar he was worth, and to-day he and his family are almost objects of charity. To me it matters not whether it was through bad judgment or not that he lost his property; the fact that he was a soldier and served his country honorably should insure him against want.

He is now 66 years of age and is a wreck, unable to perform any manual labor. He receives $6 per month pension and has applied for an increase. He has heard nothing from it since last May, and it is with the hope that I can interest you in pushing his claim that I have consented to write you. You can imagine how one feels for an old family friend in a case like this, when he knows he is entitled to so much more than he has ever received; and further, it makes one feel all the keener when he looks around and sees others who are well fixed and enjoying excellent health receiving large pensions.

The gentleman then goes on to express his view of the policy being pursued by the present Pension Commissioner.

Of course, Mr. President, I do not hope or expect to induce the Senate to increase the pension appropriation, not because it would not be right to do so, not because the millions who are entitled to recognition by the Government are not in need and their claims just, but because a party decree has gone forth that pensions must cease or must not exceed the present limit. I shall say what I think I ought in behalf of this class of our people. I shall not ask any gentleman whether it will suit his preferences for me to express my opinion or not. I shall be pleased if my remarks meet his approval, and not particularly chagrined if they do not. I now insist on my amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. PERKINS. I will state that the Senator from Nebraska is mistaken when he says that the Department recommended more than $140,000,000. That was the amount contained in the Book of Estimates, submitted by the Secretary of the Interior, and later concurred in by the Commissioner of Pensions. Your committee, Mr. President, carefully considered the testimony submitted at the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations in the House of Representatives; they were also in receipt of communications from the Commissioner of Pensions; and after fully considering them, they recommended the full amount that the Secretary of the Interior had recommended, to wit, $140,000,000 for pensions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899. Therefore, in accordance with the instructions that I received from the committee, that I should raise the point of order when any question was presented here that was contrary to the rules of the Senate, I now raise the point of order against the amendment under rule 16, line 5, which reads:

And no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments.

I make the point that the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska is contrary to the provisions of that rule and in violation of it.

Mr. ALLEN. Just a word, Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from California. Turning to the debate of yesterday as it appears in the RECORD, on page 986, the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] quoted from the testimony of the Commissioner of Pensions before the House Committee on Appropriations, an estimate, in this language:

The Secretary of the Interior thought we had better make the same estimate. But I have got the figures here on which I base my estimate.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you going to take the position we ought to appropriate $148,000,000, or are you satisfied to let us appropriate the amount named by the Secretary?

Mr. EVANS. Well, you are going to have a deficiency this year, and you know that just as well as I do. We had a deficiency last year.

So it would appear that Mr. Evans desired an appropriation of $148,000,000. That was the claim he made before the House Committee on Appropriations. The fact that on the Book of Estimates, as it is called, a different sum has been entered does not determine the amount of the estimate. It is a mysterious thing that around here no person has ever been able to see this document called the Book of Estimates except a select few. I do not know where it is kept. It is probably under lock and key, or perhaps a high-priced special custodian has it in charge, for no Senator outside the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on Pensions, or some other committee to whom has been delegated the high and delicate duty of handling the finances of the nation has ever been able to locate or to see it. The Senator from California, very much as a Turk would quote from the Koran, quotes from it from memory.

He does not give us the book or put it on exhibition, but reads from it, then, presumably, locks it up in his desk, and quotes from his recollection of its contents. I should like to see this mysterious thing called the Book of Estimates, and in the plenitude of his goodness I hope the Senator from California will give us a dissertation on how the book is made; who made it; when, where, and all about it.

Of course I am not in a position to enforce the rules. Were my position changed to that of presiding officer I would determine the question quickly. But I can not lose sight of the fact, neither shall I let the country lose sight of it, so far as my word may be read, that there is no merit whatever in the objection. There is not even a poor pretense of merit. It is simply an attempt to draw the attention of the country away from the important fact that the Republican party is insincere in its professions of friendship for and its promises to the soldier.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I simply desire to say to my friend from Nebraska that the Commissioner of Pensions, as he well knows, is subordinate to the Secretary of the Interior. The Secretary of the Interior makes up the Book of Estimates. Parenthetically, I will say that the Senator is as well aware as I am that he has but to send to the document room and there obtain the Book of Estimates. It is as free to him as to any other Senator upon this floor. I have sent to the document room and now take great pleasure in sending the book to the Senator for his information.

The official heads, as the Senator well knows, of the various Departments of the Government pass upon the information furnished by their respective Departments for the expenses during the ensuing year, and on those they appear before Congress asking for appropriations. It seems to me that there is no other guide upon which we can intelligently act except the information furnished by the heads of Departments.

The Senator from Nebraska, I am sure, did not serve his purpose in this case. He would not consider for a moment the recommendation of the Commissioner of Pensions or of the Commissioner of the General Land Office or of the Commissioner of Patents or any other officer under the control of the Secretary of the Interior who is subordinate to the head of that Department, but he would say, "There is the head of the Department, and we must be guided in the matter by his judgment and advice." I also desire to say to him that this testimony was given under date of December 6, I think. Later, under date of January 10, he wrote the Committee on Appropriations, stating that the amount proposed to be appropriated, to wit, $140,000,000, for the army and navy pensions was entirely satisfactory to him. Later he wrote again to the committee, under date of January 20, reiterating that statement

Therefore I hope the motion will not prevail. I think the point of order is well taken, but I am perfectly willing that the Senate should give expression upon this subject-matter, and if they desire to exceed the appropriations asked for by the heads of the different Departments of our Government, it will be a precedent which perhaps will guide us in the future. If you have not sufficient confidence in your respective committees to believe that they have carefully investigated all the questions bearing upon the subject-matter and have given you the best result of their consideration, we will yield, of course, most cheerfully to the wishes of the majority.

I will withdraw the point of order so that my friend the Senator from Nebraska shall not say that I am trying to protect the committee in what he claims, by implication at least, is a superficial examination of this question.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a single observation. The Senator from Nebraska, during the debate yesterday and again this morning, seems to be trying to make it appear that in some way the present administration of the Pension Bureau is hostile to the interests of the soldiers, and he arraigns the Republican party for hypocrisy and double dealing on this question.

Facts are stubborn things; and in the discussion of a matter of this kind I have always heretofore endeavored, as I shall in the future, to speak from the book. Since the Senator's arraignment yesterday I have taken the trouble to get some figures bearing on this subject. It will take but a moment to state them, and I trust the Senator from Nebraska will listen, although, of course, he will dispose of them as he usually does, without very much circumlocution.

The facts are that of the 319,407 original claims adjudicated for the three years, 1894, 1895, and 1896, there were 169,154 rejected, or just 60 per cent, while from April 1 to December 31, 1897, nine months of administration by the present Commissioner of Pensions, of the 75,366 original claims adjudicated only 31,031, or 41 per cent, were rejected, as against 60 per cent during the former administration of that office. For the first period, the three years named, there were 148,273 claims for increase adjudicated, of which 105,255, or 71 per cent, were rejected, while during the second period, from April 1 to December 31, 1897, there were 35,461 claims for increase adjudicated, of which only 20,132 were rejected, or 57 per cent, against 71 per cent under the former administration of the Pension Bureau.

It is but just that the present Commissioner of Pensions should have the benefit of this statement, which is from the records. Pensions to a much larger percentage, wisely or unwisely, are being granted under Commissioner Evans than were granted under the former most excellent Commissioners; because I am glad to testify to the fidelity of both Commissioner Lochren and Commissioner Murphy. But it is not, I think, proper that the Senator from Nebraska should arraign the present administration of that office, burdensome and irritating and troublesome as it is, without his going to the record and ascertaining the exact facts concerning it.

Just one word further. I am quite in sympathy with the point of order made by the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS]. The rule is clear and incapable of a double construction. The Senator's motion is obnoxious to that rule. But I think the Senator from California has acted wisely in withdrawing the point of order and allowing the Senate to determine the matter. If the Senate wants to exceed by $8,000,000 the appropriation that is estimated for by the Secretary of the Interior, I think the Senate ought to have the opportunity. For myself, I shall vote against it, of course, as I have no doubt a very large majority of the Senate will vote against it, because it would be an extraordinary piece of legislation for us to come in here, in the present condition of the public Treasury, and vote $8,000,000 more to a Department of this Government than the accredited head of that Department says he thinks ought to be granted. That is all I care to say.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire ought not to put me in the attitude of being hostile to the Commissioner of Pensions. I am not. My feelings toward the Commissioner are of the most pleasant kind. I have no conflict whatever with him. He is a very clever gentleman. I have, I think, met him twice in my life, and probably not to exceed two or three minutes each time.

But I refer to the Commissioner of Pensions because he is the agent or instrumentality through which the Republican Administration is administering the Pension Office. I have no doubt that the President is heartily in sympathy with just and equitable pensions to all needy persons who are pensionable under the laws, and that he would, if within his power, enact a law that would cover all meritorious cases, and have pensions somewhat proportionate to the injury of the applicant or his degree of inability to earn a living.

I have no doubt of the sympathy of the Commissioner of Pensions for worthy soldiers and worthy applicants, and I am not saying anything personally against him, but speak of him as the administrator of the affairs of the Pension Office. What I wanted to say, and I may have been so unfortunate as not to express myself lucidly, is that the Republican party—the Republican machine, if I may be permitted to use the expression—is determined that the pension rolls shall not be increased; and it is doing everything possible to prevent an increase, to the injury, in my judgment, of those who are justly entitled to pensions, and larger pensions than they are receiving.

I would like to see the Republican party and the Republican machine have the courage of its convictions, and come out boldly and say what it really means, that "the pension list has reached its maximum and must not be increased. We will announce as one of the doctrines of the party that it shall not be increased;" and then everybody would understand exactly the attitude of the party. But, if my language does not grate upon the delicate sensibilities of some Senator, I want to add that in my judgment this Republican machine is Janus-faced. It professes to be piously committed to an increase of pensions and justice to the soldiers and sailors, their widows and orphans, while every act performed in an official capacity is to reduce the pensions and deny justice to that class of our citizens.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. BACON. I ask to have the amendment reported. It has been quite a while since it was read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 2, page 2, after the word "forty," it is proposed to insert the word "eight;" so as to read "$148,000,000."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish to offer another amendment. I am not disheartened thus far at the fate of my amendments. At the end of line 2, on page 3, I move to insert:

And the reports of such examining surgeons shall be open to inspection by the applicant for a pension, his agent, or attorney, and he may have attested copies thereof on demand.

The whole proviso then will read as follows:

Provided, That the report of such examining surgeons shall specifically state the rating which, in their judgment, the applicant is entitled to, and the reports of such examining surgeons shall be open to inspection by the applicant for a pension, his agent, or attorney, and he may have attested copies thereof on demand.

I wish to submit just a word in behalf of the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. With the Senator's permission, I should like to have the proposed amendment stated by the Secretary.

Mr. ALLEN. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the end of line 2, on page 3, the following:

And the reports of such examining surgeons shall be open to inspection by the applicant for a pension, his agent or attorney, and he may have attested copies thereof on demand.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the very first bill I introduced after coming here was in 1893 and entitled "A bill to furnish pensioners an opportunity to inspect all reports, examinations," etc. It was sent to the Committee on Pensions. It was in the Fifty-third Congress. It has never seen daylight; it has not been reported one way or another. In the Fifty-fourth Congress I reintroduced it. It has not been taken up for consideration, so far as I know; at least my attention has not been called to it, and it has not been reported. In the present Congress I introduced it again, and I have heard nothing from it.

The practice, as I understand it, is this: When a board of examining surgeons examine an applicant and make report to the Commissioner of Pensions, the report is filed, and the applicant is not permitted to inspect it. His attorney and agent are prohibited from inspecting it, and in fact it is very difficult for a member of Congress to obtain a view of it. I think the practice is wrong, or else our whole theory of administering justice is wrong, for we have always held that a man should have the right to hear the evidence against him in any kind of a trial, and where it is documentary that he shall have a right to an attested copy. Yet this star-chamber method of dealing with pensions is indulged in, as I am informed, for the purpose of forming a shield to examining surgeons who make reports adverse to worthy applicants. In other words, the examining surgeon does not want to take the consequences of his work and have it known in the community where he and the applicant live that he has made an adverse report.

Mr. President, you might as well say the decision of a judge should be entered in chambers and all persons be excluded from the record because one of the litigants might think the judge wrong in rendering the decision, or that the same kind of protection should be extended to a juror or an assessor of taxes.

An applicant may go to one of these examining boards, be examined, and a report be made without his knowing what it is. It will be filed in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions, where it is considered by him or his subordinates in determining whether or not the applicant is pensionable under the law. It may contain hidden thorns or daggers that strike the applicant, and yet he will not be permitted to see or examine the report, nor permitted to obtain competent evidence to refute the conclusions or statements of the report.

It does not seem to me that any man who has as much sense as a peewee could approve of a practice of that kind. Being unable to get this bill of mine reported—and I am not censuring the Senator from New Hampshire, for he is only one member of the committee—it would have been useless to go before the committee to present its merits, because men who hold the views I do on the subject of pensions are not wanted before the committee——

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Nebraska permit me?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Did the Senator ever make a request to be heard before the committee on that or any other bill and meet with refusal?

Mr. ALLEN. I did once on this bill, but the Senator from New Hampshire, I think, was not the chairman at that time. That, I think, was during the Fifty-third Congress.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was not then chairman of the committee.

Mr. ALLEN. No; I desire to exonerate the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to say to the Senator that certainly since I have been chairman of that committee no Senator or Member of the House has ever made a request to be heard before the committee that it has not been cordially and immediately granted.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not doubt the committee as now constituted would give me an opportunity to be heard on application, and I shall go thundering at the doors of the Committee on Pensions some of these days for a full and fair hearing on the merits of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Nebraska will always be welcome when he comes.

Mr. ALLEN. I was going to say that men who, like myself, hold what I suppose would be called extreme views on the pension question are not usually welcome guests around committees that have the affairs of pensioners in their hands.

I hold my views, sir, because they are the convictions of my mature manhood. They are not a mere mental spasm or guess. I hold that a government which will not protect those who have sustained injury and ill health in its defense to the extent that they can not care for themselves is not worthy of the protection of its citizens.

Mr. President, the policy of this Government fortunately has been until recently to reward this class of our citizens and those dependent upon them, their widows and orphans. What more pitiable sight can one witness than a maimed and crippled soldier, hobbling around on crutches, who has lost his limbs or health as the result of service in the defense of his country, seeking food, clothing, and shelter from the storm and going through life in that pitiable condition? We say we have sympathy for him, but men can not live on sympathy; they require bread; they require meat; they must have clothing and shelter.

What will appeal to the sympathy and arouse the sentiment of a true man more than the widow in her weeds whose husband lost his life in the service of his country or died as the result of disease or wounds contracted in the Army and over whom must be cast all her days the shadow and darkness of his death? What will arouse the feelings of an honest man and a true patriot more than that other picture which we see daily, that picture which displays to our view the little girls and boys found on the streets uncared for whose fathers died in the service of their country or who became incapacitated in the service to the extent that they are not financially able to care for them?

And still, in the light of these sad scenes and the circumstances that bereft the wife and the children of a husband and a father, his care, and his affection, the Republican party, of which I have spoken, that portion of it called the machine, has arrayed itself against the applicant for a pension, and the law officer having in charge the administration of this Bureau of the Government studiously refuses an inspection of the report made by the examining surgeon.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Nebraska will permit me, the Senator does not mean to say that that is a new thing inaugurated by the present Administration or the present Commissioner of Pensions?

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. GALLINGER. It existed during the last Democratic Administration, did it not?

Mr. ALLEN. It existed during the last Democratic Administration and through all the Republican Administrations that preceded it.

Mr. GALLINGER. And Democratic.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, certainly. The yellow fever was not a new thing last year. It came into some of the Southern States and swept off people by the hundreds. I suppose some gentleman will arise in the Chamber and say, "The yellow fever is all right; we have no particular objection to it, because it came here under a Democratic as well as a Republican Administration." That is a peculiar kind of logic, I must confess.

Mr. President, the Star Chamber Court of England existed under the reign of many kings. It was of years' standing. It was a menace to the liberty of English subjects. I suppose when it was at the zenith of its power, when it was doing its work of destruction, there were those in the British Parliament who said, "The Star Chamber Court is not a new thing; therefore, not being a new thing, it should not be objected to at this time."

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Nebraska will permit me, that was not the point I desired to make at all. The Senator was denouncing the Republican party because of this thing, and I simply wanted him to broaden his denunciation.

Mr. ALLEN. The Republican party is a party of high morality, professing great things, greater than the Populists profess. We are supposed, I presume, according to the opinion of some, to represent the common people, not those who have had illustrious lives, large fortunes, and extensive education. But the logic of the Senator from New Hampshire was that yellow fever having existed under several Administrations, therefore it should exist under this; that this star-chamber proceeding as respects the inspection of examining surgeons' returns having existed under Democratic Administrations and Republican Administrations, therefore it is excusable and proper under this.

I think that is the logical conclusion from the premises he himself has announced. No, Mr. President, there never was a tyrant upon a throne who did not have his apologists in parliament. Those who have oppressed and wronged the people in all ages were men who had their apologists in public places, in offices. Here, under consideration, is a rule that is ruinous to the rights of hundreds of thousands, yea, a million, old soldiers and sailors, and it finds its willing apologist in the Senate Chamber.

The Senator from New Hampshire, skillful and alert as he is at all times in debate, can not offer one reason in defense of this rule that he would be willing to have read and examined by pensioners and applicants under existing law. I look for the Senator or some other gentleman representing this bill to in some form raise another technical objection that there is something wrong with my amendment, that it is in violation of some rule, and by that means try to defeat it.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to inquire upon what authority he makes the statement that the Senator from New Hampshire can not give any reason for it?

Mr. ALLEN. Because I know that no reason exists.

Mr. GALLINGER. By what sort of mental telepathy has the Senator reached that conclusion? The Senator from New Hampshire has not yet had an opportunity to express his view of the Senator's amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. I know that a man can not jump 20 feet in the air. I know that that would be a physical impossibility, and I know it would be no greater impossibility than it would for the Senator from New Hampshire or for any other gentleman to give a reason for this rule; and therefore I assume he can not give it. If the Senator should tell me he could put on wings and fly to the sun or the moon, I would not believe him, notwithstanding the fact that I consider him a man of undisputed truth and veracity. There are some things which can not be done because they are impossibilities, moral impossibilities and physical impossibilities, and that would be one of the latter.

I was proceeding to say, Mr. President, when the Senator was kind enough to give me his attention, that I expect to see some one raise an objection to the proposed amendment. Why, Mr. President, the pensioners are to be fed on rules and precedents fresh from the Senatorial propagating garden. Every time anything is offered in the line of justice, some man who is determined they shall not receive justice at the hands of their Government will go into the dark caverns and recesses of the Chamber and dig out a precedent or a rule to prevent it.

And then we will hear this fall, from the hustings, a declaration by the advocates of this party, or the machine portion of the party, that they are in favor of justice and large pensions to the old soldiers; that they are the soldiers' friends and have stood by them in the past, and the soldiers must stand by the party now; that the naughty Democrats bequeathed rules and precedents to the Senate which they could not avoid or evade; the presiding officer had to apply them, and unfortunately it cut the soldiers out of a proper recognition.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nebraska relates to a matter that has been before the Pension Bureau for a long time, I have myself discussed it with more than one Commissioner of Pensions. I regret that the Senator from Nebraska has not made himself sufficiently well acquainted with the present Commissioner to go there and discuss with him these practical questions of administration of that great Bureau.

As I understand the matter, there are very valid and conclusive reasons why the amendment should not be adopted. It is a fact well known to those of us who have to deal with pension matters that the average old soldier labors under the misapprehension that whatever rating is given him by a local board is the amount of pension that he in right and justice should receive.

The fact is that the local boards are called upon to examine the pensioner or the applicant for a pension as to his physical disabilities and to make ratings upon the disabilities that they find existing. The question as to the incurrence of those disabilities in the line of duty in the war or as a consequence of service in the Army are not determined by that local board. The finding of the board is returned to Washington; it is taken into consideration with the other papers in the case; it is submitted to the sworn officers of the Government, the medical referee and his assistants of the Bureau, and they determine what portion of those disabilities, whether a part or all of them or none of them, can be attributed to army service, and rate the soldier accordingly.

Mr. President, if the pension agents of this country, numerous and pestiferous as they are—I do not apply that term to all of them, but many of them—urging the old soldiers on to ask for increases and to apply for original pensions, are permitted to go into the Pension Bureau and ransack those files; if the Government is to be put to the expense of making copies of those findings of the medical boards to be transmitted to the pensioners, to impress the pensioners in that way with the idea that they are being wronged because their board found them to be deserving of $20 a month, while the Bureau would rate them at only $10 a month, it must be conclusive to the mind of any reasonable man that that is something which ought not to be asked of the Pension Bureau.

Beyond that, there is a reason why the local examiner should be protected by the Government. I understood the Senator from Nebraska to say that a judge might with equal propriety ask that his opinion should be given in private and not made in public.

Mr. ALLEN. Or a jury's verdict.

Mr. GALLINGER. The comparison that the Senator has made is an unfortunate one. A judge does not practice law; he is not dependent for a living upon public sentiment; but the average country physician, acting as a sworn officer of the Government, examining the men to whom the Senator so eloquently and pathetically alludes—and they deserve it all—finds that he differs in opinion from the soldier, and he is constrained to make a report adverse to that soldier's claim. That report comes to Washington. It is sent back to the soldier. The physician gets perhaps $50 a year from the Government for the service that he renders the Government; it may be that he gets $100 a year. He makes enemies of the soldiers in his community by having this information conveyed to them. They are very earnest in the belief that they deserve this relief. The medical officers of the Government find that they do not deserve it. Immediately that poor country physician becomes the object of denunciation and calumny and persecution on the part of the man who feels that he has been wronged by the physician. I submit, Mr. President, with all due deference to the contrary opinion of the Senator from Nebraska, that the physician deserves protection in this matter, and that the Government would do him a very great wrong if the physician should not be protected.

As I said a moment ago, this matter has been discussed over and over again. It has been before every Commissioner of Pensions certainly since I have been in public life. The only men I have found extremely anxious to have this thing done, certainly the only men who have appealed to me, have been the men who are prosecuting these claims and getting a fee out of them. I think the Government has acted wisely in keeping certain documents that come to the Pension Bureau away from the public and acting upon them in the way in which they are being acted upon.

Mr. President, I join with the Senator from Nebraska in what he says about the soldiers. The Senator, which was his right under the rules of this body, spoke, I think, not very kindly yesterday because I did not chance to have served in the Army. The Senator did not inquire as to the reasons for that, and of course they could not be known to him. But that is a subject, Mr. President, that is not worthy of very serious thought. My sympathies have been with the soldiers and the widows of soldiers. My votes have been cast always in behalf of what I thought was reasonable pension legislation. As chairman of the Committee on Pensions of the Senate I have given my days and my nights and my Sundays to the consideration of pension bills. I have no regrets or apologies to make in that regard.

But after all, Mr. President, this matter, like all other matters, can be overdone; an appeal in behalf of the widow in her weeds and the child of a soldier in its sorrow and suffering can be overdrawn; because there are widows and widows; there are soldiers and soldiers. The best we can do, and all we ought to be asked to do, would be to protect the deserving so far as we can determine that they are deserving, and shape our legislation with a view to doing equal and exact justice to all deserving claimants under our pension laws.

I agree with the Senator from Nebraska that there is not an equality in this matter. The Commissioner of Pensions, with whom I had an interview this morning, and a very interesting interview, is especially exercised over the fact that there is not an equality in our pension laws or in the administration of the Pension Bureau, and that it is impossible to reach equalization and justice. One man gets $6 a month; another soldier, urged on by pension attorneys, making application after application, gets a larger amount than the man who is equally deserving with him.

I have on my table here somewhere an illustration of what is done on the part of some soldiers. Where a man has had during the past few years 23 medical examinations; the claim rejected, another application immediately made; the claim rejected, another application made; the claim rejected, another application made; and the Government put to the expense of a medical examination in all those cases without one tittle of new evidence of an increased disability in that case. It has run the gauntlet of 23 medical examinations and about 23 rejections at the Pension Bureau. Now, that man by his persistence, because he has a claim for increase pending now, will very likely after a time get a larger amount of pension than he is receiving, and a larger amount than the modest man who says, "I do not want to press this matter upon the Pension Bureau or upon the Government," will receive, while his disabilities may be equal to or even greater than those of the persistent applicant.

I think we are doing the best we can, Mr. President. It is a very troublesome question. There are nearly a million men and women on the pension roll to-day, and I think there are about 650,000 applications pending at the present time. There are 200,000 original claims and 450,000 claims for increase confronting the Commissioner of Pensions at the present moment. It is a very serious question; and I for one having some knowledge of this matter, feel as though we ought to extend our sympathy and our help to the Commissioner of Pensions rather than undertake either by legislation or by words spoken in debate in the Senate to annoy and disturb him and complicate the very onerous and perplexing duties that are upon him.

We have appropriated in the pending bill precisely what the Secretary of the Interior asked us to appropriate. The administration of that office is going on under the rules that were found necessary by Commissioner Lochren, by Commissioner Murphy—than whom no better man ever held that office since the Government was founded, in my judgment—by Commissioner Raum, by Commissioner Dudley, and all those men who gave their time to the service of the Government for a salary that is utterly inadequate. The office is being administered under the same rules, so far as this matter is concerned, that those men found necessary for their own protection and the protection of the Government officials and the good of the soldier himself. Why the Senator from Nebraska should undertake to complicate this matter by offering this amendment, which has been acted upon over and over again, and which is, according to the testimony of the Commissioner of Pensions, something that ought not to be forced upon him, is more than I can understand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Concurrent resolution No. 22, declaring that all bonds of the United States, issued or authorized to be issued under certain acts of Congress, are payable, principal and interest, at the option of the Government, in silver dollars, etc.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be informally laid aside until the pension appropriation bill can be disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from California?

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, that is——

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I do not wish to interfere with the pending bill, but I do not want the resolution to lose its place as the unfinished business; and if any Senator wants to speak upon the resolution, I want to take it up now. If there is to be no further discussion upon the appropriation bill, and we can vote on it right off, I am perfectly willing to give way; but if there is to be a long debate, lasting all day, the next thing that will be heard will be that on Thursday, when we agreed to vote before adjournment on the resolution, it will be said that we lost a day and another day ought to be granted.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will allow me, the understanding was, I think, that the resolution was not only the unfinished business, but that any Senator could call it up for the purpose of submitting remarks at any time when the Senate was not actually engaged in the transaction of some other business.

Mr. VEST. As I understand it, that was any intervening time between Saturday morning or Friday and to-day.

Mr. CULLOM. Is there any Senator who desires now to speak on the question?

Mr. VEST. I am not able to answer that question.

Mr. GALLINGER. If Senators will permit me, I will state that the Senator from Nebraska assures me he desires only about ten minutes to further debate the amendment, and that he has no further amendment to offer. I am sure no other Senator has any amendment to propose, and we can get through with the bill in fifteen minutes if the Senator from Missouri will permit the resolution to be laid aside informally.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to state that there are other appropriation bills behind this one awaiting consideration. Of course we do not desire to interfere with the financial resolution that is before the Senate, if it is desired to discuss it between now and Thursday, the time set for voting upon it; but I think the pension appropriation bill will be soon gotten out of the way if the discussion on this point is about ended.

Mr. BERRY. Let the resolution be laid aside for fifteen minutes.

Mr. SPOONER. Without prejudice.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not see any other member of that portion of the Finance Committee which I am obliged to call the minority in the Senate on the resolution. I do not think any of those members care particularly to discuss the resolution today, though I do think that they intend to be heard perhaps tomorrow. Certainly, for myself, I intend to occupy a very brief portion of the time of the Senate in some remarks upon the resolution; but I would desire that the older members of the Finance Committee should precede me. If, however, they are not ready, I think I shall be ready to say something upon the subject tomorrow.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Connecticut that it will hardly be fair for the opposition to the resolution to postpone speaking until the very last moment. We have had two speeches on the side of those who favor the resolution. We do not want to be shut out. I wish to submit something, but I am at a loss to know what defense is to be made against the resolution. I am absolutely at a loss to know what the Senator from Connecticut or any other member of his committee will say against the resolution, and I think we are entitled to hear them before it is time to vote.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I have prepared no remarks, and I shall not elaborate any. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] has come in. However, I will say now to the Senator from Colorado, who states that he does not see what defense can be made against the resolution, that I had it in mind to ask what earthly reason there was for presenting it at this time.

Mr. TELLER. We have had two speeches in that line, and if they have not convinced the Senator perhaps he may be convinced before we get through. I think we ought to go on with the debate if anyone is ready to proceed. Certainly to-morrow we shall have to do so.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I shall be ready to-morrow to make the few remarks which I propose to make.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know but that some one may be ready to go on now.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask that the pending bill may be proceeded with and disposed of.

Mr. CULLOM. I think the pending appropriation bill can be disposed of in a very little while, if the Senator from Nebraska has substantially concluded his remarks upon the particular question under consideration.

Mr. ALLEN. I think we could have disposed of the bill while Senators have been talking about the order of business.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope we may go on with it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from California and the Senator from New Hampshire ask that the unfinished business be informally laid aside for fifteen minutes.

Mr. PERKINS. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that if the bill is not disposed of in thirty minutes, I shall be willing to let it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. VEST. Let it be the understanding that the concurrent resolution remains as the unfinished business, and that it is laid aside informally.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the understanding. It is laid aside for fifteen minutes only.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it was my purpose when the interruption occurred, to make one or two further observations on this matter, but as it is very important that the pending appropriation bill shall be gotten out of the way so as to take up the unfinished business I will desist, contenting myself with the suggestion that I trust the Senate will pass the bill precisely as it stands, and not insert amendments in it that would produce embarrassment and accomplish no good whatever.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I desire but a word in reply. When I said a moment ago the Senator from New Hampshire would be unable to give a reason for the rule now prevailing in the Pension Office prohibiting an applicant or his attorney from inspecting the return or report of the examining surgeon, I was correct, for the Senator, notwithstanding he had the floor for some time, failed to give any reason. The Senator admits, and that was the vital thing I desired to bring out, that the rule to which I refer and which my amendment seeks to change and modify, exists in the Pension Bureau and that applicants for pensions are rigidly excluded from inspecting or having attested copies of the returns of the examining surgeons.

The Senator bases his approval of that rule upon the simple proposition (and I want to make it as plain as possible) that if the rule did not exist, the applicant who was examined by the surgeon, on discovering an adverse report, would become hostile to the surgeon's practice and injure him in the community. That is the only reason offered.

Mr. GALLINGER. No, Mr. President. I do not want to continue the debate, but I made the further proposition that the average soldier has a notion that the findings of the local board are the extent of his disabilities for which he should be pensioned, while as a matter of fact they are subject to review by the medical officers of the Bureau.

Mr. ALLEN. Well, the soldier is right if the law was construed as it is written. But, unfortunately, the higher we go in our National Government, or in our system of governments, the less those who govern observe the law.

Mr. President, there is nothing in that statement made by the Senator from New Hampshire, in my judgment. It does not furnish an excuse. He might as well say the lawyer who tries a case and who, necessarily, is a partisan, incurs the enmity of the party against whom he is employed. If he is for the plaintiff, he incurs necessarily, at least for the time being, the hostility of the defendant, and vice versa. The same reasoning employed by the Senator from New Hampshire in this case applies to the lawyer.

While it is true, as the Senator from New Hampshire says, the judge is not practicing law, it is true that the judgment of every judge and the verdict of every jury is subject to more or less adverse criticism by the community, and especially by those interested and their friends.

No, Mr. President, there is no excuse for this rule. There never was any excuse for it. We might as well ask a man to walk in the dark and take the chances of stepping off a precipice under the supposition that he was walking in safety as to ask the applicant for a pension to trust his chances to the reports of surgeons which are rigidly excluded from him and from his representative or attorney.

I share much in the sentiment expressed by the Senator from New Hampshire respecting a certain class of pension attorneys. I do not believe any self-respecting man will solicit business; certainly no self-respecting lawyer will go out and solicit business. I believe it wise to exclude certain classes of those gentlemen who are engaged in that species of business from practicing before the Department. But it must not be forgotten that there are thousands of good citizens scattered over the country engaged in an honorable way in collecting the evidence and presenting the claims of old soldiers for pensions. They should not fall under the displeasure of the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. President, if during the debate on this bill I have said a word that the Senator from New Hampshire thinks was disrespectful or that reflected upon him, I beg to assure him that I had no intention of doing so. My feeling for him is of the most kindly character. But, sir, I feel intensely upon this subject. I know what these men suffered and endured during the war. I know no man lives or will ever live who was not a soldier in camp and in the field who can understand the exposure, the suffering, and the hardship incident to soldier life; and however friendly he may be, as the Senator from New Hampshire is friendly, he has not shouldered his knapsack and gun, he has not marched in snow and slush, he has not slept on the cold ground in rain and in storm, nor has he encountered the hardships of camp life nor the exposures of the field of battle.

He has not seen his comrades shot down around him, and therefore can not, in the nature of things, have a clear conception of the services of this class of men.

Now, Mr. President, I want to vote on the amendment. I presume the decree has gone forth that it shall not carry. It is noticeable—and I want to mention the fact in my remarks, because it will not appear on record in any other way—that on the previous amendment, which has just been rejected, Democrats and Republicans joined in voting it down, and I call attention to it, that if this amendment goes the same way, I shall embrace the first opportunity to place the fact on record.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PAYMENT OF GOVERNMENT BONDS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business is now before the Senate. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution reported from the Committee on Finance by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] on the 18th instant, it having been laid aside during the consideration of the appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the resolution may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Whereas by the act entitled "An act to strengthen the public credit," approved March 18, 1869, it was provided and declared that the faith of the United States was thereby solemnly pledged to the payment, in coin or its equivalent, of all the interest-bearing obligations of the United States, except in cases where the law authorizing the issue of such obligations had expressly provided that the same might be paid in lawful money or other currency than gold and silver; and

Whereas all the bonds of the United States authorized to be issued by the act entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," approved July 14, 1870, by the terms of said act were declared to be redeemable in coin of the then present standard value, bearing interest payable semiannually in such coin; and

Whereas all bonds of the United States authorized to be issued under the act entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," approved January 14, 1875, are required to be of the description of bonds of the United States described in the said act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt;" and

Whereas, at the date of the passage of said act of Congress last aforesaid, to wit, the 14th day of July, 1870, the coin of the United States of standard value of that date included silver dollars of the weight of 412½ grains each, declared by the act approved January 18, 1837, entitled "An act supplementary to the act entitled 'An act establishing a mint and regulating the coins of the United States,'" to be a legal tender of payment, according to their nominal value, for any sums whatever: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That all the bonds of the United States issued, or authorized to be issued, under the said acts of Congress hereinbefore recited are payable, principal and interest, at the option of the Government of the United States, in silver dollars of the coinage of the United States containing 412½ grains each of standard silver; and that to restore to its coinage such silver coins as a legal tender in payment of said bonds, principal and interest, is not in violation of the public faith nor in derogation of the rights of the public creditor.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I want to call attention to the fact that the friends of the resolution are not responsible for the present condition of affairs in the Senate, a condition which is rather anomalous. When the resolution came from the Committee on Finance and was laid before the Senate, I made a brief opening address. The resolution then went over until the next day at the conclusion of the morning hour. Certain Senators who were opposed to the resolution and members of the Finance Committee came to me and said their personal convenience would be very much consulted and advanced if the resolution could go over for two or three days; and one of them stated emphatically that he could not be here on last Monday, when the resolution was to come before the Senate, and he asked therefore that it should be postponed for a short time.

Without going into all the details, it resulted in an agreement that the resolution should be taken up to-day for regular debate, and that in the meantime any of the friends of the resolution who desired to speak could call it up and deliver such remarks as they saw proper to make, but that to-day the resolution was to be taken up for regular debate, and that the opponents of the resolution would then make, as they termed it, short speeches expressing their views in opposition to it. Two speeches have been made—not saying that my own desultory remarks constitute a speech—in favor of the resolution, and we now await what may be said upon the other side in pursuance of the distinct understanding that to-day the opponents of the resolution should be heard.

As a matter of course, we have no disposition to go on with an ex parte line of remarks—I will not say debate, because there can be no debate when one side only is heard. It is only fair and right after what has passed that those who have had several days now to prepare their remarks against the resolution should address the Senate. I can not ask for a vote now, because we have an agreement that the resolution shall be voted upon on Thursday next before the adjournment of the Senate, but I appeal to that sense of fairness and right which has always characterized both sides of the Chamber, as a rule, that the opponents of the resolution shall now state their objections to it.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I did not understand that we were expected to debate the resolution continuously from a given hour on Tuesday until the final vote should be taken on Thursday. I supposed that the matter would be discussed at least long enough and take a range wide enough so that we should fully understand the object and aim of the resolution.

It is true that some days have elapsed since the resolution was under discussion in the Senate. I do not know how it may have been with other Senators, but as for myself I have been wholly occupied during the intervening time, and have had no opportunity for preparation, if preparation be necessary, for the discussion of the resolution.

For myself, I expect to vote against the resolution when the vote is taken. I certainly shall do so unless it shall be materially amended. I can not see why the resolution is brought before the Senate and why the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] and those who act with him are so anxious to have a vote upon it. I know of no impending exigency, nothing which throws a shade over the situation, which requires us to deal at this time with a resolution like this.

What is it, Mr. President? It is a resolution relating to the interest-bearing bonds of the United States, reciting in its preamble statutes which have often been construed and are well understood, and, so far as I know, there are no two constructions to be placed upon them. It is a revival of a resolution passed twenty years ago, I think, this day.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It was passed through both Houses on the 28th of January, 1878.

Mr. ALLISON. It passed this body twenty years ago on this day of the month. There were then impending questions to which the resolution related, which were being pressed upon the Senate for consideration. Now the pending resolution, relating to interest-bearing bonds, applies to no bond which can mature before 1904.

If this resolution were put in the form of a joint resolution, there is no Secretary of the Treasury who would be able to follow out its policy until 1904, which will be the first year that any bond matures and is to be paid to which the resolution can be applied. Therefore, instead of asking why it is that we are to oppose this resolution, I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri why it is that we are here now called upon for three days to lay aside every other question and consideration in order to express the opinion of the Senate as to what shall be done in 1904? What Senator will say upon this floor that this resolution, if it were in the form of a statute, could be put into operation by any Secretary of the Treasury or by any Administration until long after the election of 1900 and a new Administration is in power?

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. Will it interrupt my friend if I ask him a question?

Mr. ALLISON. Not at all.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the Senator from Missouri will allow me to make a suggestion to my friend from Iowa at that point.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is not what, in the opinion of the Senate, should be done in 1904, when the first bond becomes due, but what we may have a legal right to do. Whether we should do it or not, as a matter of policy or as a matter of good faith, is not the question involved.

Mr. ALLISON. Not at all. I understand; I will admit that point.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand the Senator says that there is nothing now, and will not be until 1904, for which silver dollars can be used?

Mr. ALLISON. I did not say that. I stated that the first bonds that matured, to which this resolution will be applicable, practically, will be in 1904. There are due now, or will be presently due and payable, currency bonds issued to the Pacific railroads, but they in their terms are payable in currency. There are 2 per cent bonds to the extent of $25,000,000, which are payable at the option of the Government.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is what I wanted to call the Senator's attention to.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that very well; but nobody supposes that we are very likely to call in those 2 per cent bonds at this time or at any time in the near future. Therefore, practically, the questions which we are debating now are questions which will have a practical application in 1904, and not before that time.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator bear in mind the question of some twenty-odd million dollars of interest that has to be paid annually up to 1904, 1908, and 1924?

Mr. ALLISON. Of what?

Mr. COCKRELL. Of interest on bonds.

Mr. ALLISON. Do I understand this resolution to specifically require that?

Mr. COCKRELL. Will it not necessarily affect the interest just as much as the principal?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not so understand the resolution.

Mr. GRAY. It refers to principal and interest.

Mr. ALDRICH. The resolution expressly excludes that. It only applies to the bonds themselves.

Mr. GRAY and Mr. VEST. Principal and interest.

Mr. WHITE. The interest is part of the bonds.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly; there can be no question about that. The interest is just as much a part of the bonds as the principal.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator from Rhode Island will find it in the fourth and fifth lines of the resolution.

Mr. ALDRICH. I beg pardon. I thought it only applied to the principal.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. Then my criticism applies only to the principal.

Mr. WHITE. If it will not interrupt my friend from Iowa, I wish to see if I understand his position exactly.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall try to make myself understood.

Mr. WHITE. Just on one proposition. I wish to know whether the contention of the Senator from Iowa is that we should wait until these bonds are paid as some Secretary of the Treasury may wish to pay them, before we resolve as to how they ought to be paid?

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I have merely called attention to the fact that we are dealing with a question which is not of present interest, and I do not so regard it. This is a recital of a resolution that passed in 1878, and it passed prior to the passage of the bill that was then pending in the Senate known as the Bland Act, and sometimes, by way of contumely or decoration, with my own name added to it.

When this resolution was offered here twenty years ago, I voted for it because it had application to the then existing situation. What was that situation? During the early part of the term of President Hayes an extra session of the two Houses of Congress was called because of the failure of appropriation bills. The House of Representatives, I think, on the 6th of November—I may not be accurate as to date—passed a bill providing for the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1. That bill came here to the Senate and was referred to the Committee on Finance. That committee reported the bill back in November, at the extra session, about the 20th or 25th of November—I have the dates, but can not at present put my hands upon them. The bill was reported with certain amendments striking out the free-coinage feature and inserting a limited coinage on Government account. Soon after that report was made the extra session lapsed into the regular session.

It so happened, Mr. President, that I had charge of the consideration of that bill in the Senate. I reported the bill from the Finance Committee, and after Congress reconvened on the 2d of December, 1878, on the first or second day of the session, I asked that the bill should be considered at an early day, and proposed a day one week thereafter when that bill should be taken up, made a special order, and be continued from day to day until finally disposed of. There was some discussion respecting the matter, and a day was fixed, I think a week or ten days from the first day of the session, although there was an effort made to postpone it until December 11. On the same day, after this agreement was made, according to my recollection, Mr. Stanley Matthews, then a Senator from Ohio, offered a resolution identical in terms with the one now pending.

The contention that had been made in the House of Representatives, and the contention that had been made here, was that if either the House bill, which was a free-coinage bill, or the bill with the Senate amendment should pass, it would be in violation of the existing law, because in 1873 we had made the gold dollar the unit of value, and had made gold the standard money, and between 1873 and 1878, the time when that bill was under consideration, the Secretary of the Treasury had disposed of a large amount of securities or bonds, in round numbers nearly $600,000,000 worth, and because of that disposal after 1873 those bonds were in their turn payable in gold, and not in gold and silver. The resolution of Mr. Matthews at that time was offered in anticipation of the partial restoration of silver to coinage, with the view of showing that the restoration of silver to coinage, either under the provisions of the bill as passed by the House of Representatives or as proposed by the Senate Finance Committee, was not in derogation of the rights of creditors and would not be a violation of the spirit of those laws. Therefore at the end of the resolution there was this provision:

> And that to restore to its coinage such silver coins as a legal tender in payment of said bonds, principal and interest, is not in violation of the public faith nor in derogation of the rights of the public creditor.

That was in 1878 and under the circumstances which I have related. I did not consider at that time that such a restoration as we proposed would be in violation of the rights of creditors then existing, because those bonds were all issued.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from Iowa yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACON in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. TELLER. Does the Senator mean to say that the resolution was supported in 1878 because we were about to do something with the silver dollar? If the Senator means that, I wish he would point to me where there was any argument of that kind.

Mr. ALLISON. I am speaking of what was currently known at that time.

Mr. TELLER. I mean in the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator understands that at that time the Matthews resolution was a precursor to the debate on the bill then pending, in order that those who favored it might eliminate from the question the idea that limited coinage would be in violation of the public faith; and, as the Senator very well knows, the Bland-Allison Act, so called, was postponed until the vote was taken upon the Matthews resolution. Although it was a special order, it was set aside by consent of those who were friends of the two measures, and the Stanley Matthews resolution was allowed to come to a vote before the vote was taken upon the bill.

I do not know—and that is what I rose for, and not to debate this question—what special significance this resolution now has. The last clause reads:

> And that to restore to its coinage such silver coins as a legal tender in payment of said bonds, principal and interest, is not in violation of the public faith nor in derogation of the rights of the public creditor.

What is the meaning of that? What is meant now in 1898 by suggesting a restoration of silver coinage? Do not Senators know that we restored silver coinage immediately following the passage of the Matthews resolution in 1878? We are now acting here as though silver were in the bottom of the sea and not a single silver dollar was in existence in our country. Why, Mr. President, we have coined about $500,000,000 of silver and pledged ourselves to coin more since that concurrent resolution was passed in which we said to restore it was not a violation of public faith. Is it necessary for us now to speak of restoring it? Have we not restored it?

Mr. TELLER. No.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Colorado tells me we have not restored it. In other words, then, he construes this resolution to mean that there is no restoration of silver coinage until we shall open our mints to the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1.

Mr. TELLER. I have not made any statement of that kind.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator, then, what he means when he says we have not restored it?

Mr. TELLER. I simply say now that we have not restored and are not now coining the silver dollar. That is all I say about it. I do not want to interrupt the Senator. When he gets through, I may ask a question or two.

Mr. ALLISON. I therefore ask, because I want to know, what is meant by this? We have restored the coinage of the silver dollar. We have restored nearly 500,000,000 of these dollars, which are full legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, including the bonds——

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me to answer, I will. He seems to be insisting upon an answer.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. We have coined about 500,000,000 silver dollars or thereabouts. If the Senator does not say so, the Administration he supports say those dollars are not honest dollars to pay these debts, and they say more than that, that the law does not allow them to pay them, I understand. I do not know what the Senator from Iowa says, and I do not propose to put any words in his mouth. He will tell us. I know what the Secretary of the Treasury says, I know what the President says, I know what the gold press of the country say—that you can not use one of those 500,000,000 dollars to pay any part of the bonded indebtedness.

Mr. ALLISON. I have never heard that the President said that. I have never heard that anyone else said it. Under the existing law the Secretary of the Treasury has the discretion, the option, to pay in either coin. Does this give him anything more?

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me?

Mr. ALLISON. I mean under the law.

Mr. GRAY. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa a single question. Does the resolution by its terms intend to limit the option that we all believe rests in the Secretary of the Treasury or the executive department of the Government to pay either in silver or gold the coin bonds? In other words, is it intended to require that the right of option shall be abandoned and that the bonds must be paid in silver?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not so understand the resolution.

Mr. TELLER. No; it does not.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that the milk in the resolution is in the end, the thing that is proposed in the tail of it; that twenty years after we have provided, as that resolution required us to provide, and after the reason for the resolution has passed into oblivion or "innocuous desuetude," at least, now we are called upon to deal with it practically as though we had just risen up and found that there is a standard dollar in the United States.

Mr. STEWART. Let me tell the Senator from Iowa where the milk in the cocoanut is. The milk in the cocoanut is the $360,000,000 of debt contracted in order to buy gold when we had silver with which to pay. That is the recent milk.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. ALLISON. Of course I do not intend, if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator prefers to go on I will not interrupt him.

Mr. ALLISON. In a moment I will yield to the Senator. I do not care to be interrupted while I am making a statement.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is it not the policy of the Secretary of the Treasury at this time, as announced in the hearings before the Finance Committee of the other end of the Capitol, to redeem in gold all of the $500,000,000 that the Senator is speaking of as coin, and treat them as if they were paper?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. That is not pertinent to this inquiry.

Mr. TILLMAN. We contend that with those silver dollars he can pay the bonds. He contends that he must issue more gold bonds to redeem those dollars.

Mr. ALLISON. I will not go into that question, because I have not read the suggestions of the Secretary in detail.

Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado says that we are not coining silver dollars, and the Senator from South Carolina seems to be distressed because the present Secretary of the Treasury is going to destroy all silver dollars.

Mr. FORAKER. No, because he is going to keep them as good as the gold dollars.

Mr. ALLISON. That causes the distress of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. No; he does not want to keep them as good as gold dollars at all, but simply to redeem them in gold.

Mr. STEWART. To keep them too good to use.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Colorado and the Senate to the fact that this Administration (which Senators seem to deprecate in many ways, and I do not blame them very much for feeling that way), presided over, so far as the Treasury Department is concerned, by the present Secretary of the Treasury, coined, up to the 1st of January, in round numbers, 10,000,000 of silver dollars.

Mr. TILLMAN. Where did they get the silver?

Mr. ALLISON. Does not the Senator know where they got it?

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to know under what law they coined it? Why did they coin it when the Senator says it is rotten and worth only 40 cents?

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator himself to answer it. He has said, and my good friends the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from Colorado have said, that they want to put in the words "restore the coinage," because silver is not being coined.

Mr. STEWART. I beg pardon——

Mr. ALLISON. That is the language.

Mr. STEWART. I beg pardon, I did not say anything of the kind. We put them in because we had silver with which to pay our debts. The law requires it to be done, and they would not follow the law. We want to stop the borrowing of gold when there is silver in the Treasury—an unhealthy surplus in the Treasury.

Mr. ALLISON. We will reach that.

Mr. STEWART. We want to stop the selling of bonds.

Mr. ALLISON. I repeat that we have coined during the present Administration, in round numbers, 10,000,000 silver dollars, and yet we are to be put here upon the rack for three days in order that we may simply declare, as the sense of the Senate, that to restore the coinage of silver is not in violation of the public faith.

Mr. President, if there ever was a resolution that was obsolete, or functus officio, or which should be lying in our archives, not to be used, and should be put in the ninth story of the building we are completing on the Avenue, where the archives are to be placed, it is this resolution.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator, right in this connection, let me ask him one question? I will not interrupt him further. The resolution provides:

> That all the bonds of the United States issued, or authorized to be issued, under the said acts of Congress hereinbefore recited are payable, principal and interest, at the option of the Government of the United States, in silver dollars of the coinage of the United States containing 412½ grains each of standard silver.

Does the Senator contend that it is the duty of the Secretary to sell bonds and buy gold with which to pay interest on the public debt; and if it is not, after they have sold as many bonds as they have and crippled the credit of the country, as they have done, is it not pertinent to remind the Executive that the bonds could be paid with the coin on hand, particularly when there is an abundance of it, as I showed the other day?

Mr. ALLISON. But the Senator from Nevada makes a mistake. He supposes that the Secretary of the Treasury is not exercising his discretion. He is doing what he thinks is wisest and best as respects the option which he has.

Mr. STEWART. I deny that he has any discretion when there is coin on hand. That is the trouble. I say when, with silver on hand, he buys gold to pay obligations payable in silver, he violates the law.

Mr. ALLISON. That is a question of fact.

Mr. STEWART. No.

Mr. ALLISON. We can get at it later if we have a little patience.

Mr. FORAKER. If that be true, why does the Senator from Nevada say in the resolution that the Government shall have this option and exercise it?

Mr. STEWART. He has no power to buy gold when he has silver on hand. He has no power to sell bonds. There is no authority to sell bonds when there is plenty of silver. It is a bold usurpation.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course, this resolution takes nothing from the Secretary of the Treasury that he has now, and it gives him no power that he does not have. Therefore it has no significance, except that which is found in the tail of it, which is that to restore silver to coinage is not in violation of the public faith. The suggestion of the Senator from Colorado, when he stated that the Secretary was not coining, has a significance which I hope he will explain to the Senate before the debate closes, and say whether or not he means that the coinage which we now have, and which we have had since the resolution passed, is not a compliance practically with the resolution of 1878.

Mr. President, the difficulty about the whole matter (I do not intend to debate it) is that there is upon this side of the Chamber a determination to execute the statutes of our country, which provide that all the currency in circulation in our country shall be maintained at parity in value. That is an obligation which is as binding upon us as any other obligation, and it is not disturbed by this resolution at all, because the resolution does not have the force of law, although it may have the force of morals.

In 1878, when we passed the law which followed immediately the passage of the concurrent resolution, we provided that the silver dollars should be coined at the ratio of 16 to 1, but that they should be coined in a limited quantity and on Government account; and why? It was because those who favored that law, or at least many of them, I being one of the number, believed at that time, whether rightfully or wrongfully, that if we opened our mints to the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, the difference between the commercial value or the market value of silver as bullion and its coined value being then 8 per cent, we would be placed upon the silver standard instead of the standard that we had then provided for in the act of 1873.

In that law we not only provided for this limited coinage, but we provided also that it should be upon Government account; and when we made that provision, we put into the Treasury of the United States an enormous sum of money, amounting under the Bland law to more than $73,000,000, if my recollection is correct, which was pledged to every man who had one of these silver dollars in his pocket or a silver certificate representing it that he would not be cheated by the Government; that it had put into his hand a dollar equal to the standard of value.

Until we shall have procured the circulation of these two metals, by means of statute law or by means of international arrangement, side by side, it is our duty, as I believe, to do whatever we ought to do to preserve the parity and value of these two metals, and if we preserve the parity and value of the two metals, then this resolution is a mere announcement of an opinion which makes no possible difference as between paying the bonds in one coin or in the other.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question? Does he acknowledge that the bonds are payable in silver?

Mr. ALLISON. The law provides that they shall be——

Mr. TILLMAN. Does the Senator acknowledge it? Does his party acknowledge it?

Mr. ALLISON. I am trying to answer the Senator. The law provides that all the bonds are payable in coin of the standard value of the statute of 1870.

Mr. TILLMAN. Silver?

Mr. ALLISON. That is what the law provides. It is either silver or gold.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator acknowledges that they are payable in silver?

Mr. ALLISON. I have just quoted the law, and I would ask the Senator——

Mr. TILLMAN. I want the Senator to say in terms, "yes."

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator wants to put words in my mouth, I shall have to object. I stated in answer to the suggestion that the law provides that the bonds are payable either in silver or gold. Does not the Senator remember the numerous messages we have had here, notably from President Cleveland, his own President, who insisted that we should change the law? Why change the law? Why was it?

Mr. TILLMAN. Because he was a Republican at heart. That is the reason.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not so understand it. It has been conceded, so far I know——

Mr. STEWART. We do not change the law, but the practice.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Nevada does not change the practice. The practice is not changed by the resolution. It gives the Secretary of the Treasury in terms precisely the same discretion that he has now, and it does not say that he shall execute that discretion one way or the other. Therefore, so far as the resolution is concerned, it does not change the situation.

So far as I can see, there is nothing pressing or important in the resolution unless it is to commit this country to the idea that we will not do as we have promised in many statutes directly and impliedly by every statute since 1878, unless we intend to draw away from this obligation of parity and make a silver dollar worth just what it will be worth under the silver standard. I am not going into that question.

Mr. STEWART. How can you increase the value of a dollar by refusing to use it?

Mr. ALLISON. Whatever may be said about refusing to use it, it is perfectly certain that since 1878, not only in every mart and market of the United States, but in every civilized country adjacent to the United States, a silver dollar or a silver certificate representing a silver dollar has passed current with all the other money in our country and been kept at a parity with gold.

Mr. STEWART. Why then did you borrow $260,000,000? Because the gold men would not take the other money and dictated it. Was that good policy?

Mr. ALLISON. I will be diverted long enough to say to my friend the Senator from Nevada, when he speaks of the borrowing of money, that we had practically no silver dollars except the dollars that were specifically pledged for silver certificates or so much of the seigniorage as would have followed the coinage of the bullion in the Treasury.

Mr. STEWART. What came in in the shape of silver certificates? More than half the revenue was in silver.

Mr. ALLISON. All I desired to call attention to this afternoon was that unless there is something in the resolution which is to be used now or hereafter as respects what will affect the credit of the United States, it is of no value.

Mr. TELLER. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator until he is ready to be interrupted.

Mr. ALLISON. I will listen now.

Mr. TELLER. I understand the Senator from Iowa now to say that the Government of the United States may pay its bonded debt in silver dollars without any breach of faith. Do I understand the Senator to say that?

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir; I did not.

Mr. TELLER. Then I wish the Senator would tell us what the power of the Government is as to payment, whether the Government has a right—a legal right I am talking about—to pay in silver?

Mr. ALLISON. There is no doubt—I do not know that it is disputed—that the bonds are payable either in silver dollars or gold dollars at the option of the Secretary of the Treasury. That option, if he is an honest man, must be exercised in the light and face of other important statutes which we have placed upon the statute books to guide him.

Mr. SPOONER. With respect to maintaining the parity.

Mr. ALLISON. To maintain the silver dollar at a parity in value, and as soon as that is done there can be no fault found with him.

Mr. TELLER. I understood the Senator to say a few moments ago that the dollars are at a parity.

Mr. ALLISON. They are.

Mr. TELLER. Where is the breach of faith, then, if the Government pays the bonds in silver dollars? Will he tell us?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not say it would be a breach of faith, but I am trying to analyze, if I can, the peculiar significance of the phraseology of the resolution, which says that to restore the silver coinage is not a violation of the public faith. I say if it has no other significance than it had in 1878, there is very little in the resolution, because we have accomplished what that resolution expected in 1878 would be accomplished.

Mr. TELLER. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to ask him whether, at the time the resolution was passed, with the approval of the Senator from Iowa, there was any law for the coinage of silver dollars?

Mr. ALLISON. There was not at that time, so far as I know.

Mr. TELLER. Is there practically any law to-day for the coinage of silver dollars?

Mr. ALLISON. There certainly is.

Mr. TELLER. Yes; on account of the Government.

Mr. ALLISON. There certainly is. Now, I get a little further touch——

Mr. TELLER. The Senator will get more before he gets through.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no doubt of it. I get a little further touch of the points in this resolution. I am not attempting to make a speech. The Senator from Colorado intimates that this opinion has some significance, as it bears upon the statute of 1890, which repealed the provisions respecting the coinage of silver, substituting another method of coining silver, and that it has something to do with the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman Act in 1893.

Mr. President, if those statutes and those laws are to be affected by this provision in the resolution, then we should boldly and truly say that it is our purpose not to do as we are doing now with the silver dollar, but that we intend to expand it, either by means of further purchases, or further coinage, or by means of free and unlimited coinage. I have shown the Senator that we have coined more than 9,000,000 silver dollars—nearly 10,000,000—in the last nine months.

Mr. TELLER. Does the Senator mean to say that I have in any way intimated that this resolution is for the purpose of repealing any statute now on the books?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly not.

Mr. TELLER. I thought the Senator——

Mr. ALLISON. I would not attribute that to the Senator, because this is a concurrent resolution and could not possibly repeal any law. A man need not have a great deal of sense to know that. I certainly would not impute that suggestion to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator said it certainly was for the purpose of doing it. I understood.

Mr. ALLISON. I said it was for the purpose of influencing the action and pressure of those acts, which is a pressure not upon us, but upon all the people of the United States.

I am not going to argue this question. The proposition in substance, according to the Senator from Nevada, is that we shall pay the bonds in silver. Now, suppose the effect of paying the bonds in silver shall be to reduce the value of the silver dollar in our own markets and place those dollars at a discount. Then we violate the statute.

Mr. TELLER. What statute?

Mr. ALLISON. The statute of 1893, the implied law of 1878, and the statute of 1890. If it is the purpose of Senators to contribute to the depreciation of the 500,000,000 silver dollars which we have in circulation, then let that purpose be avowed. If it is the purpose to hinder in any way or by accident to impair the power of the Treasury to maintain the parity, then let that be said; but I hold that so long as these statutes are upon our statute books it is the duty of those having responsible power with respect to the money of our country to use that power so as to maintain the parity of all our money in circulation.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator point out the statute to which he refers now? I shall be obliged to him if he will.

Mr. ALLISON. I have it not. It is the act repealing the purchasing clause of the Sherman Act—the act of 1893.

Mr. TELLER. I hand it to the Senator. Will he take it and see if he can find it?

Mr. ALLISON. Let the clause be read by the Secretary, beginning "and it is hereby declared."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

> And it is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to continue the use of both gold and silver as standard money, and to coin both gold and silver into money of equal intrinsic and exchangeable value, such equality to be secured through international agreement, or by such safeguards of legislation as will insure the maintenance of the parity in value of the coins of the two metals and the equal power of every dollar at all times in the markets and in the payment of debts. And it is hereby further declared that the efforts of the Government should be steadily directed to the establishment of such a safe system of bimetallism as will maintain at all times the equal power of every dollar coined or issued by the United States in the markets and in the payment of debts.

Mr. ALLISON. I interpret that as signifying substantially what I have stated. I ask the Senator from Colorado—I do not wish to interfere—if he will allow that to be added as part of the resolution?

Mr. TELLER. I will not.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not suppose the Senator would allow it to be added.

Mr. TELLER. I would not allow a good many things to be added of which I might approve.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to interfere at all with the Senator's line of debate, but I shall be glad to have him, when he discusses this question, say whether he approves or disapproves of that particular provision which I have had read.

Mr. TELLER. I have no objection to saying now that whether I approve or disapprove of it will be dependent entirely upon what construction is put upon it. I am trying to ascertain what construction the Senator from Iowa puts upon it, and I have some difficulty in doing it.

Mr. ALLISON. I will answer the Senator now. I construe it to be a declaration on the part of the United States that so far as it coins silver or gold or issues money each and all of those classes of money shall be kept at a parity in value. That is what I understand by it.

Mr. STEWART. Now I wish to ask a question. Does the Senator contend that under the resumption act the President has a right to sell bonds to buy coin when he has an abundance of coin, whether it be silver or gold, in the Treasury for that purpose?

Mr. ALLISON. I thought I mentioned to the Senator from Nevada that during the period of which he speaks there was no sale.

Mr. STEWART. I am not speaking of that. I ask the Senator if he has a right—I want to know if he has a right to sell bonds to buy coin. Then we will look at the facts. Has he a right to sell bonds to buy coin? If he has silver coin there, has he a right to do it?

Mr. ALLISON. The Secretary of the Treasury, by the resumption act of 1875 as construed by Congress and by two Presidents at least, has the discretion to sell bonds whenever in his judgment it is necessary to sell them in order to maintain the redemption of greenbacks.

Mr. STEWART. The language is, "to buy coin for the purpose of redemption." My question is whether, with an abundance of coin there, he has a right to sell bonds at all.

Mr. ALLISON. That is a question in his discretion. No man can tell how much coin is needed at a particular moment, and I shall not undertake to speak for any Secretary, now or heretofore, as respects the exercise of their discretion. If they exercise it wantonly, certainly they ought to be condemned for it.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator has not answered my question, Whether if he has an abundance of silver coin he has the right and power under that act to sell bonds?

Mr. ALLISON. I have no doubt he has.

Mr. STEWART. When he has an abundance of coin?

Mr. ALLISON. If he thinks he has not enough. That is the question.

Mr. STEWART. Suppose he had a thousand million dollars of silver coin there and wanted $10,000,000 to pay the debt, would he have a right to buy gold with which to pay it?

Mr. ALLISON. I will not go into a hypothetical case. I do not think the Secretary of the Treasury is likely to have a thousand million dollars in silver or a thousand million dollars in gold very soon in the Treasury.

Mr. STEWART. When President Cleveland asked for the power to issue gold bonds he said he had plenty of silver in the Treasury.

Mr. ALLISON. The only answer I can make to my good friend the Senator from Nevada, who is intensely interested in this matter, is that, whatever that may be, this resolution does not touch it, so that, if he wants to cure any evil about the administration of our finances by the Secretary of the Treasury, or to tie his hands in any way, this resolution does not touch it.

Mr. STEWART. It touches it exactly, because it asserts the right to pay silver, if the Secretary of the Treasury has silver——

Mr. ALLISON. He has that right now.

Mr. STEWART. And that he does not have to buy gold.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, when I rose I did not intend to debate this question at any length. I only rose in partial response to the Senator from Missouri, who insisted upon calling the resolution up, I having made a promise that I would probably say something about it on Tuesday. As I understand this question, it narrows itself simply to whether we shall do something now to impair the credit of the United States or whether we shall do something to uphold it. Speaking for myself, without arguing the question by and large or in detail, this resolution, to my mind, has no present significance unless it is to minimize the credit of the United States. If it had a significance tending to strengthen that credit at this particular moment, I should be glad to give it my hearty support. Having given these reasons why I shall not support the resolution, I shall not occupy the time of the Senate further.

Mr. TILLMAN. Does the Senator think that the credit of the United States needs strengthening?

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from Iowa answer an inquiry?

Mr. TILLMAN. Do you think our credit is in a bad way; that it is sickly and needs strengthening?

Mr. ALLISON. I think our credit is very good. I think it is so good that it is hardly worth while for us to try to impair it.

Mr. TELLER. I do not wish to keep the Senator from Iowa on the floor when he does not want to retain it, but as this is a matter of some importance, and I expect to debate it, I wish to know what is the attitude on this subject of one of the leading members of the Finance Committee. If I misstate the Senator, he will correct me. If I understood him correctly, his position is that the law authorizes us to pay any indebtedness in either gold or silver; to pay our bonds and everything else, I suppose. I will confine it for the moment to the bonds. That is the proposition which the Senator says the statute establishes, as I understand him.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator allow me to answer him?

Mr. TELLER. Oh, certainly. I am trying to find out exactly what the Senator believes.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator know of anyone who disputes that as a matter of fact?

Mr. TELLER. Oh, Mr. President, plenty do, as I shall show when I come to debate it.

Mr. ALLISON. I thought that that was as good as settled. I never heard it disputed before.

Mr. TELLER. I say the Senator believes that the law authorizes the payment in silver. The Senator says that the law authorizes and requires the Government to keep the money at par, which he says the Government has done, yet, in substance, if I understand him, that the Treasury Department and the executive department would not be justified in executing the law for fear something might happen. Is that the proposition? Is not that what the Senator says?

Mr. ALLISON. I will answer the Senator's question.

Mr. TELLER. I wish the Senator would answer it so that I can comprehend it.

Mr. ALLISON. I will endeavor to do so.

Mr. TELLER. It is not clear to me.

Mr. ALLISON. But the Senator comprehends a good many things very readily.

I will answer the Senator from Colorado by asking him whether he does not think that it is not only the duty under our statute, but the duty to the people of the United States that we shall not be dandling the standard back and forth, but keep our money at par in order that there shall be no fluctuations in the money in circulation? If that be not true, then of course my question does not apply; but if that be true, and the Secretary of the Treasury should find in the exercise of his discretion that his purpose to keep the money at a parity would be impaired by paying in one metal rather than another, my question is whether he should not exercise that discretion so wisely and so well as to promote the public interests and not promote a simple scheme or plan that he may have in view?

Mr. TELLER. The Senator does not answer my question.

Mr. ALLISON. I have in answer asked the Senator this question.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Iowa asserts now substantially that to use money as the law allows, money that he says is just as good, will have a tendency to depreciate the money so used—that is, to let the money have a function given to it by law will destroy its money function. Mr. President, that is a new principle in political economy.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. Now, I will ask the Senator——

Mr. TELLER. But I want to know if that is the theory upon which the Senator puts his objection to this resolution?

Mr. ALLISON. I will answer the Senator.

Mr. TELLER. Then I want to ask the Senator one more question, and I will quit.

Mr. ALLISON. My objection to the resolution is that if it means anything it means by the vote of the Senate, which is a mere expression of opinion on the resolution, to condemn impliedly a Secretary of the Treasury who uses in his discretion gold and not silver. I have asked the question of the Senator, and I ask him again to state whether he believes that we should have a stable currency and a stable money in our circulation; whether he believes that it is wise for the United States, now having the sole control of its circulation, to so control the circulation aside from the statutes as to destroy the parity, and whether the United States is not under a moral obligation to keep the two metals at a parity so far as it can be done. If in the exercise of that duty a Secretary of the Treasury shall find that this particular policy or that particular policy is necessary to do it, I ask whether he should not follow that policy. Whether the Senator believes that that should be done or not, I believe it, and believing that this will interfere with it, I shall vote against the resolution.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa another question. I will answer his question in full when I make some remarks to the Senate. He has declared that the first part of the resolution is correct; that the Government can pay in silver if it desires to pay in silver. The Senator says that is good law. Now, will the Senator answer as to the next proposition and state whether it is good law and good morals? Then if he answers that it is not, we will have an issue, which there has been some trouble to get so far as the Senator is concerned. I think we shall have an issue then that we can discuss. The first proposition is entirely distinct from the second. It has no relation to it whatever. The second proposition reads:

> And that to restore to its coinage such silver coins as a legal tender in payment of said bonds, principal and interest, is not in violation of the public faith nor in derogation of the rights of the public creditor.

What does the Senator say to that? Is that a truthful statement or is it not?

Mr. ALLISON. It is not a truthful statement——

Mr. TELLER. All right.

Mr. ALLISON. In two respects. In the first place, we have restored the silver dollar, and in the next place——

Mr. ALDRICH. And given it a legal-tender quality.

Mr. ALLISON. And given it a legal-tender quality. Therefore, having done that, we can not now say——

Mr. TILLMAN. A legal tender for everybody except the public creditor.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not understand it so.

Mr. STEWART. The public creditor——

Mr. TILLMAN. Why this endless chain, then, and nothing but gold going out?

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Colorado permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly. I am not making a speech. I am not going to make a speech now. I intend to take the floor at some other time to make some remarks.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin has the floor.

Mr. SPOONER. I am a novice on this subject, and I ask for information. This is what the Senator's resolution says. Of course I assume that he understands it and at least knows what he intends it shall mean. It says:

> And that to restore to its coinage such silver coins as a legal tender in payment of said bonds.

I should like to ask the Senator what coinage he refers to. Is it the coinage act of 1873?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly; the silver coin provided for by law.

Mr. SPOONER. Then it is the free and unlimited coinage of the silver dollar?

Mr. TELLER. It does not say that.

Mr. SPOONER. Is that what the Senator means?

Mr. TELLER. The Government might do it with less than free and unlimited coinage or it might do it with free coinage.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will permit me, the language is "to restore to its coinage such silver coins." Now, what coinage?

Mr. TELLER. The resolution means that the Government of the United States has a right to provide for the coinage of silver, either as it did under the Bland Act or under any other system, and then to use silver for its coin.

Mr. SPOONER. I know that the Government has the right and the power, as the Senator says, to open the mint to the unlimited coinage of silver, or to coin silver in unlimited quantities. There is no question about the power. What I want to get at is the meaning. I am anxious to ascertain the fact as to the resolution and learn what it means.

Mr. TELLER. I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that the gist of the whole thing is that such a coinage and such a use of coin is not in derogation of the faith of the Government nor in derogation of the rights of the public creditor.

Mr. SPOONER. What use?

Mr. TELLER. Its use as a payment to the bondholder.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to put a question to him, then?

Mr. TELLER. The Senator may put the question. I will answer it if I can.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask the Senator whether he means to be understood by the resolution as saying that it will be in consonance with public faith for the Government to open the mints for the free and unlimited coinage of silver at a ratio of 16 to 1 and pay in those dollars as a legal tender the principal of the bonds?

Mr. TELLER. The Government absolutely has a right under the law, and a moral right that can not be questioned, in my judgment.

Mr. SPOONER. Is not that what this resolution is intended to mean?

Mr. TELLER. That is what I intended it to mean.

Mr. SPOONER. That is what I thought. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to undertake to reply at length to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. I prefer to leave that to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] and the members of the Finance Committee. I simply want to say in passing, however, that the Senator from Iowa has maintained the reputation this evening that he has borne for more than a quarter of a century, and that is that he has the ability to make a speech by which his friends in Iowa and the West can claim that he is the firm friend of silver, and those who are opposed to silver can rely upon him with absolute certainty to do all he can by his vote to damage silver.

The wording of the resolution is precisely the same as that of the resolution for which the Senator from Iowa voted in 1878. He said then that it was not in violation of the public faith. If it was not in violation of the public faith then, will he tell the Senate why it is in violation of the public faith now? The only reason that he has urged here why he can not vote for it now, when he did vote for it in 1878, is that, he says, it will be impracticable; that it will accomplish no purpose; that the Secretary of the Treasury will pay no regard to it; that even if it should receive a large majority in the Senate and in the House of Representatives the Secretary of the Treasury will disregard it altogether and it will have no practical effect.

I think, Mr. President, in his statement that the Secretary of the Treasury will disregard it the Senator from Iowa states the fact. The Secretary of the Treasury and those who preceded him have disregarded the statutes of the United States. That has been done not only by the present Secretary, but by every Secretary of the Treasury we have had for years. With a statute on the book declaring that they have the right and the duty and the power to discharge these obligations in silver, they have persistently refused to obey that law.

Not only that, but the act of 1890 in express words said that the Government had a right to redeem the Sherman notes in standard silver dollars. Yet the Senator from Iowa tells us that if it would do that it would be a violation of the public faith. Tell me in what way, if that was the contract, does it violate the public faith.

Another reason why I should like to see the pending resolution pass, if for no other, is in order that this discussion and the vote on the resolution may tend in some measure to counteract the many false statements and charges that were made against the Democratic party in 1896. On every stump and in every prominent newspaper it was asserted that those who were in favor of restoring the coinage of silver were in favor of repudiation; that we would be guilty of an act of bad faith and dishonor; that we would dishonor the United States if we would vote to restore silver coinage.

Mr. President, if that were true; if, as they charged, the bonds that the Government owes were payable in gold and we had undertaken to say that we would pay them in a less valuable metal, hen there might have been some foundation for the charge. I want to say here that hundreds of Republicans, in the newspapers and on the stump, made the impression, and many of them charged it directly, that the bonds specifically call for the payment of gold, and gold only. There are thousands of Republicans to-day in the West who believe that the Government has undertaken to pay the bonds in gold, and that we sought, in violation of the contract, to pay them in silver.

If that were the fact, if they were payable in gold alone, then there would be something in the charge that they have made. No self-respecting American citizen can stand before the American people and advocate the payment of a bond in a less valuable metal which was made payable specifically in one metal. But if the bonds are payable either in gold or silver at the option of the Government of the United States, it is impossible for me to see wherein there is a breach of faith, wherein there is repudiation, wherein there is dishonor, in insisting that the Government shall use that option according to the contract.

I want to read a short sentence from a speech made by Mr. Beck in 1885. He spoke in this Chamber. He laid down this proposition, and no man on the other side of the Chamber controverted it. It has remained from that day to this, and no man has ever yet stood up and said that he did not state the facts. He said:

> There is not an outstanding obligation of the United States nor of any State, municipality, corporation, or individual which can not be legally and honorably discharged by the payment of the present standard silver dollar.
> What right has Congress to deprive the debtor of that right by adding more silver to the coin that he agreed to pay, or by stopping its coinage so that he can not obtain it? It is as palpable a violation of a contract to increase the obligation of the debtor as it is to impair or reduce the standard value of the coin which the creditor stipulated in his contract should be paid to him.

Now I ask the Secretary to read an extract from one of the 4 per cent bonds, which bears on the face of the bond that it is due in the year 1907, so that it will appear as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as indicated, unless there is objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

> This bond is issued in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," approved July 14, 1870, amended by an act approved January 20, 1871, and is redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after the 1st day of July, A. D. 1907, in coin of the standard value of the United States on said July 14, 1870, with interest in such coin from the day of the date hereof at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, payable quarterly on the 1st day of October, January, April, and July in each year. The principal and interest are exempt from the payment of all taxes or duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, in the light of that provision appearing upon the face of the bonds and copied from the law, it is absurd for anyone to assert that this Government has not the unquestioned right to pay the bonds in silver coin, in standard silver dollars of the United States of 412½ grains. It was the express provision of law placed on the face of the bond. The man who took the bond knew that that was the law when he took it. The Government knew that that was a part of his contract. All we have insisted upon is that the Government had the option, and if it chose to discharge that obligation in silver dollars no man could complain. Yet we have been accused, again and again the charge has been made, that we were in favor of repudiation, that we wanted to pay a debt in 50-cent dollars, when it was the express letter of the contract, and the parties knew it when they took the bonds.

Mr. President, I say the creditor who would seek, in the face of the contract, to demand more valuable money than he agreed to take is guilty of an act of dishonor, and the public official who will aid and abet him in that demand, and thereby betray the trust the people of the United States have placed in him, is guilty, in the language of the late President of the United States, of an act of perfidy. The dishonor is on the side of those who would seek to make the people pay more than they promised to pay.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BERRY. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator think that the Secretary of the Treasury has a discretion and option to pay these bonds either in gold or in silver?

Mr. BERRY. I say beyond any shadow of question that the Government has the right to pay them in gold or in silver, as the Government chooses.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator desire to take away that discretion or option?

Mr. BERRY. I desire, if it is possible by any means in my power to make the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States do anything in favor of the people, to make him exercise that option, and not give the option to the bondholder.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does he not exercise that option now?

Mr. BERRY. The option rests with the Government, not with the man who holds the bonds; and yet the option has been turned over to the creditor, the man who holds the bonds of the nation, who demands payment in gold, and the Secretary of the Treasury has acceded to that demand.

Mr. ALDRICH. But the Senator does not quite answer my question. Does the Senator desire to take away from the Secretary of the Treasury the undoubted discretion which he now has?

Mr. BERRY. I desire to force the Secretary of the Treasury to administer that office in the interests of the people of the United States who placed him in office, to exercise it in pursuance of law, and not in the interests of the bondholder, whose servant he seems to be.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator desire to force the Secretary of the Treasury to pay silver?

Mr. BERRY. I would, if I had it in my power, make him pay both silver and gold, and thereby——

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no; he has that power now.

Mr. BERRY. Indifferently.

Mr. ALDRICH. But he has that power now.

Mr. CLAY. But he does not exercise it.

Mr. BERRY. Yes, he has that power, but he does not exercise it. We complain that, instead of his exercising his option, he has turned it over to the bondholder.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator is not willing to answer the question I have propounded, perhaps he will answer this question.

Mr. STEWART. Let me answer.

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no.

Mr. BERRY. I hope the Senator from Nevada will wait until I get through. I decline to yield to the Senator from Nevada at this time. I am now dealing with the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. ALDRICH. Perhaps the Senator will answer this question: I ask him whether the adoption of this resolution on the part of the Senate, or its adoption on the part of both the Senate and the House of Representatives, would operate as an instruction to the Secretary of the Treasury to change the policy of the Government?

Mr. BERRY. I say that with a man who wants to represent the people of the United States, and not the bondholders, it would operate in the way the Senator suggests. But I have already stated that I did not believe that, even with this resolution before him, a Secretary of the Treasury who would not obey the law of the land would obey this concurrent resolution. But I want to serve notice on the Secretary of the Treasury——

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the Senator one question, which is a very simple one indeed, and I should like to have it clearly stated.

Mr. BERRY. Very well. I will answer the Senator if I can.

Mr. HOAR. Suppose we should adopt the policy of the free coinage of silver by this country alone, and suppose it should happen that the silver so coined was worth the same proportion to the gold coin in the market, was of the same market value relatively that silver bullion now is in regard to gold, would the Senator understand we were still entitled to pay our national debt in silver?

Mr. BERRY. Beyond any doubt by law, by equity, and by the practice of every court throughout the civilized world.

Mr. HOAR. And the Senator thinks we ought to do it?

Mr. BERRY. We ought to do it.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

Mr. BERRY. I assert that it has been the law always; it is the common law of England, and it is the law, so far as I know, of every civilized country in the world, that where a debtor has an option to pay in one commodity or another or one kind of money or another, it is not dishonest or dishonorable or repudiation to pay in the cheaper kind, if one be cheaper than the other; or, in other words, if a party agrees to pay a debt in wheat or in corn, and if wheat is a dollar a bushel and corn is 50 cents a bushel, if corn goes down and wheat goes up, he has the unquestioned right to pay in the cheaper commodity; and no court of law or equity would say that it would be either dishonest or dishonorable for him to do so. The Senator from Massachusetts will not deny that proposition.

Mr. HOAR. Yes, I do.

Mr. BERRY. I said when they made the contract, and when it was expressly provided that the Government should have the right to pay in either gold or silver at the then standard value, that all are bound by that contract and bound in every possible way; and an official of the United States who, if there be an advantage in the paying of one kind of metal, should pay in the dearer metal rather than the cheaper, when the contract provided that he might have the preference would be untrue to those who had intrusted him with power.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator pardon me a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BERRY. I yield.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator says that "the Senator from Massachusetts will not deny that proposition." I should like to recall the fact that I do deny it most absolutely.

Mr. BERRY. Does the Senator from Massachusetts deny if a contract is made between two individuals and the debtor has the right to discharge his debt in wheat at a dollar a bushel or corn at 50 cents a bushel that he can, if corn goes down and wheat goes up, discharge the debt in the cheaper commodity?

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will allow me further——

Mr. BERRY. I have answered the Senator's question. Now let him answer mine.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to answer, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. BERRY. Very well.

Mr. HOAR. It will take something more than "yes" or "no" to answer that question, but I will not abuse the Senator's courtesy more than two minutes.

Mr. BERRY. All right.

Mr. HOAR. I deny that proposition as applied to the question before us most emphatically. If that is the difference between the honorable Senator and those who think with him and me—I will not say me, but the men who think otherwise, of whom I am one of the humblest—they put this question before the people and before the Senate as if this were a contract between two individuals, in which one said to the other, "I will pay you at my election 500 bushels of oats or 500 bushels of barley." That is not this transaction at all.

This is the transaction of a Government borrowing money on its credit entirely and endeavoring to get the most stable, absolute, perfect measure of value that can be found on the face of the earth in order to pay as nearly as possible the value that it has borrowed. It is a Government talking about its money and its credit and not speculating in barley or in oats. That is the distinction. When the United States——

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. Let me make my statement. I will not abuse the Senator's courtesy. He has put a question, and I hope he will let me answer it.

Mr. BERRY. All right; but I hope the Senator will not be too long.

Mr. HOAR. When the United States of America said to the public creditor, "You lend me so many dollars, and I will pay you back so many dollars, either in gold or silver"——

Mr. BERRY. As I choose.

Mr. HOAR. We were trying to get language which would say not "I have the right to pay you 50 per cent less than its value if one of these measures diminishes," but it was trying to find language to say, "I will pay you the same thing that I got from you as near as the law of humanity will enable me at the time to find out what that is." Therefore, they mention the then standard money of the world, gold and silver, at a parity, or coin in a certain way.

Mr. BERRY. I hope the Senator has finished now.

Mr. HOAR. Let me finish this one sentence. The Senator put to me a question, and he ought to let me answer it.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator may proceed, but I am getting tired of standing.

Mr. HOAR. They say, "Here are these two metals now at a parity, and that is the thing most likely to measure when we pay the value which we have received." Now, if in consequence of its own legislative act, as you say it is in consequence of the legislative act of others, one of these moneys sinks to the value of copper, I hold that it would be an infinitely mean and base thing for any free government, or any other government, to come in and say, "I will treat you as the speculator in grain in Chicago treats the victim he fleeces." That is the difference between you and me.

Mr. BERRY. I know of no man who is better qualified to judge of what is base and mean than the Senator from Massachusetts. I am not here to bandy words with him of that character.

Mr. HOAR. I do not attribute anything to the Senator. I am speaking of a principle, of a doctrine.

Mr. BERRY. Very well, then. I, too, am speaking of a principle; and I say that where the Government made a contract with these bondholders and they agreed to take a certain kind of money, the public official who betrays the people who put him into power and forces the people to pay double what they agreed to pay commits an act of baseness and meanness that no words of mine can describe.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. BERRY. Wait one moment until I get through with the Senator from Massachusetts.

The Senator from Massachusetts first denied that the law with regard to contracts with individuals was as I have stated it; he has admitted now that it was the law between individuals, but has denied that it applies to the Government dealing with its bondholders. He first said that they understood that they would be paid in the kind of money that the Government had received.

Why, Mr. President, no man knows better than the Senator from Massachusetts that these bonds were originally paid for in currency, that the Government received currency when it sold them which was worth but 50 cents on the dollar, and that in 1869 the Republican party, contrary to contract and contrary to the will of the majority of the people of this country, funded those bonds and made them payable in coin. At that time silver was worth a little more than gold, and the bondholders insisted that the bonds should be placed at the then standard value.

Afterwards, when they had succeeded in securing the demonetization of silver, when silver went down and gold went up, they had the assurance to change this currency contract into a coin contract in the letter of the contract, in the face of the bond, and printed on it; and now they come back and say that this money is not as valuable as the other, and although they agreed to take it, although they contracted that the Government had the option, they now protest that they must have the option and privilege of saying which kind of money they will accept.

Mr. HALE. The Senator has stated his proposition very clearly, that the option being to pay in coin, it is law, justice, and morals to pay in the cheaper coin.

Mr. BERRY. If we so choose.

Mr. HALE. And that is what the Senator desires?

Mr. BERRY. That is what I desire.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator think if at the time that these promises were made, when gold and silver were at a parity, with no expectation or belief that they would be to the contrary, anybody had known that silver as a metal, instead of being equal in value in the quantities fixed by law to gold, was going down 60 per cent, 50 per cent, and 40 per cent as compared with gold, that those bonds would have been bought in that way or that we could have got any money at that time if that had been anticipated?

Mr. BERRY. I will answer the Senator that any man who deals in options in Wall street, in wheat or in cotton, and is on the bull side of the market at the time he makes his contracts, if he knew that that commodity was going down in price, would never have made such contracts.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator think that the negotiating of a loan by a great government, establishing its credit, and promising to meet its obligations stand on an equality with a speculative operation in Wall street? Is that his idea?

Mr. BERRY. My idea is that the speculator in Wall street stands exactly and precisely on the same plane as these bondholders.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator think that when the Government negotiated this loan, when it needed the money, when it wanted the money, and invited creditors to lend it money, the Government was engaged in a speculation? Was it not declaring then and there, on the basis of the equality of the two metals, that it would comply with its obligation and pay in the best metal, and not in the poorest?

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I have stated that when the Government got this money it sold the bonds for currency, that the men who purchased the bonds bought that currency at 50 cents on the dollar, and for it they got 100 cents' worth of bonds. Then Congress stepped in, disregarding the rights of the great body of the people, in order to accommodate these bondholders, not in order to get money, but because the bondholders came here and demanded it and lobbied for it—they secured the passage of a law that, instead of being payable in United States currency, the Government might pay in coin, but it was provided that the Government should have the option of paying in either gold or silver.

Why do men come here and plead the baby act, as the Senator from Maine would have them do, and say, "If we had known that silver would go down in that way, we would not have made that kind of a contract?" Mr. President, I have no respect for a man who is not willing to abide by the terms of a contract which he makes.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator this question: What does he suppose would have been the answer if anyone had asked why you put into the bonds that the Government may pay in gold or silver? Is it not inevitable that the answer would have been "because they are both alike on a parity?"

Mr. BERRY. On the contrary, silver was at a premium at that time.

Mr. HALE. Practically speaking, the difference between the two was slight; but the answer would have been at once, "Because it makes no difference; the two are at a parity, practically."

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. BERRY. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will ask the Senator from Maine if he ever heard that word "parity" in connection with money until within the last ten years?

Mr. BERRY. I have gone over——

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish the Senator from Maine would answer my question. "Parity" never entered into the consideration of money. That is a new coinage itself; a new phrase which has been invented.

Mr. HALE. The Senator is entirely wrong.

Mr. BERRY. I decline to yield to an outside discussion.

Mr. HALE. That was the foundation of every transaction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BERRY. I protest against an outside debate when I am speaking. I have never refused to yield to a Senator who desired to ask me a question when I was on the floor.

Mr. HALE. The Senator has been very courteous indeed.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Arkansas is representing his side of the Chamber and discussing this question with great candor and thoroughness. As I understand, his position is this: That if in the course of human events the silver dollar has half the purchasing value of a gold dollar, or a quarter of its value, then it would be not only the right of the United States to pay in silver coin, but that it would be its duty.

Mr. BERRY. Provided that was the contract.

Mr. ALDRICH. Provided that was the contract. Therefore it was the right and the duty of the Government to carry out that contract?

Mr. BERRY. Precisely.

Mr. ALDRICH. Taking advantage of whatever circumstances may transpire for its benefit?

Mr. BERRY. Precisely.

Mr. ALDRICH. This is a question of very serious importance to the people of this country as affecting its credit now and hereafter. If the Senators upon the other side of the Chamber believe really—and I have no doubt that they do—with the Senator from Arkansas, is it not fairer to put that expression into clear and definite words which can be understood by the people of this country and the people of the world?

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I repeat that I am as much in favor of preserving the honor of this nation as is the Senator from Rhode Island or anyone else. If the Government had made a contract and said "the bondholder shall have the option to demand either gold or silver," then I would be the last man to come here and insist that we would have the right to pay in the cheaper metal. Does the Senator from Rhode Island believe if that option had existed with the bondholder, if he had the right to demand either gold or silver, that if he demanded the more valuable money, it would not be within his right, that he would not have the right to do it?

Will the Senator say he would not? Will he say that it would be his duty to come in and take the cheaper metal? What I insist upon is a compliance with the terms of the contract which both parties understood. There was no question as to what it meant. There was no deception of any kind. The bondholders knew what the contract meant; they made the contract; and to my mind it is impossible, constituted as I am, to see where it would be repudiation, unjust, or dishonest for this Government to compel them to stand by the terms by which they agreed to abide.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. BERRY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. If I understand the Senator, his remarks have been applied so far entirely to the bonds issued prior to the last Administration. The bonds issued under the last Administration were considerable in number, I think nearly a third of the existing debt. Did not the Government compel the buyers of those bonds to pay for them in gold?

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, if there is a stronger obligation upon the part of the Government to pay the principal and interest of its bonds in the silver dollar, it would apply to those issued under the recent Administration. Mr. Cleveland, as the Senator from Massachusetts knows, sent a message to Congress in which he said that if the Government reserved the option to pay either in gold or silver, the Government would receive $16,000,000 less than if the Administration had the right to sell them as gold bonds. Recognizing that fact, he said to Congress: "If you will authorize the issuance of a gold bond, I can save you $16,000,000."

Congress refused to do it, and those parties purchased the bonds for $16,000,000 less because they were made coin bonds, and it was agreed that the Government should pay either in gold or silver, as it chose. They charged $16,000,000 for making the agreement in that way, and yet the Senator from Massachusetts asked me if it would be just to make these bondholders take silver under their contract.

Mr. LODGE. I asked the Senator whether those bonds were not sold and were not bought by the bondholders on the distinct understanding that they would be paid in gold.

Mr. BERRY. On the contrary, they were bought upon the distinct understanding that Congress refused to issue gold bonds—absolutely refused to do so.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, I will read just three lines from a remark of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] on February 16, 1895, when he said:

> Not a single one of those bonds was taken upon the theory that it would be paid in silver. If those men understood that they were to be paid in silver at the world's estimation of silver bullion to-day they would have brought 60 cents instead of $1.04. It is apparent on the face of the transaction that they expected these bonds to be paid in gold, or, if in silver, as good as gold. They have got the pledge of the Administration that they shall be paid in gold.

Mr. BERRY. It is true that President Cleveland said that those who would take the loan would charge him $16,000,000 more if the bonds were not made payable in gold, and according to his views, although the contract was made for coin bonds, he was still in favor of paying them in gold.

As to what the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] said, I presume the Senator from Colorado took it for granted that the Secretary of the Treasury and the President-elect would pursue the same policy which had been pursued by their predecessors, and would construe every possible contract against the people of the United States and in favor of the holders of these securities.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. BERRY. I yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. TELLER. When I discussed that question, I was discussing the point whether the bonds had brought what they ought to have brought, whether the bonds were properly sold at 104½ which have since been selling for 129. I said, in substance, that these people knew under the policy that they had forced upon the country that they would be paid in gold. Nobody ever expected them to be paid in silver.

We received $16,000,000 less than we would have received, because we declined in defiance of what the President said to insert an option that they should be paid in gold. I knew then the Administration in power would be in favor of paying the bonds in gold, no matter how they were bought. I knew the Senator from Massachusetts would be in favor of paying them in gold, no matter under what arrangement they were bought; and so I made the statement, not that the Government could not legally provide that they ought to be paid in silver, but I was stating that they would be paid in gold, as I well knew that the bondholders had the power to compel payment in gold.

Mr. BERRY. And they charged $16,000,000 because the Government had the option to pay in gold or silver.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator allow me just a moment?

Mr. BERRY. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. When President Cleveland sent his message to Congress, he sent it on the basis that the bonds were worth about 104, which was the price paid for $50,000,000 of bonds, based upon the hundred millions which he wanted to sell. These identical bonds were sold afterwards at an average of 111, and not at 104.

Mr. BERRY. The first sold at 104½, and when he made the special contract, the second one, with Morgan & Co., the Secretary of the Treasury sold at 104½, and the bonds were sold on the streets of New York three days afterwards at 118.

Mr. ALLISON. I am speaking of the bonds sold in response to that message. Those bonds were sold at 111, I think.

Mr. STEWART. Oh, no; the message came in reference to the Morgan contract.

Mr. BERRY. They were sold at 104½. The Senators can discuss that to-morrow. I prefer to go on with my remarks now.

Mr. ALLISON. I only wanted to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the amount was not $16,000,000, as stated.

Mr. BERRY. The then Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. Vilas, introduced a bill here in the Senate the title of which was "A bill to save the Government $16,000,000 by authorizing the issue of gold bonds." The President treated them in that way. It was argued on the other side of this Chamber that if the Administration were to sell gold bonds they could secure that much more for them than for coin bonds, and yet the coin bonds were issued, and the purchasers paid $16,000,000 less because they took coin bonds. According to the ideas of the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], it is justice and equity that the bondholders should come in here and demand gold when they agreed, and were paid to agree, to accept either gold or silver.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator does not mean to misstate the point I wish here to make. It was this very simple one, that those creditors took the bonds under the last Administration with the distinct understanding that they were to be paid in gold. They paid gold for them and were required to pay gold, and could not have had the bonds if they had not paid gold. They took them with that understanding and no other.

I simply quoted the Senator from Colorado because I thought he was a good witness as to that being the understanding at the time these last bonds, at least, were issued; and that having been the understanding, I think we are in honor bound to pay the bondholders what they paid us.

Mr. BERRY. I deny that there was any such understanding. I say that every Senator on the other side of the Chamber knows that the understanding was to the contrary. The bondholders asked for a gold bond; we refused it; and a coin bond was issued at the option of the Government; and they made $16,000,000 by buying the bond in that form. When the Senator from Massachusetts says they took the bonds with the understanding that that was the contract, he states precisely what is contrary to the fact, and what is known to be the fact.

Mr. LODGE. I stated precisely what the Senator from Colorado said.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator very well knows that the Senator from Colorado was simply stating that the Secretary of the Treasury would continue to violate the law, as his predecessor had done, and as his successor is now doing and will continue to do.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. May I ask a question? It is the only one I shall ask.

Mr. BERRY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. May I inquire how it is a violation of the law for the Secretary of the Treasury to exercise his discretion and pay in one of the coins which he has a right by law to pay in?

Mr. BERRY. Oh, Mr. President, when one is acting as trustee for another party and continually and continuously operates in the interest of the creditor of his ward, as it may be if he happens to be a guardian—if he continues in every transaction to take the side of the creditor, and thereby ignore the rights of the person whom he represents, there is not a court in all the land but what would remove him from office, and he would go out disgraced forever. Will you tell me how it is a violation of the law when the Secretary of the Treasury openly refuses to tender silver in the payment of these bonds, and then appears before a committee of the other House and says that the standard silver dollars are redeemable in gold?

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] said this evening that the passage of this resolution would tend to disturb the business of the country and retard its prosperity. The Senator from Iowa and those who act with him on the other side of the Chamber have made so many false prophecies in the past that their predictions have ceased to excite either hope or fear in the bosom of any man who listens to him or to them. If there is any one thing remarkable for its uniformity and its regularity, it is how the predictions of the Senators opposed to silver have not come to pass.

There is scarcely a man in this Chamber opposed to silver who was here in 1893 who has not changed his position on this question. In 1893 every Senator on this floor spoke upon the question of the unconditional repeal of the Sherman law. Every man who was here on both sides of the Chamber spoke, and with one exception, and that is the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY], every man here declared he was opposed to the single-gold standard and in favor of bimetallism.

You can not find a speech made by a Senator on this floor, except the Senator from Louisiana, wherein the Senator did not declare himself in favor of bimetallism and of both gold and silver as standard money and money of final redemption. Yet to-day those same Senators we find standing and upholding the Secretary of the Treasury and the President of the United States, when they say that they propose more effectually to fasten the gold standard upon the people of this country.

Mr. President, going back to the predictions to which I referred, they told us in 1893 that if we passed the unconditional repeal bill prosperity would burst and bloom forth in this country as it never had done. The act was unconditionally repealed, and a period of distress and business depression set in which has never been equaled in the United States of America. They told us that if we passed that bill we should have legislation in favor of silver.

Yet, in the very next session of Congress, when we passed the seigniorage bill, the President of the United States vetoed it, and he was sustained by the Republican members of the Senate in that veto. They told us in addition that if we passed the unconditional repeal bill it would insure international bimetallism. They said, and the Senator from Iowa said it, too, that there was nothing that would tend to make foreign nations come into an agreement so quickly as unconditional repeal, and that they had no doubt that if the bill were passed that condition of things would be brought about.

Yet to-day, with the exception of my friend the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], and possibly the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], there is not a man on the other side of the Chamber who believes in the gold standard who has the faintest hope that international bimetallism will ever come.

Not only that, but they told us that if we passed the bill there would be no danger of a bond issue. "If you do not pass it," they said, "we will have to sell gold bonds." They did pass it. We did not do it, but they did; and immediately following the passage of it came the sales of bonds, some of them in a way that reflected no credit upon the men who engineered the transaction.

Furthermore, when some of us insisted here that if you repealed the act and made no conditions the next cry would be in favor of retiring the greenbacks of the country, they said no man and no party would dare to stand before the American people and advocate the retirement of the greenbacks. I remember distinctly that when I was speaking upon the floor and said that the time might come when they would first retire the greenbacks and sell bonds and then the bondholders and the money changers in the East would put forward the absurd proposition that a silver dollar itself was redeemable in gold, the Senator from New Jersey, not now here, said no man not an idiot would ever contend in the United States of America that standard silver dollars were redeemable in gold.

Yet to-day we have the Secretary of the Treasury taking the broad ground that every silver dollar must be redeemed in gold, and while the President seeks in a way to hold fast possibly a few Senators like some on the other side of the Chamber, yet he has not the nerve to kick out that Secretary of the Treasury, and the conclusion is that he indorses the views expressed by him. That is the condition, and when the Senator from Iowa deals in prophecies and predictions, I tell him that I do not believe him. I tell him that he has been predicting for twenty-five years and no prediction that he has ever made within my knowledge has come to pass. I prefer to take the prophecy of others.

You say, "Oh, but what is the use of bringing this resolution in here? Why do you want to pass it?" I will tell the Senator another reason why I want to pass it. I want to serve notice on the Secretary of the Treasury and the President of the United States that any attempt to more firmly fasten the gold standard upon the people of this country will be resisted and fought at every step.

I want to tell them that the 6,000,000 people who voted for the Democratic candidate in 1896 are more firmly of the determination to-day to see that the wrongs that have been heaped upon the people shall be righted. I want to tell the bondholders that the issue of 1896 will be the issue of 1900, and that every man who loves his country, every man who despises injustice, whatever may be his affiliations in the past, as I hope and believe, will rally around that standard, and neither bribery nor intimidation can again beat down the will of the majority of the people of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. I offer an amendment to the pending resolution, which I ask may be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, it seems to me there is a disposition on the part of Senators who are antagonizing this resolution to dodge the issue, if that is not an offensive expression. There are two propositions of law in the resolution, and if I can I purpose to hold the Senators who are going to vote against it to those propositions of law. I have succeeded in getting next to the oldest member of the Committee on Finance to admit the first proposition without more than the usual equivocation and dodging with which these questions are met. I do not think the Senator met it quite fairly, but still he says the law is that the Secretary may, if he chooses, pay in silver coin.

Now, that is one proposition, and it is entirely and absolutely distinct from the other. The other, which can not be made plainer, is that—to restore to its coinage such silver coins as a legal tender in payment of said bonds, principal and interest, is not in violation of the public faith nor in derogation of the rights of the public creditor.

I wish to call the attention of Senators to the fact that this proposition of the resolution is not a declaration in favor of reinstating silver. I say for myself that I believe it to be perfectly in accord with the law, perfectly in accord with morals, perfectly in accord with sound business, to reinstate silver; but the resolution does not say so and a vote for it does not commit any man to this course. The resolution only says it is the law that you may do it and good morals to do it. Senators are not going to dodge this point upon the theory that it is not good policy. The law is one thing and the policy is another, and they will be obliged to say that that is not the law or that it is the law. Any man can vote for that, and to-morrow can vote for or against free coinage, as he sees fit, and be absolutely consistent, because it is a question of policy when you come to pass a coinage law whether you will pass it in one shape or another.

Mr. FORAKER. If it will not interrupt the Senator from Colorado, I should like to ask him a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. TELLER. I yield.

Mr. FORAKER. The question is whether or not the resolution as now offered is to be construed as meaning the same thing that it meant when, twenty years ago, it was passed?

Mr. TELLER. The resolution being a question of law can not mean anything now different from what it first meant. The Senator as a lawyer ought to know it, and every other Senator who stands here ought to know it, and everybody who voted for it in 1878 must vote for it now unless the law has been changed.

Mr. FORAKER. I will ask the Senator another question. Of course I supposed that, but is it not the fact that the resolution was passed in 1878 to meet a then existing condition of things which does not exist now?

Mr. TELLER. It was not. No man living at that day could say that there would be a coinage act passed at all. It had passed the House. It had to run the gantlet of the Senate and also the gantlet of a veto. Nobody could say whether it would become a law, and, Mr. President, it came very near not becoming a law.

All we said in 1878 was that "the law will justify this Government in paying the bonds in silver; morals, decent administration, proper regard for the public faith, will justify us in restoring silver to its coinage, exactly as it was in 1873, or in a partial way." It bound no man then, and it binds no man now to vote for free coinage.

Mr. ALLISON rose.

Mr. TELLER. I will hear the Senator from Iowa. I interrupted him, and I will now yield to him.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to ask the Senator whether he understands that the act of 1878 was a substantial compliance with the Matthews resolution, which was passed before the act of 1878?

Mr. TELLER. It was in accordance with the resolution, I will admit.

Mr. ALLISON. It was a compliance with that view?

Mr. TELLER. I admit that it was not a violation of the public faith, if that is what the Senator is trying to get at.

Mr. ALLISON. No; I am trying to get at the question, Whether or not the passage of the law of 1878 was an execution of the suggestion made in the resolution of that year that to restore coinage was not a violation of public faith?

Mr. TELLER. There was no "execution" about it. It was a declaration of principle, not an execution at all. If it was good morals and good law then, it is good law and good morals now.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator does not quite comprehend my question.

Mr. TELLER. I do; but the Senator's question does not apply.

Mr. ALLISON. Oh! I desire to know whether or not the law of 1878 was in practical execution of the provision which promised to restore silver. That is to say——

Mr. TELLER. There is no promise here to restore silver. There was not a suggestion that we were bound to restore silver. It was the simple statement that within the law and within the due scope of morals and decent government we could restore it if we saw fit. That is what we propose to say now.

Now, we do not say we believe this to be the law. We do not say we will exercise that power. We only say the right is here. That is all we said then, and I say to the Senator now (he listened to all the debates and so did I), there was never a suggestion that this was an executive principle; that it was a principle to be carried out. In contradiction to those who were saying, "If you restore silver to its old coinage, you are robbers and thieves; if you pay the bonds in silver, you are a disregarder of the public trust and public faith," we were saying, "That is not true, because the law stands here and gives the right." Then we said in addition, "Not only does the law give us that right, but it is not in derogation of the rights of the public creditor nor a breach of public faith."

It is nothing that could be executed. The declaration may be existing to-day, as the Senator says. It does exist unless it has been done away with. It is the declaration of a principle we made then and which we have a right to make now, when it is denied by the Senator in part and by some Senators in toto.

Mr. ALLISON rose.

Mr. TELLER. I will hear the Senator.

Mr. ALLISON. The phraseology of the Matthews resolution of 1878, which passed prior to the act of 1878, was—

That to restore to its coinage such silver coins as a legal tender in payment of said bonds, principal and interest, is not in violation of the public faith nor in derogation of the rights of the public creditor.

I ask whether the Bland Act did not restore to its coinage silver coins as legal tender in payment of bonds?

Mr. FORAKER. Within the meaning of the resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. Within the meaning of the resolution.

Mr. TELLER. Suppose it did. I will admit, for the argument, if the Senators wish, that it did.

Mr. ALLISON. That is what I want to know.

Mr. TELLER. Suppose it did. Is there a coinage now? A limited coinage. We assert on our side that a limited coinage is an honest coinage. The Senator's associates in this Chamber and his political organization declare that it is a dishonest coinage. They have coined $10,000,000, the Senator says. Why did they coin $10,000,000? Because the Government said to the men who took a certain class of its securities, the Treasury notes, "We will keep at all times in the Treasury silver dollars, that you may have them if you want;" and millions and millions of those Treasury notes have gone into the Treasury and been exchanged for the despised silver dollar.

The Government is under obligations to keep the silver there; but it coins it only for that kind of currency and for nothing else. There is not a dollar being coined that can be used to pay a bond—not one—and so the situation is identical with that of 1878, when we passed this act by a vote in this Chamber of more than two-thirds, including some of the ablest lawyers who ever sat in this Chamber—42 to 20—and in the House of Representatives by a vote of 189 to 79.

The Senator from Iowa can not avoid that by saying that there is a condition existing now that did not exist then. If there is a condition, it is a condition in the country that takes hold of the Senator from Iowa and makes him fearful to announce a legal principle that he stood up here and advocated in a speech and voted for in 1878.

Mr. ALLISON. Which one?

Mr. TELLER. This very one.

Mr. President, I rose to make only this one statement. It is a question of law. What may be the obligations of the Government under the law I am not going to consider now.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] uses harsh terms for those of us who believe that no violation of the faith or obligation of the Government is incurred in issuing a silver dollar and paying it out. That is not the question. Let the Senator from Massachusetts march up to that question and say that that is not the law; and if it is not the law, let him tell the country why, if it was the law in 1878, it is not the law now. It will worry the Senator from Massachusetts——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut rose.

Mr. TELLER. Or the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] to show that it is not the law.

I know the Senator from Massachusetts held that it was not the law in 1878. He did not vote on it, but he was paired with the Senator from Missouri, who held that it was the law. So the Senator from Massachusetts may consistently hold that it is not the law now; but let those who were then in favor it tell us why it is not the law. When the Senate of the United States by a vote of 42 to 20 and the House of Representatives by a vote of 189 to 79 declare a proposition of law, the authority is respectable enough to attract the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts. If he says it is not the law, let him give us some reason why it is not.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me. I do not consider this a straight question of law. It is a question of the violation of public faith and the rights of the public creditor. Now, a question affecting the public faith depends very often on questions other than those of mere law. Nobody doubts your power.

Mr. TELLER. Very well. I do not mean the power, at least not the power alone, but the power has been exercised, not that we have the power, but the contract with these people made under the law which then existed justifies the Government as a legal proposition in now—I am not going beyond that—now paying in silver.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me—I do not want to interrupt him, but he has appealed to me, and I suppose he intended to call my attention to this proposition. I wish to say again that there is where I dissent from the Senator. The United States is not dealing with the public creditor as a speculator in a wheat deal.

Mr. TELLER. Nobody said it was.

Mr. HOAR. Shylock's doctrine was a question of law, as he thought for a good while, but I never heard that anybody said that Shylock had a right, without violating faith, without derogation of the rights of Antonio, to take the pound of flesh.

Mr. TELLER. I will not belittle this subject by going into any comparison of that kind.

Mr. HOAR. I think the Senator belittles the subject in talking about a question of law when the public honor is concerned.

Mr. TELLER. The question whether the public is honored or dishonored by an act must depend upon what is the law.

Mr. HOAR. Not at all.

Mr. TELLER. I will speak to that point to-morrow, if I have an opportunity. The Senator from Connecticut, I believe, wants to ask a question.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I wish to know whether the Senator claims that the last sentence, "that to restore to its coinage," etc., is simply a declaration of law and nothing more?

Mr. TELLER. It is simply a declaration of the right that grew out of the antecedent admission of the law, a declaration of law. The bonds were made payable in silver money if we had it, and if we had not, we could create it. That is what it amounted to in 1878. That is all it amounts to now. If I may have the privilege of saying something on other points involved to-morrow or later, I will be glad to do so.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. In 1878, when the resolution was adopted, there was no provision of law for the coinage of standard silver dollars?

Mr. TELLER. Of course not.

Mr. ALDRICH. And they had no legal-tender quality?

Mr. TELLER. Yes, they had.

Mr. ALDRICH. No.

Mr. TELLER. I deny that the legal-tender quality was ever taken away from the silver dollar.

Mr. ALDRICH. Five dollars——

Mr. TELLER. The legal-tender quality of the silver dollar was unlimited and was never touched by law.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Revised Statutes said that silver coins were legal tender to the amount of $5.

Mr. TELLER. That never passed.

Mr. ALDRICH. It does not make any difference whether it was done in 1873 or 1874. In 1878 no silver dollars were coined under the law, and there was no legal-tender quality attaching to the silver dollar. By the act of 1878 provision was made for the coinage of standard silver dollars, and they were given by law expressly a legal-tender quality to an indefinite amount and for all purposes, public and private, except where otherwise expressly stipulated in the contract. Since that time I know of no one on this floor or elsewhere who has denied the naked legal right of the United States to pay its bonds or any further obligations in standard silver dollars.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator can not be in earnest when he makes that statement.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am perfectly in earnest. I know of no authority who denies it. I know of none. There may be some one, but I do not know who it is.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know what the Senator knows. The Senator from Massachusetts, I think, will promptly deny the legal right to reenact the law of 1873, which was repealed, and give it the same force that it had then and give the money the same character.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator mean the senior Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. TELLER. Yes. I think he will; I do not know.

Mr. HOAR. I have always held ever since I was old enough to understand such questions, and hold now, the doctrine of the Supreme Court of the United States in what are known as the Legal-Tender Cases, a doctrine reaffirmed by every judge who has been on the bench in recent times—that as a matter of constitutional power Congress could declare what the money of the United States consisted in, whether gold, silver, or paper.

Congress may to-morrow, if a war break out, as a matter of naked constitutional power, make the copper cents of this country legal tender at the rate of a dollar for every cent, as every other country in the world can, just as we have the constitutional power to pass a great many unjust and oppressive laws on other subjects; but the fact that Congress is the depository of the public confidence in that respect does not settle questions of good faith, of right, of honesty, the constitutional obligation to do what is best for the interest of the country. That is a very difficult question. Let me put one illustration.

Mr. TELLER. I do not desire that the Senator shall make a speech.

Mr. HOAR. I thought the Senator from Colorado was through.

Mr. TELLER. I do not want the Senator from Massachusetts to argue the question in my time.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator, I understood, was through for to-day——

Mr. TELLER. I have not concluded.

Mr. HOAR. And wanted to conclude to-morrow, and appealed to me before he sat down.

Mr. TELLER. I merely wish to say a word more. I will let the Senator from Massachusetts finish, and then I will proceed.

Mr. HOAR. Let me put a proposition. During the war Congress made the Treasury note a legal tender for all debts, public and private. The Commonwealth of Massachusetts, its debt being held almost wholly abroad, by persons in whom it had no interest, by persons unfriendly generally to the Government of the United States, paid its debt, all through, principal and interest, in gold; and its great railroads, the Western Railroad, the Boston and Worcester Railroad when gold was up to 250, did the same thing. They did it not from any respect for those bondholders, not because the obligation was not a hard one, but because they felt that when they made the agreement it was their duty, in honor and in good faith, to pay back to the creditors the value they had promised to pay as near as they could get at it. That is the distinction. The Senator has not put into his resolution what he says he now means——

Mr. TELLER. I have not put anything into it.

Mr. HOAR. Or whoever drew the resolution, that it is not in violation of the public faith and in derogation of the rights of the public creditor to do this thing.

Mr. TELLER. If it is not the law, it is in derogation of his rights.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It may be if it is the law.

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps it is if it is the law.

Mr. TELLER. The position of the Senator from Massachusetts is that we have a right to change our system of finance; not having any silver money, we have a right to create it; but that we have no right in morals to make anybody take it. I should like to see a government execute its laws upon that theory.

Mr. President, in 1834 we took 6 cents and a fraction out of every gold dollar.

Mr. HOAR. Let me put the Senator a question.

Mr. TELLER. No; I am just going to conclude now; you can put your question to me to-morrow.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to——

Mr. TELLER. No; I do not care about it. We took six cents and a fraction of a cent out of every gold dollar in 1834. The question was raised then—not to any great extent, because the people had not grown so wise as they are now, but it was agitated somewhat—whether the Government could change it. The Supreme Court of the United States afterwards declared that the Government could take any amount it chose out of the dollar; that it was absolutely capable of doing what Japan did later in taking one-half of the gold out of the dollar and making the remaining portion a dollar to pay all debts. If the Government has a right to do that under the law, the Government has a right to use that money.

Mr. HOAR. I wish the Senator would let me put a question.

Mr. TELLER. I will, but I do not want to keep up this debate.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not hold that it is a matter of strict constitutional power that the Government has the right to make the present copper cent a legal tender for $100?

Mr. TELLER. The Senator is a very astute and excellent lawyer——

Mr. HOAR. That is not answering the question I asked.

Mr. TELLER. And he knows the tricks of the trade, or of the profession. That is not a fair nor is it a decent way to discuss this question. Nobody supposes that you are going to exercise power to such an extreme extent. I think that the law always means when the power is given that it must be used with some decency and discretion.

Mr. HOAR. That is what we say.

Mr. TELLER. But it is the legal power I am speaking of. Now, we may suppose that the Government of the United States might make a copper cent pay some man's debt for a hundred dollars, but the thing will never happen——

Mr. HOAR. No; I understand that——

Mr. TELLER. The Government of the United States will keep itself within bounds.

Mr. HOAR. But if it did it, would it be then an act of good faith? That is the question.

Mr. TELLER. It might be an act of good faith under some circumstances to do almost anything, but let me state the position here: I want to have it distinctly understood that the Senator from Massachusetts has no patent on maintaining the faith of this country. I want him to understand that during the time he and I have been in the Senate he has not been more careful of the public faith, according to my judgment, than I have been. We differ, perhaps, as to how the public faith can be preserved. In my judgment the resolution does not weaken the credit of the country nor threaten the stability of our money system, as the Senator from Iowa insists. On the contrary, I believe it will do the other thing; that it will help us instead of hurting us.

Now, I do not intend to go into any discussion as to the good faith or the bad faith implied in the resolution. I am getting a little tired of having certain Senators rise here who, because they live in some certain section of the country, think they have a patent on honesty. I have always been willing to admit that they had all the brains, but I am not willing to admit here or anywhere else that they are more honest than the rest of us. We differ on economic questions. I believe it is the duty of the Government of the United States to pay its debts in silver. I do not believe that anybody gave the discretion to pay in silver or in gold to the executive department of the Government for the purpose of enabling it to put extra burdens on the people.

That discretion was given to be exercised in the interests of the Government and not to its detriment. The executive department is bound by law. The executive department for twenty years now has been making law, and before we get through with this debate you will hear that the declarations of an executive officer are to be taken against a plain, positive statement of statute. I have heard it here, if the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] has not—I have heard it here again and again that, if the act of 1870 providing for the issue of bonds did mean that the Government should pay them in silver or gold at its option, that option was taken away by the declaration of the Secretary of the Treasury; that he legislated the statute out. That is the modern doctrine, and against that I am protesting. I am protesting that it is no degradation of the public honor to pay in a silver dollar that this Senator sitting in front of me says is as good and is to be maintained as good as a gold dollar.

Why do Senators say that it would be dishonest to pay a silver dollar? Mr. President, there is not a blistered hand in all these United States that does not take it for a day's work. There is not a producer anywhere in the United States who does not take it in payment for his product. What in the name of heaven gives to the bondholder who bought our bonds in the hour of our distress for 40 cents on the dollar in paper money (paper money that would not exchange for more than 40 cents in gold and less than that in silver) a right to demand a different kind of money than the farmer or the manufacturer or the day laborer receives? I want the Senators who take the position that there should be a different kind of money for the bondholder to go before the American people and say that there is a class of men who are entitled to the bounty of the Government, and that they may put up the price of gold as high as they please and they will appeal to the honor of the Government to pay it.

Mr. President, the Government should pay according to the contract. The dollar that is according to the contract is an honest dollar everywhere, and no person can show to the contrary. No fallacious reasoning, no nonsense of logic can make out, when I hand to my debtor the dollar that I contracted to pay, that I have not discharged that debt as an honest and righteous man might.

This is all we contend for. The American people are weighed down with heavy burdens. They are oppressed with great taxes, which are growing higher and higher. I tell you no executive officer has a right to add to them 15 or 20 or 30 or 40 per cent, which addition he may think is demanded by what he mistakenly calls the honor of the country.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. If it will not interrupt——

Mr. TELLER. No. I have in my career here seen the most disgraceful transactions that ever were perpetrated in a free land perpetrated by the executive department of this Government. I have seen the National Treasury robbed, and the men who stand here on this floor making the welkin ring with their denunciations of those of us who would pay in silver have never yet, not one of them, stood on this floor to condemn this robbery.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President——

Mr. TELLER. No; I will not yield.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. If it will not——

Mr. TELLER. I will not yield. Will the Senator sit down?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado declines to yield.

Mr. TELLER. I do not mean to be discourteous, but I am going to quit now; I do not propose to go on any further. To-morrow the Senator from Indiana may ask me any question he chooses.

Mr. President, I have shown, I confess, that I am deeply concerned. I do not know but that I may be so low in moral intelligence that I do not know what is right, but I have tried hard to learn. I have given to this question years of study that few men have. Before my God and my countrymen, I believe that this is the great question of the age; that the money question threatens this people not only with danger to the existence of the Republic, but that it involves the enslavement of mankind throughout the world.

In 1893 I said to my countrymen, "You are entering upon an era of industrial slavery such as the world has never seen." Mr. President, it has come. It is here, with all your boasted prosperity. You close down the mills of New England. You take from the laboring man 10, 15, and 20 per cent of his wages. You beggar him; you destroy his opportunity; you make it impossible for him to discharge the duties of citizenship, and then you tell us that all these things may be done, that prices may be lowered, that products may be kept at a price that does not pay for production, and in the end labor must stand it all; and yet you tell us that you are doing this that the bondholder may have the bounty—not the contracted price, but the bounty—the beneficence of the Government of the United States.

Mr. President, if beneficence is to be dealt out, let it be dealt out to the men who form the great basis of society. Let it be dealt out to the men who maintain the honor and integrity of the country. Would you look to the bondholder, would you look to the money shaver, would you look to the banker in your hour of distress?

If your flag were assailed, you would go to the man with calloused hands, for whom the silver dollar is good enough and who is willing to take it. To that class you go. When the great contest came between one and another portion of our country, the bondholder now, the money lender then, said to the Government, "We will take your securities at 12 per cent discount." What did the great body of the American people do? They said, "We will carry your flag, we will fight your battles, we will do all this for $13 a month, and we will take our pay in greenbacks." No New England man rose then, no New York man rose then, and said, "It is dishonest to give these soldiers 40-cent money." When they went into the Army the greenback dollar was worth 100 cents. They have appealed here again and again, by petition and otherwise, that we make up to them the depreciation of the money that they received from us, a mere stipend for the danger that they incurred, and, Mr. President, not a man in this Chamber or in the other who holds now that the honor of the Government is being destroyed by the payment of silver would listen to that appeal.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] rose here and wanted a mere paucity of one or two million dollars for these old worn-out soldiers, and if a vote had been taken every man who is prating about the honor of the country would have voted against him. If his proposition had received any votes at all, they would have come from those who believe that men are better than bonds, that liberty is better even than the honor, if that honor is to be gauged by those who think the honor of this land is to be maintained in paying that which the contract does not call for and disregarding it in a hundred ways where it could be made to appear to the world that we were sensitive of both our honor and our dignity.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I wish to detain the Senate only two or three minutes. I wish simply to point out where the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] so full of attack and misrepresentation of other people, has landed himself. He says that the question of paying a public creditor is a question of law, of legal power, not of honor or of good faith. He says that we have the legal power to make the copper cent a legal tender for $10.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I did not say that.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator admitted that in so many words.

Mr. TELLER. I said perhaps the legal power, but that is one of those things——

Mr. HOAR. That is what I am talking about. I do not yield to the Senator unless I misstate him.

Mr. TELLER. I understand. I shall seek the floor to-morrow.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

Mr. TELLER. I will reply to the Senator then.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Colorado says that we have the legal power, and he has repeated it now, to make the copper cent a legal tender for $10. Then he says that the question as to what we shall pay our public creditor in is not a question of honor or of good faith, but that it is a question solely of law. So by the inevitable logic of his position we have the right to-morrow to make the copper cent a legal tender for $10 and pay every public and private creditor with it at that rate. The Senator has either got to march straight up to the cannon's mouth on that proposition or he has got to point out a difference in logic between paying off all the public and private obligations at 1 cent on the dollar with a copper cent or at 40 cents on the dollar with a silver coin. That is a question of difference in degree and not of kind. Now, I will not say what the Senator from Colorado said to the honorable Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], that he is going to squirm out of that, I will not say what the Senator from Colorado said to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS], that he should sit down.

Mr. TELLER. I will take that back.

Mr. HOAR. I will not use either of those illustrations. It is not my fashion.

Mr. TELLER. I have taken back the word "squirm."

Mr. HOAR. I should think that the Senator would ask to have his entire speech stricken out.

Mr. TELLER. I do not, Mr. President.

Mr. HOAR. I would. Mr. President, the Senator talks a good deal about the poor man and the blistered hand.

Mr. TELLER. I do not think I used the term "poor man" in my speech.

Mr. HOAR. Well, the laboring man, and the blistered hand, and he undertakes to make a distinction between the class of citizens who fight the battles of the country and do its work and the class of citizens to whom the Government made its promises and pledged its faith. When that Senator proposes to take a money that is money in no other civilized country in the world and make it out of a bullion now worth 49 cents on the dollar——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Forty-four cents.

Mr. HOAR. Worth 44 cents on the dollar, and to go down at that, what is going to be done? Is not every laboring man who works for a dollar a day to get that and nothing more? Is not every life policy in this country to be paid off in that? Is not every fire-insurance policy on the poor man's cottage to be paid off in that? Are not the $500,000,000 belonging to the savings banks of my State, the little accumulations of these laboring men, not of these rich men, to be paid off in that? Is not the Senator going to put on the workingmen of the States that he speaks of with so much contempt—the East and the North—the terrible burden of having the accumulated property in their savings banks, now worth $500,000,000, shrink at once, and at one stroke of his pen, to $200,000,000? Then he gets up and talks about his interest in the workingmen.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. Let me finish one other sentence, and then I will yield.

Mr. President, who are the holders of these Government bonds? You do not go among the speculators of Wall street or State street and find the men there with their pockets or their safes stuffed with these securities. They are the securities in which, believing that the question of paying its debt was a question of honor and of good faith and not of the law as interpreted by Shylock, the laboring men have, in their savings banks and in their life-insurance companies, trusted the faith of the Government with the little all which belongs to them and to their children.

What is to become of our pension laws? The Senator says that the bondholder did not fight, carrying the flag of the Government. I think the men who carried the flag of the Government are interested in these bonds, as I have said. You can not—I will not say squirm, but politely and courteously, with the elegant fashion in which the Senator from Colorado escapes from responsibility, you can not—get out of the fact that you are trying to pay every old pensioner's pension that is established by law now at the rate of 44 cents on the dollar.

Mr. President, this is not a question of sophistry or of special pleading or of saying one thing and meaning another. When that Senator votes for this proposition, reported by a Senator on the other side of the Chamber, he means to have the United States understand just what the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] so frankly and so honorably—and he is always frank and honorable—avowed as his purpose, that the United States shall have the right to pay off this vast amount of debt in silver, and that it is its duty to do it; and that when the United States Government does it and discharges that duty it has to do it under a policy and under a law which is to make every private creditor on this continent avail himself of the same right and discharge the same duty. That is what the Senator from Colorado thinks is moral and is good faith. I do not think I shall select him for the chair of morals in any university to which I want the youth of America to go.

Mr. TELLER. I should hope not.

Mr. HOAR. Now I will listen to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HOAR. I do. I yield the floor.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I do not wish to make a speech. I wish to propound a question to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I will answer it, if I can.

Mr. RAWLINS. As I understand his proposition, it is that with the free coinage of silver every debtor in the United States will avail himself of the opportunity, it being a legal tender in the payment of debts, to pay off all his indebtedness in silver coin, which under those conditions, as I understand the Senator from Massachusetts, would be worth but 49 cents on the dollar.

Mr. HOAR. Forty-four cents.

Mr. RAWLINS. That is, all the national indebtedness, all the State, municipal, and county indebtedness, all the school indebtedness, all policies of insurance, all railroad indebtedness, and all individual indebtedness, which I understand is estimated by high authority as amounting to some $60,000,000,000. We have in circulation in the United States, either in silver coin or in its representatives, about $500,000,000. If these two estimates be correct, there would be for every dollar in silver which we possess $120 of indebtedness; in other words, there would be 120 units of demand for every silver dollar in existence.

Now, I submit to the Senator from Massachusetts the question: Where are you going to get the silver with which to pay off your $60,000,000,000 of indebtedness? If all the silver in all the world—if the result of all the accumulation of all the mining since the world began were brought here and coined into silver dollars, it would amount to but $4,000,000,000.

Mr. GRAY. All the silver and all the gold that ever was mined in the United States would not liquidate one day's indebtedness that rises out of the commercial transactions of the United States.

Mr. RAWLINS. That is precisely what I am saying. With the free coinage of silver, silver would be at par, precisely as it is to-day. Bimetallism is but an automatic means of adjustment by which increasing demand falls upon diminishing values and diminishing demand falls upon increasing values. Thus we secure the equilibrium and preserve the equality. It is the demand for money which gives value to money.

Senators upon this side indicate that this Government, by some act of legislation or by some act of administration, ought to inject a value into silver which it otherwise would not possess in order to bring it up to a par in value with gold. At the same time we are informed by Senators upon the other side that it is impossible by an act of legislation to give value to money. I agree with Senators upon the other side that a mere act of legislation would not impart value to silver or any other thing, but Congress alone has the power by coinage to make silver available for use as money to meet an already existing and unsatisfied demand for money; and when so made available, it is the demand for money which gives value to silver, and not the act of legislation. There is no law upon our statute books, there is no governmental pledge by any authority of our Government, to exchange gold for silver. Such an exchange is not legally enforceable in the United States. What is it, then, that gives value to the existing silver dollar in the United States? That brings us, it seems to me, to the important question which now confronts the Senate for the passage of this resolution.

It is conceded that there is legal authority, and in accordance with the terms of the contract, that we may pay either in silver or gold, at the discretion of our Government. The question is, Would it be dishonest or dishonorable to do so when these silver dollars are issued from the mint of the United States and made a legal tender in the payment of debts? If the Treasury should pay to the bondholder a silver dollar in liquidation of so much of his indebtedness, would it cheat or wrong him? If so, how? A silver dollar in his hands would have a purchasing power equal to that of any other dollar in circulation. It would have a command over every effort and struggle for existence greater than any silver or other dollar possessed at the time of the making of the contract. That silver dollar can be transformed into anything which will administer to the necessities or to the comforts or to the convenience of mankind or the elevation of the human race. I say that the payment to the creditor of a silver dollar which is thus usable for all these purposes is not dishonest and does not despoil him of any right or any property of which he may be in possession.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I wish to say as to the Senator's question that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] distinctly admitted in the question which gave rise to my taking part in this discussion that if under the free coinage of silver a silver dollar should shrink to 30 or 40 cents as compared with the gold dollar, it would still be the right and duty of the Government to pay the debt in silver, such being the contract. I want a square answer to that proposition. That is what we are dealing with, not as to whether under some future policy silver might be raised again to its old value; that is another question. But the Senator from Utah now says that all these debts would amount, if I understood him, to sixty thousand million dollars, I think he said—I do not know but it may have been six hundred thousand millions——

Mr. RAWLINS. I was taking the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HOAR. Very well. The Senator says that we should have, in order to pay those debts, a sum of money equal to the entire mass of the indebtedness.

Mr. RAWLINS. The Senator misunderstood me if he understood me as saying such a thing. I did not say that.

Mr. HOAR. In substance.

Mr. RAWLINS. No; not in substance.

Mr. HOAR. I do not suppose it would require any increase in the volume of coinage or reduce it any if all these debts shrunk in value, for they will not all be paid at once. The most perfect answer to the Senator is an answer which an old undertaker once made when he took part in a political discussion, I think, in the city of Portland. He said: "There are 50,000 inhabitants in Portland and each one has got to have a coffin, but I never keep more than a dozen or twenty coffins on hand, because they do not all want their coffins at the same time." [Laughter.]

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from Utah allow me a word?

Mr. RAWLINS. In a moment I will.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah has the floor.

Mr. RAWLINS. I have not said that the holders of all this immense amount of indebtedness would have to be paid at once in silver dollars, but I understood the Senator from Massachusetts to use precisely that expression. In alluding to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] the Senator from Massachusetts stated that if we had substantial free coinage of silver these dollars would only be worth 49 cents, and then every single debtor in the United States, and, according to the declaration of this resolution, the Government of the United States itself, would at once despoil these creditors by making tender of silver in payment of their debts. It was a declaration that all these people would avail themselves at once of this opportunity to perform their obligations by paying less than one-half.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator now permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. RAWLINS. With pleasure.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] stated correctly that I said the contract being that we have a right to pay in silver or gold as we choose, if silver went down we not only had the right, but it was the duty of those representing the Government to pay in that metal. Later on in his remarks he said we did not want to settle on this Shylock basis. I will state to the Senator that the ancient Shylock only demanded his bond, but the modern Shylock demands double the amount of his bond.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. RAWLINS. I would prefer not to yield. I have but a few words to say in addition to what I have already said.

Mr. President, referring to the contention made by the Senator from Massachusetts, I desire to state in brief the position which I think the Senate occupies in respect to this resolution, now that I am upon the floor.

The first question is, would it be legal for the Government of the United States to pay in silver coin, even if there was free coinage of silver in our mints? It is conceded, I believe, by every Senator who has spoken upon the question, to be a matter of law and in accordance with the terms of the contract that we have such right.

The next important inquiry is, whether it would be honest and just for the Government of the United States, with free coinage of silver, so to avail itself of its legal right in accordance with the terms of the contract to pay these obligations in silver, for the Government to exercise the option which it has reserved to itself to do this thing?

The question is then propounded to some upon this side of the Chamber: "Suppose, in view of the changed conditions since 1878, silver dollars when so coined are worth in comparison with gold but 49 cents upon the dollar, would you then think it was honest and just on the part of the United States to avail itself of this advantage and thus pay in this depreciated coin?" I think there is no such question as that confronting the people of the United States.

But you might look at the question from another standpoint. Silver, 49 cents upon the dollar of its bullion value as compared with gold, to-day has as great a command over commodities, over every struggle and effort for human sustenance and livelihood, over every effort to elevate civilization and make progress as it had in times gone by, and if we are to believe the highest authorities upon the question of finance, it is not silver which has depreciated, but gold which has appreciated.

The proper way would be, in view of existing conditions, to say that gold is 50 per cent above par as compared with the great mass of commodities for which it may be exchanged.

Now, we are put the question upon the other side——

Mr. HALE. I do not rise to ask a question on this subject, but if the Senator desires to speak at length I wish to ask him if he prefers to go on to-night or to wait until to-morrow morning?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] will have the floor to-morrow morning.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the Senator from Utah proceed.

Mr. HALE. Then I shall endeavor to get the floor after the Senator concludes to move an adjournment.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, if it be correct to say that silver as measured by commodities and by labor has a purchasing power equal to gold which it possessed at the time the contract was made, and gold has appreciated, the question is whether it is just and whether it is equitable to both parties to the contract, the bondholder and the people of the United States, who are compelled to contribute the money, in the form of taxation with which to pay this indebtedness—is it fair and equitable as between these two classes that the bondholder should exact the full measure of the obligation in a currency 50 per cent higher in value than at the time the contract was made? If that be true, the justice of the case rests in the performance of the contract by paying in a currency equal in its purchasing power with that which the currency possessed which was obtained by the sale of the bonds at the time of the making of the contract.

The question of national honor has a double significance. I say that every contract ought to be equitably and justly performed. I say that the regulation of the currency, the amount of money which should be provided for the doing of the business of the country, ought to be such that long-time contracts may be equitably and justly performed; that no man ought to be compelled to suffer loss by the undue expansion or by reason of the unjust contraction of the circulating medium of society; and I stand upon the position that it is not only legal to pay these obligations in silver, but that it is equitable and just to do so.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, it is getting late, and enough has been developed to-day to set us thinking overnight. The debate has settled one thing—that it is the object and purpose of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] who brings this resolution in here of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who is, I think, its father, and of those who are in accord with them in sentiment, first to bring the country on its financial basis to the silver dollar, to silver monometallism, to the payment of all debts, public and private, in a dollar which, compared with gold, is worth 44 cents, and may to-morrow or a month from now be worth 30 cents. The debate has not gone for nothing which has demonstrated that; and it will set the country to thinking about it.

Less than eighteen months ago, Mr. President, in a vote of more than 12,000,000 of freemen these propositions were voted down by more than 1,000,000 majority of the popular vote.

Mr. VEST. Oh, no.

Mr. TELLER. About 600,000 majority.

Mr. HALE. And I have no fear that, upon full discussion and full consideration, the American people are to take the back track on the great propositions that were settled in the Presidential election of 1896.

I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. VEST. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine withdraw his motion?

Mr. HALE. I withdraw it for a moment.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, it is hardly parliamentary, I was about to say, certainly it is not fair for the Senator to make the remarks he has, and then immediately move an adjournment.

Mr. HALE. I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. VEST. I disclaim the Senator's right to put his opponents in a false position—for it is certainly one—and then to close the debate by moving to adjourn.

It is not true that we propose to put this country on a monometallic basis. We are bimetallists, and bimetallism means the use of both gold and silver upon a parity, as the Senators are fond of expressing it; and I think I can demonstrate that the free coinage of silver, so far from creating monometallism, will simply raise silver to the plane it occupied before the mints were closed unjustly and wrongfully in 1873. So much for that.

But, Mr. President, I shall enter into no elaborate argument at this hour of the afternoon. I ask to have read—for it was not read at the time—the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. ALDRICH. Before the Senator leaves that branch of the discussion, will he allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator think that the passage of this resolution will be tantamount to a declaration in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of silver at 16 to 1?

Mr. VEST. I have not said that, Mr. President, although one portion of the resolution declares that it is not a violation of the national faith and honor to open the mints again to silver coinage; and we have now exactly the same condition, so far as silver is concerned, that existed in 1878. The mints were closed then.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator himself believes, then, that this resolution is equivalent to a declaration in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of silver at 16 to 1?

Mr. VEST. I think, Mr. President, that this is a declaration exactly in the language of the resolution. To open the mints to silver is not a violation of the national honor or good faith of the country.

Mr. ALDRICH. I would suggest to the Senator that we have been trying all day to find out what the authors and finishers of this resolution mean by it.

Mr. VEST. No explanation or statement by us could make the Senator from Rhode Island understand this matter as we think it ought to be understood.

Mr. ALDRICH. Probably not.

Mr. VEST. Here is a very plain resolution, about which we have heard Senators on the other side declare that a wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err therein; and upon that they base their assertion that there is no necessity for reasserting it; that the whole country understands it; and yet the Senator wants to know what we mean by it.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. It seems very difficult to induce Senators who want to accept this resolution and pass it to indicate their construction of it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Except the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY].

Mr. SPOONER. Except the Senator from Arkansas. It refers to the restoration of silver to its coinage. There are, as I understand, two sorts of silver coinage which have been known—one the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1 and the other the limited coinage of silver, which occurred under the Bland-Allison Act, the act of 1890, and, perhaps, in a way, to-day. Now, what coinage does the Senator understand this declaration to restore?

Mr. VEST. I hope it means, and I think it means, the free and unlimited coinage of silver at 16 to 1.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is what I supposed.

Mr. VEST. That standard silver dollars of 412½ grains shall be received for all debts, public and private.

Mr. HALE. That is it exactly.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. Did it mean that in 1878?

Mr. ALDRICH. It did not.

Mr. VEST. I supposed it did.

Mr. FORAKER. And does the Senator from Missouri agree with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] when he said, as I understood him to say a while ago, that he understood the Bland-Allison Act of 1878 to be the formulation into law of the opinion expressed by the resolution, which preceded the passage of that act only a few days?

Mr. TELLER. I did not say any such thing. I did not think any such thing, either.

Mr. VEST. I did not understand the Senator from Colorado to say that.

Mr. FORAKER. Then I very greatly misunderstood the Senator from Colorado, and other Senators misunderstood him. That question I pressed myself, but I did not get a satisfactory answer. The Senator from Iowa, however, certainly did press it until he got an answer, which was tantamount to the interpretation I have given.

Mr. TELLER. I made no such statement.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not pretend to quote the Senator's exact words.

Mr. TELLER. I said that this was a declaration of principle; that it was not a thing that could be executed, and therefore it was not executed by anything we had done.

Mr. VEST. I understood the Senator to say that, and the RECORD will show it.

Mr. FORAKER. It was a declaration of principle; but the Senator did also say, as I understood him—of course I may be mistaken about that—that the passage of the Bland-Allison Act a few days after the passage of this concurrent resolution was a formulation into law of the opinion that resolution expressed.

Mr. TELLER. I shall withhold the speech I made to-day, but I will let the Senator look it over if he desires.

Mr. FORAKER. No; I do not wish to look it over.

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio a question.

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator entertain the opinion he did some four years ago, that the par value of the silver dollar is created by its being redeemed in gold, or by the possibility of its being redeemed in gold?

Mr. FORAKER. I never said, so far as I can now recall, that the silver dollar was redeemable in gold, but I did say that the silver dollar was in effect redeemable in gold by reason of the statutory pledge of the Government to maintain the parity of the two metals, and the parity could not be maintained except only by keeping one as good as the other.

Mr. VEST. I do not understand what the Senator means when he says "in effect redeemable in gold," when you can not go to the Treasury at any time or a subtreasury at any place and get a gold dollar for a silver dollar.

Mr. FORAKER. Let me say further to the Senator that I do not know to what expression of mine he refers, but I am sure I never expressed any such opinion except only with the qualification I have now indicated. While it is true you can not go with a silver dollar to a subtreasury and demand a gold dollar for it by reason of any statutory provision, yet the legal effect of the pledge to maintain the parity is to create an exchangeability; and, if I am not mistaken, Mr. Carlisle said in an official circular issued by him in August, 1896, that if it were necessary to maintain the parity of the silver dollar with the gold dollar he would exchange the gold dollar for it; that he would feel it his duty as Secretary of the Treasury to order the exchange when demanded.

Mr. TELLER. It was not an official circular; it was a private letter, which was published.

Mr. FORAKER. I probably am mistaken as to the character of the publication, but I remember to have seen a publication to that effect.

Mr. TELLER. Yes; Mr. Carlisle said so.

Mr. VEST. I do not know what was said by the Senator from Ohio, because public men are often misquoted; but I know that in a speech delivered, I think, at Columbus, the Senator was reported to have said, "What makes the silver dollar worth 100 cents in this country? Because you can go to the Treasury and get a gold dollar for the silver dollar."

Mr. FORAKER. Now that the Senator has referred to it, I can get him the speech in print and show him exactly what I said. I said at Columbus that under this pledge to maintain the parity, as the Treasury was administered, the silver dollar had been kept equal in value to the gold dollar, and that the system of coinage which we had adopted was intended to enable us to do that, for by this pledge to maintain the parity we put the wealth and power of this country behind the silver dollar as a prop and held it up to equality with gold, and by limiting it we made it possible to keep the silver dollar at par with gold.

But it will afford me a great deal of pleasure to bring here for the benefit of the Senator from Missouri the exact language I employed. I can not now recall it. However, I think he will find it as I have stated it.

Mr. ALLISON. I trust the Senator from Missouri will yield to me for a moment.

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. Having been two or three times suspected of not being quite frank in all I have said, which of course I disclaim, I should like the Senator from Missouri to tell me whether he thinks the Bland-Allison Act, so called, the act of 1878, was a substantial compliance with the concurrent resolution then passed, which promised the restoration of silver to its coinage, making it a legal tender at 412½ grains of standard silver to the dollar. Was that act a substantial compliance with what was supposed to be the resolution of 1878?

Mr. VEST. What is the use of opening a kindergarten now on that question, when those who agree with me about silver have always contended that it was not a compliance?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to open a kindergarten, but I asked the same question of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], and I understood him to say that it was a substantial compliance at that time. I want to disclaim for myself and for those who voted for that resolution in 1878 that it then meant free coinage. I have pressed that home upon my friend the Senator from Colorado to-day, and said that if the resolution did not then mean free coinage this amounts to nothing. I want Senators who are pretty free in their criticisms of me to march up themselves to the mark as respects their understanding of the resolution which they ask us to vote on.

If it means that silver dollars shall be restored as they were restored in 1878, then the resolution is brutum fulmen. If it means what the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Colorado have both said to-day, that it means free coinage, then I admit that it has a significance which the resolution of 1878 did not have.

Mr. TELLER. I will not allow the Senator to make that statement without contradicting him. I have not said anything of the kind.

Mr. ALLISON. He said in substance, as I understood the Senator, in response to a question which I put to him, that the partial coinage was a restoration of coinage within the meaning of that resolution.

Mr. TELLER. I said a partial coinage might be a restoration——

Mr. ALLISON. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. That free coinage was a restoration, too.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. And that this resolution——

Mr. ALLISON. I do not speak of this resolution. I am speaking of the concurrent resolution which was passed in 1878, when the amendments which I offered in committee and which were agreed to by the Committee on Finance were pending in this body and the discussion of them was only waived in order that the resolution might be passed.

Now I am told by the Senator that that was a partial compliance with the resolution. I want to know the significance in 1898 of the last provision in the resolution as compared with its significance in 1878; and if it requires the opening of a kindergarten on the part of the Senator from Missouri, I hope it will be opened here in order that he may be able to inform us.

Mr. TELLER. I think we need one pretty badly.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Iowa ought to be able to tell us what the act of 1878 meant. He wrote it. He voted for the Stanley Matthews resolution and two weeks later framed the Bland-Allison Act.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator is mistaken. The Bland-Allison Act, with all the amendments except one amendment about an international agreement, was reported to this body on the 21st day of November, and it was by a vote of the Senate agreed to be set down for consideration on the 11th of December, before the Stanley Matthews resolution was introduced.

Mr. VEST. I am talking about the vote.

Mr. ALLISON. That resolution was introduced in view of the Senate amendments to the free-silver bill that came from the House.

Mr. VEST. I am talking about the vote. The RECORD shows that the vote on the Stanley Matthews resolution preceded the vote on the Bland-Allison Act.

Mr. ALLISON. Everybody knows that, of course.

Mr. VEST. That is all I claim.

Mr. ALLISON. The Stanley Matthews resolution took the place of and was discussed before the Bland-Allison Act was discussed in this body, and was voted upon.

Mr. VEST. The Bland-Allison Act never entirely represented the views of the friends of silver.

Mr. ALLISON. What did not?

Mr. VEST. The Bland-Allison Act never did. It was framed by the Senator from Iowa. The Bland bill passed by the House of Representatives and sent here was a free-coinage measure, pure and simple.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. And then my friend the Senator from Iowa, with his customary and commendable adroitness, took hold of it and changed it into a limited coinage act.

Mr. ALLISON. It was finally passed in that shape.

Mr. VEST. He said at the time, I believe, that he was acting in the interest of silver.

Mr. ALLISON. I was trying to, and am now.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I think it can be shown clearly by the RECORD that the friends of the Stanley Matthews resolution in 1878 did not contemplate the free and unlimited coinage of silver when they said restore silver to its coinage and its legal-tender quality.

Mr. ALLISON. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Because, within a week after the passage of that resolution, the Senate, by almost precisely the same vote by which they passed the Stanley Matthews resolution, voted against the free coinage of silver and in favor of the amendment submitted by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. VEST. It is very late, and I will be satisfied as to that portion of the resolution which declares it is no violation of the national faith and honor to pay the bonds in standard silver dollars of 412½ grains. I ask that the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], which I am anxious to hear, may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

> That all the bonds of the United States issued or authorized to be issued under the said acts of Congress hereinbefore recited are payable, principal and interest, in the money that is the highest money of the world, in gold or its equivalent in gold, whether that be silver or paper.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has already been ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. MCBRIDE. I should like to have a brief executive session.

Mr. HALE. If it will serve the personal convenience of the Senator from Oregon, I will withdraw the motion, so as to enable him to make the other motion.

Mr. McBRIDE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 26, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 25, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

AMERICAN REGISTER FOR STEAMER NAVAHOE.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to renew the request for unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 3053) to provide an American register for the steamer Navahoe.

The bill, as published in yesterday's proceedings, was read.

Mr. PERKINS. There is a report accompanying this bill, which can be read if called for.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] has withdrawn his objection. Is there further objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There being no objection, the House proceeded to consider the bill; which was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PERKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

REPORT OF GOVERNOR OF ALASKA.

Mr. PERKINS. I report favorably from the Committee on Printing a joint resolution, for which I ask present consideration.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 82) providing for the printing of the report of the governor of Alaska, 1897.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there be printed 10,000 copies of the report of the governor of the District of Alaska to the Secretary of the Interior, 1897: 3,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 5,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 copies for the use of the Department of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution? The Chair hears none.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution; which was read the third time, and passed.

INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION, PARIS, 1900.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire also to report favorably from the Committee on Printing concurrent resolution of the Senate No. 19.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 35,000 extra copies of the report of the special commissioner of the United States to the International Exposition to be held at Paris in 1900, 10,000 copies to be for the use of the Senate, 15,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, 5,000 copies for the use of the Department of State, and 5,000 for the use of the special commissioner.

Mr. BAILEY. Is this a privileged report?

The SPEAKER. It is not; it requires unanimous consent.

Mr. BAILEY. Then I object.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. GROSVENOR rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] rises to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make plain an error that I must have fallen into yesterday in commenting upon some remarks made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON]. I can only say that in making those remarks I had no intention of founding a denial of the truthfulness of the gentleman's statement upon a misconception of his language; therefore I procured from the reporter of the House an official statement of the exact language which I had heard, and I read it repeatedly in the course of my remarks.

But now I find that the reporter must have misdirected my mind and thus carried me into a devious pathway; for instead of the statement furnished to me in writing by the reporter of what the gentleman from Kansas had said, I find it now officially stated in the RECORD that he said something else, and that something else is absolutely vital to everything which I said upon that particular language of the gentleman from Kansas. This shows that there ought to be great deliberation in this body, and that no man ought to undertake to reply to remarks made on the other side until he has carried to the remarker a transcription of the notes and got him to "O. K." the document. [Laughter.] I was furnished yesterday with an official statement that the gentleman from Kansas had, among other things, used this language:

The President of the United States says we have not got any farm; we are bankrupt; we are mortgaged and about to go into bankruptcy.

I stated that I did not believe the President of the United States ever said any such thing, and I find now that apparently the gentleman from Kansas never said any such thing either. I repeated it a good many times over, so that its true intent and meaning might not be lost; but I find I must have done him injustice, for it appears now that he said:

The President of the United States in effect says.

[Laughter.]

There is in this one of the most beautiful exhibitions of the power of the English language that I have ever discovered in all my life. Unfortunately, however, the gentleman from Kansas has placed within quotation marks the language which he puts into the President's mouth. If he had only stricken that out, he would have stood all right as a matter of accuracy. But now let me read the language as it appears here, and it will be seen how much he has made by the—I will assume—interpolation of the words "in effect:"

The President of the United States in effect says.

That is the language of the gentleman from Kansas as it now appears in the RECORD. Then he puts in quotation marks what purports to be the exact language of the President, and thus takes the effect entirely out of the "effect" that he has put in. [Laughter.]

If I have been misled by the reporters of the House, and have thus called attention, as I did on yesterday, to language that the gentleman did not utter, I much regret it. [Laughter.] But as the reporters of the House are silent here and can not speak, unless somebody should think the reporters may have been mistaken I desire to say that they gave me, on yesterday, the exact language the gentleman from Kansas did use. [Laughter and applause.]

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. HEPBURN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question pending is the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY] to strike out the paragraph beginning with line 25, on page 18.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For interest on $275,168, at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, under provisions of third article of treaty of June 14, 1866, $13,758.40; in all, $40,908.40.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Under the rules of the House of Representatives a memorial or petition from one of the sovereign States of this Union can not be presented in the open House, but goes into the petition box just as the petition of a claimant for a certain sum of money due from the United States Government would be presented.

I hold in my hand a memorial from the legislature of the State of Mississippi, which I will read in my time:

Joint resolution favoring intervention by the United States Government in the war between Spain and Cuba.

Whereas the people of Cuba are engaged in the most desperate and heroic struggle of modern times to protect themselves from the cruel, inhuman, and barbarous tyranny and oppression of the Spanish Government, and to achieve and establish for themselves the divine right of self-government; and

Whereas there comes to this body reliable information, through Maj. George L. Donald, jr., an honored and reliable citizen of this State, now in Cuba, that 90,000 persons, principally women and children, have perished by starvation in the Province of Santa Clara alone since January 1, 1897; and that in thirty-two cities and towns visited by him, the appalling fact was revealed that "one can not go twenty steps without some poor, starving woman or child begging him for something to eat; that one can not sit down in a hotel to eat a meal without being asked for bread for starving children," thus disclosing the policy of the Spanish Government to exterminate the inhabitants of that beautiful isle, which wears the crown of the "Queen of the Antilles," by starvation, which is cruel, inhuman, brutal, and revolting to every sense of humanity, Christianity, and civilization: Therefore,

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the Mississippi legislature, in special session convened, That, speaking for the people of Mississippi and in behalf of humanity and the Christian civilization of the world, we believe it to be the duty of the United States Government to at once intervene, peaceably if it can, but forcibly if it must, to save the people of Cuba from the cruel fate of annihilation by the barbarous and inhuman methods of the Spanish Government.

Be it further resolved, That a certified copy of this preamble and resolutions be forwarded to our Senators and Representatives at Washington, with the request that they be laid before the Congress of the United States.

Adopted by the senate January 12, 1898.

J. H. JONES,
President of the Senate.

Adopted by the house January 14, 1898.

JAMES F. McCOOL,
Speaker of the House.

Approved by the governor January 17, 1898.

A. J. McLAURIN,
Governor.

Attest:
[SEAL.] J. L. POWER, Secretary of State.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will regard the pro forma amendment as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

INDIANS AT BLACKFEET AGENCY.

For first of nine installments, to be disposed of as provided in article 2 of the agreement with the Indians of the Blackfeet Reservation, ratified by act approved June 10, 1896, $300,000.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve a point of order on this provision, which carries an appropriation of $300,000 to the Indians at the Blackfeet Agency, and would like to have the gentleman in charge of the bill give some explanation of the item. I refer to the paragraph beginning at the bottom of page 18, line 23, and ending with line 3 on page 19.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is, I will state to the gentleman, the first installment provided for in the agreement ratified by Congress two years ago.

Mr. DOCKERY. What is the entire obligation?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is precisely what is provided here. If the gentleman will turn to the act of 1896 he will find the provision embodied there.

Mr. DOCKERY. I have not the act before me, but the paragraph states that this is the first of nine installments as provided in article 2 of the agreement with the Indians of the Blackfeet Reservation, and amounts to the sum of $300,000,

Mr. SHERMAN. Here is the provision of law, and to it I call the gentleman's attention. I read from the second article of the treaty:

For and in consideration of the conveyance, cession, and relinquishment hereinbefore made, the United States hereby covenants and agrees to advance and expend during the period of ten years beginning from and after the expiration of the payments provided for in the agreement made between the parties hereto on the 11th day of February, A. D. 1887, and ratified by Congress on the 1st day of May, A. D. 1888, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for the Indians, both full bloods and mixed bloods, now attached to and receiving rations and annuities at the Blackfeet Agency, and all who shall hereafter be declared by the tribes located upon said reservation, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, entitled to membership in those tribes, the sum of $1,500,000.

This is the first payment, one-half of which is deposited in the Treasury of the United States for the benefit of these Indians, and one-half for the benefit of the Indians to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is this an appropriation for the purchase of Indian lands?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, yes; lands ceded by Article I of the treaty.

Mr. DOCKERY. I would like to have the chairman of the committee state, in this connection, whether or not the total amount of the bill for the Indian service this year exceeds the amount of the current law; and if so, to what extent?

Mr. SHERMAN. The total increase in the bill is about $95,000 in round figures, but considerably more than that is added by reason of the new treaty stipulations, which increase the amount of the appropriation by $130,000 or $140,000 more than the treaty stipulations of the last year. The gratuities are less than in last year's bill.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

INDIANS AT FORT BELKNAP AGENCY.

To carry out the provisions of an agreement with the Indians of the Fort Belknap Reservation, Mont., ratified by act approved June 10, 1896, to be disposed of as provided in Article II of said agreement, $360,000.

Mr. DOCKERY. That also seems to be a new proposition required by treaty obligations.

Mr. SHERMAN. All of these provisions that the Clerk is now reading are required by treaty obligations.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

NORTHERN CHEYENNES AND ARAPAHOES.

For subsistence and civilization, as per agreement with the Sioux Indians, approved February 28, 1877, including subsistence and civilization of Northern Cheyennes, removed from Pine Ridge Agency to Tongue River, Montana, $90,000.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire whether this is any increase over the appropriation for the years 1897 and 1898, and if so, how much?

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, it is an increase of $5,000. This treaty provides for the supplying of these Indians in kind, not in money, and the increase is necessary in order to furnish in kind this year. It is an increase of $5,000.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

POTTAWATOMIES.

For permanent annuity, in silver, per fourth article of treaty of August 3, 1795, $357.80;

For permanent annuity, in silver, per third article of treaty of September 30, 1809, $178.90;

For permanent annuity, in silver, per third article of treaty of October 2, 1818, $894.50.

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask a question here. On page 23, under the head of Pottawatomies, this provision requires the payment of certain things in silver. Will the gentleman in charge of the bill tell us why?

Mr. SHERMAN. I was not present when the treaty was made in 1823, but the reason it is put in the bill is because the treaty so provides. Why the treaty so provides, I can not inform the gentleman, but it does so provide, and so it is so stated in this bill.

Mr. RIDGELY. Does this silver have to be in any particular form? Is it to be coined silver or bullion?

Mr. SHERMAN. The treaty provides the exact words which are contained in the bill. I do not know why it was, because, as I stated to the gentleman, I happened not to be there at that time.

Mr. BARHAM. Where were you?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not remember. I suppose the Indians at that time preferred coin to paper money. I understand they always do. They have doubt about paper money, but they know what coin is, and so, I assume, at the request and suggestion of the Indians when entering into this treaty, silver was provided for instead of simply providing for the payment in money.

Mr. RIDGELY. Then I understand that it was at the request of the Indians and is a treaty stipulation?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is because of that that this provision is contained in the bill. This act follows the wording of the treaty in reference to the matter.

Mr. STEELE. That was made when silver bullion was worth as much as gold bullion.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was not there and I do not know exactly why it was done. I have to guess at that. I know that in this bill we follow the treaty wording precisely.

Mr. RIDGELY. I hope they will come up to the standard of the "highest civilized nations" and require gold. [Laughter.]

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SHOSHONES AND ARAPAHOES.

Fulfilling treaties with Shoshones and Arapahoes in Wyoming: First of five installments, to be expended as provided in article 3 of the agreement with the Shoshones and Arapahoes in Wyoming, ratified by act of June 7, 1897, $10,000.

Mr. DOCKERY. That provision also seems to be in consequence of the ratification of a treaty made in 1897. I assume that it is in pursuance of the law.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is in pursuance of the act of 1897 ratifying the treaty.

Mr. DOCKERY. As these appropriations under treaty obligations seem to appear in this bill quite frequently, I desire to ask in this connection whether there are any new treaties provided for in this bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. There are no new treaties provided for in this bill; and I should like to say to the gentleman, in that connection, that I have always been opposed to the ratification of treaties on appropriation bills, and I shall continue so to be as long as I have any connection with the Committee on Indian Affairs. I hope that the idea which prevailed in the Indian Committee this year will continue to prevail, of keeping treaties off from appropriation bills. There is a proper and an orderly manner of acting upon treaties and I desire that to be pursued.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am glad to hear the statement of the gentleman from New York in view of the fact that it would seem to be wise to postpone any further treaties with the Indians until the income of the Government shall be adequate to meet its current expenses.

The Clerk read as follows:

SIX NATIONS OF NEW YORK.

For permanent annuity, in clothing and other useful articles, per sixth article of treaty of November 11, 1794, $4,500.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

On yesterday a new argument or a new contention was presented. I have always believed that whenever a new question was presented it ought to be settled, and, like all other questions, it never will be properly settled until it is settled right. The matter I want to address my remarks to is the question as to whether or not prosperity has arrived in this country. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] contended that the President said prosperity was already here.

I do not want to misquote him. I think he read some lines which appear in the RECORD, on page 1014, in which he contended that prosperity had arrived. The gentleman from Kansas, if I remember correctly, Mr. CURTIS, also contended that there was great prosperity all over his State. I was surprised, Mr. Chairman, when on arising this morning the first article my eyes fell on in the Washington Post was a notice of the suspension of a national bank, in his district, I believe—at any rate, in the State of Kansas. It suspended yesterday, doubtless while he was proving the prosperity of that great State. The gentleman from Michigan——

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. RICHARDSON. In a few minutes.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH] also announced a fact which I did not know of before, that every man, woman, and child in the State of Michigan is now engaged in some lucrative employment, and that prosperity was smiling like a sweet benediction all over that great State.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I maintain that there ought not to be any question, it seems to me, or any doubt as to whether prosperity is here or not. We ought to know. If it be here, we ought not to have to prove it by bringing in facts to show it.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I decline to yield. I only have five minutes.

I maintain that if it be true that prosperity is here we ought not to be called upon to disprove it by showing the failure of national banks, firms, and individuals throughout the United States.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can not yield.

I maintain that there can be no prosperity in this country so long as we have a continued falling of prices. So long as there is a general fall of the level in prices in this country, regular, consistent, continued, there can be no genuine or universal prosperity. When we had that bill passed last year which bears the honored name of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] we were promised prosperity, and that bill was to be a great revenue and prosperity producer. Mr. Chairman, it has failed to raise either revenue or prices in this country. I maintain that since the 1st of October, for the quarter beginning the 1st of October and ending the 31st of December, there was a gradual decline in the price of commodities in this country. Now, is that true?

Mr. TAWNEY and others on the Republican side. No!

Mr. RICHARDSON. Ah! If you want evidence, I appeal to the record. I grant that if you take Bradstreet's report of the 1st of January for the last quarter you will find that he says that there has been a rise in the price of commodities. He maintains that there has been a general rise equal to about 1 per cent. I maintain, Mr. Chairman, that for that quarter, if a proper method is applied to make the average, it will be shown that there was a decline of eighty-hundredths of 1 per cent, or nearly 1 per cent decline in that quarter under the Dingley bill. Is that true? That is a matter that can be demonstrated.

I have the data, the calculations made by that able statistician and economist, Mr. Wharton Barker, and desire to have it read to the committee; and I think it will establish beyond peradventure that there has been a decline instead of a rise during the last quarter of last year. He shows beyond any kind of controversy that the decline is equal to nearly 1 per cent; that on the 1st day of October $82.88 would buy only just as much as $82.10 on the 1st of January. So that it required only $82.10 on the 1st of January to purchase what $82.88 purchased on the 1st of October. This increase shows beyond any kind of controversy that instead of a rise under the Dingley bill there has been a gradual, regular, and continued decline in the prices of these commodities.

Now while that is true, Mr. Chairman, I believe it will be admitted by all economists everywhere that there can be no general prosperity. You may take wool, artificially raised by the Dingley bill, and build an argument upon it for prosperity; but when you take one hundred of the leading commodities of this world and make a proper calculation you will find that there has been a decline of nearly 1 per cent in the price of these commodities. I ask the Clerk to read the portion of the remarks I desire to offer, beginning at the point I have indicated on the paper.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask to have it read in my time. I ask that my time may be extended.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It proves beyond controversy the contention that I have made.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request that the gentleman's time be extended? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman can not have that read from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Very well; I am a very fair reader.

Mr. HOPKINS. If the gentleman has got anything to support him, I want it read.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, was my time extended?
The CHAIRMAN. Yes.
Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Five minutes.
Mr. RICHARDSON. Now, then, I will read what Mr. Barker said:

Three months since, in commenting on the movement of prices as depicted by the American's quarterly exhibit of index numbers, we wrote that, "all things considered, there is reason to suppose that the present check to the upward tendency of prices is more than temporary, that the lift to prices given by crop failures abroad has spent its force, that the movement of prices will be downward in the immediate future, not upward." And even so has it been. Prices were in general nearly 1 per cent lower on January 1 last than on October 1, 1897. This is shown by our quarterly summary of index numbers presented this week, index numbers showing that $82.10 would have bought as much of ninety-nine staple commodities on January 1 as $82.88 on October 1, 1897.

From this fact, the fact that the general level of prices has fallen during the last quarter, the fact that the purchasing power of gold has increased, there is no escape. It is true that this fall in prices will surprise many who, not engaged in business and not suffering the losses coming with fallen prices, have taken the trade reports for their guide. But the manufacturers of cotton goods and the manufacturers of iron and steel will not be surprised. Hard facts have told them, as they have told dealers in such manufactured products, as they have told many other producers and merchants, that so far as they are concerned prices have fallen, not risen. If there is any surprise to the cotton manufacturer who has felt the further fall in prices for his products very grievously it will be to learn that he is not the only sufferer from falling prices, as the trade reports might lead him to suppose; that his experience with falling prices is not at all exceptional; that with manufacturers and dealers in manufactured products losses from a further fall in prices for their goods have been quite the rule.

In short, as we have said, prices in general fell during the last quarter of the year 1897 by nearly 1 per cent. It is indeed true that Bradstreet's presents an index number showing that prices rose in general by fully 1 per cent during the same period. But the index numbers presented by Bradstreet's are crudely built and anything but reliable. This is not because the prices taken in making these comparisons are carelessly collated, nor because of carelessness in the making of the calculations. We have no reason to doubt the accuracy of either the prices taken or the calculations. The fault lies in the pursuit of an inaccurate method. The method being one of inaccuracy, the results are inaccurate of necessity.

The trouble with the Bradstreet index numbers is that they are based on quantities and reported in values. Thus ninety-eight commodities are taken for comparison, the value of 1 pound of each is taken at the market price, the ninety-eight values thus obtained added together and the sum given as the index number. The obvious result is that fluctuations in the higher-priced staples affect the index number much more than fluctuations in the lower-priced staples. Yet it happens that the staples of greatest weight as compared to their value, and hence of least value per pound, are the most important of our staple commodities, the staples having the greatest gross value. The consequence is that the staples of least relative importance are given predominate importance in the making up of the index numbers.

Mr. HOPKINS. I would like to ask the gentleman if the article from which he is reading indicates the various articles upon which the figures and the 1 per cent loss is based?
Mr. RICHARDSON. It does in gross.
Mr. HOPKINS. What are they?
Mr. RICHARDSON. I will come to that. Wait until I finish the article. (Reading continued:)

Thus a change in the value of, say, rice of half a cent a pound would represent a change in the price of rice of less than 1 per cent; a rise in the price of pig iron of half a cent a pound would represent a rise in price of approximately 100 per cent. Yet a rise in rice of half a cent a pound would have just as much effect on the Bradstreet index number as a rise in the price of pig iron by half a cent a pound, although the change in price on rice would represent a fluctuation of less than 1 per cent, the change in price on pig iron a violent fluctuation of 100 per cent.

Thus rice, though a commodity of much less importance than pig iron, would be given one hundred times the importance in making up the index numbers. Obviously index tables made after this manner are calculated to lead astray. It is of course true that the commodities of greater value as compared to their weight move in general in the same direction as the commodities of lesser value, and so such index tables may give a general approximation of the movement of prices. But to take such tables as an accurate guide would be folly. As such a guide they are not worth the paper they are printed upon. They are indeed worse than useless.

The only way to attain a fair degree of accuracy in recording the general price movement is to reduce the fluctuations in the price of each staple commodity to a percentage, a percentage showing the rise or fall in price as compared to the price taken on some common date. In this way a rise in the price of rice of half a cent a pound and representing a rise in price of less than 1 per cent would be given but a hundredth part of the importance of a rise in the price of pig iron of half a cent a pound and representing a rise of 100 per cent. Thus we can attach due weight to the changes in value of the staples of lowest value—give the staple of greatest value no preponderate importance.

It is true that an index table built after this method does not give to different commodities their relative importance. That is, it will give a movement in the price of rye, for instance, as much importance as an equal change in the price of wheat, although the change in the value of wheat would have perhaps thirty times the effect on values. This is, of course, because of the much greater bulk of our wheat crop as compared to our rye crop. So a general index number built in this way can give but an approximate indication of the movement of values. But when as many as 100 commodities are taken, the average of the changes in prices may be taken as a fair indication of the general change in values, for it is not at all likely that the commodities of greatest importance should fluctuate in one direction and the commodities of lesser in the opposite. On the contrary, it is quite certain that they will generally fluctuate in the same direction. Thus rye is very sure to fluctuate in like direction with wheat and other cereals, and so we are not likely to be led astray, even though we attach to rye the same importance as to wheat.

So by reducing the fluctuations in prices to a percentage showing the rise or fall we can attain an approximately correct indication of the movement of prices. Of course the index number for each commodity, taken separately, is an absolutely correct indication of its price movement, and the index number for a group of commodities or the general index number is not an approximate but a correct indication of changes in the purchasing power of money if required to purchase, at different periods, the same proportionate value of each of the commodities taken. That is, it shows exactly what one would gain or lose by the movement of prices if he should make equal investment in each of the staple commodities.

Thus, if one had invested $8,288 in general commodities on October 1, 1897, investing one ninety-ninth part in each commodity, he could have sold such commodities on January 1 for but $8,210. Or take another illustration: If one had $8,215 on October 1 last, divided it into four equal parts and purchased cattle with one part, sheep with the second, hogs with the third, and horses with the fourth, he could have gotten for his purchased live stock on January 1 but $8,132.

Thus the index numbers are an absolute guide to the depreciation in staple commodities, provided we take an equal value of each commodity to begin with. As the gross values of the different staple products taken vary greatly, as the sales of some commodities taken exceed the sales of some others many fold, our index numbers are of course not an absolute guide showing the depreciation in the products of labor since 1891. But an approximate guide they do make, and they indicate that the purchasing power of $82.10 on January 1 last was as great as the purchasing power of $100 seven years ago.

This much said of the nature of index numbers, let us take a hurried glance at the movement of prices during the last quarter and glean from that movement, if we can, an inkling of the price movement in the future. Bradstreets' remarks that "one point brought out by" a comparison of prices "is that other people than the farmer have profited by the rise in prices that occurred during 1897, and that slight as the rise as a whole was, it was shared in by a number of widely separated industries." Now, the truth is that the advance in prices has not been shared in to any general extent by manufacturers. Woolens have, indeed, risen considerably in sympathy with the rise in the price of wool, a rise directly attributable to the tariff. But cotton goods, and iron and steel manufactures have fallen very materially.

The net result is that the index number for raw and manufactured textiles has fallen during the year from 75.41 to 73.77; the index number for the metal group from 62.69 to 59.30. Of the other groups of commodities, mineral and vegetable oils, naval stores, and building materials closed the year at generally lower prices than those ruling when it opened. Hides and leather are up, influenced by the tariff; the same is true of the chemical group, while coal and coke—bituminous at Pittsburg and Southern coke at Chattanooga—have risen, this rise being due in part to combination, in part to the successful coal strike and the forcing up of the mining rate, and in part to an increased demand growing out of the increased activity in the iron trade. Foodstuffs have, of course, advanced, and very greatly, in response to the increased foreign demand.

It appears, then, that where prices have increased such increases have come, excepting the increased foreign demand for breadstuffs, in great part from causes not connected with an increase in demand. There did indeed come in 1897 great increased demand for many manufactured products, but such increased demand came largely from the retailers whose stocks were pulled down to low levels by several years of hand-to-mouth purchases, and who, anticipating the much predicted rise in prices for all kinds of goods, stocked up fully in the hope of sharing in the profit of such a rise But this increased demand on the part of the retailer has not been responded to on the part of his customers, the ultimate consumers of the goods. So prices have not advanced as predicted, the large purchases of the retailers have hung heavily on their hands, and the pressure to sell has been enough to keep prices from rising or even to depress them.

In some parts of the West the retailers have indeed found increased markets, but in the South it is quite the reverse. The explanation is that the farmers have more money to spend than a year ago, the planters less; the cereal crops have brought more money, the cotton crop less. And the net result is that there is little gain in the ultimate demand for manufactured goods, i. e., the demand falling on the retailer. The consequence is that the drummers find it hard to make sales, find that the retailers, not having disposed of that with which they stocked up in the late summer and the autumn, have no need of stocking up anew.

So the demand for manufactured goods slackens and manufacturers find it impossible to raise prices as they anticipated. They have got to keep prices down to make any sales at all; many of them have to work up large stocks of raw material purchased in view of the predicted rise in prices, whether there is demand or not, and so we have production increasing in many lines of manufacture while prices fall, and doubtless not a little inward cursing, by the misguided manufacturers, of the predictors of rising prices who led them astray.

And how may we expect prices to move during the next few months? Doubtless they will go down. Unless the unexpected is realized they will surely go down. A general European war would make an abnormal demand for our products such as would raise prices. It is hard to realize anything else happening to stand in the way of falling prices. It is, indeed, supposable that the winter may blight the European winter grain crops, and so keep up an abnormal demand for our grain. But this is not anticipated. It is known, besides, that the Argentinian wheat harvest now being garnered is fair, and that Argentina will have a considerable surplus to export. There is every assurance of a bountiful wheat harvest in India to be gathered in March. This winter's Australian crop was not blighted with drought, as the two preceding, and Australia will not continue as an importer of wheat.

So our competitors in the Southern Hemisphere and in India have been favored as they have not been during the past two years. If, then, the European fields turn out an average crop, the demand for our grain next year is likely to fall down and prices fall down as they did in 1891 and 1895. In short, there is every indication that wheat will fall in price in the immediate future and the prices of other cereals in sympathy. That such fall in price is anticipated in the Chicago wheat pit is shown by the dealings in futures. While cash wheat sells at 90 cents a bushel, the July option brings but 80 cents, which indicates that the speculators expect to see wheat selling for about 75 cents a bushel by the 1st of July.

So we may expect food stuffs to go down in price in the immediate future. And what of manufactured goods? They are in general, and excepting woolens, quite as low, in many cases lower than ever before. We have seen the causes for this depression. The question is, Will such causes remain, will they be accentuated, or will they shrink away? That they will shrink away in the immediate future is hardly likely; that they will remain is highly probable; that they will be accentuated is not impossible. The facts that confront us are manufacturers extending production, many because they can not help themselves, because they must work up raw material and convert it into money, come what may, and the true consumers not increasing demands. And this presages supply outrunning demand—lays the foundation for falling prices.

Unless there comes an increase of demand, a general rise in prices is out of the question. If there comes no increase of demand and manufacturers now carrying large stocks of goods are forced to put them on the market, prices must further fall.

And this increased demand can not come from the South this year. There has come some increased demand from the West, but there is no prospect of a further increase. The crops of last year did not bring our agriculturists enough more money than those of the year before to enable them to greatly expand their purchases. And you can not sell to a man who has not the means to purchase. When, oh, when, will the agriculturist have the means to increase his purchases to old-time proportions? the manufacturer may well lament. And the answer comes back: When ye join him in overthrowing a monetary system that robs him for the profit of the money lender, not before.

We append our usual quarterly summary of index numbers indicating the fluctuations in prices as compared to prices ruling January 1, 1891, and based on prices collated by Bradstreet's Commercial Agency:

* Six articles. † Ninety-nine articles.

During the reading the following occurred:

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I desire to ask the gentleman a question, and I would ask unanimous consent to have his time extended.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question, and I ask that his time be extended.

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended until he finishes the reading of the article.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Will the gentleman from Tennessee answer me a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly, if I can.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. If it is true, as the gentleman says, that there is no prosperity, and that prosperity has not returned, how does it happen that in all the industrial regions of this country the workingmen are employed and none are being supported by charity, while in the winter of 1893 thousands of men were out of employment and had to be helped?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The difficulty with the gentleman's question is that his premises are all wrong. Workingmen are not at work all over the country in the industrial regions. One hundred and twenty-five thousand are now involved in a strike in New England and other portions of the country——

Mr. KNOX. The gentleman is entirely mistaken; there is nothing like that number.

Mr. GROSVENOR. There are not 15,000 involved in the strike, much less 125,000.

Mr. RICHARDSON (continuing). And there are strikes all over the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. When you restrict immigration, there will be no further strikes in the industrial regions.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not want to reflect on the intelligence of my friend from Pennsylvania, for I understand that he is to be the next governor of that great State.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I am glad to have the indorsement of that side of the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman's inquiry reminds me of a conundrum I heard propounded by a minstrel the other night. It was this: The interlocutor propounded the inquiry, "Can you tell me any two things on this earth exactly alike"——

Mr. BUTLER. A Democrat and a Populist. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON (continuing). The minstrel said: "It has been said that no two things on earth are exactly alike; can you tell me two things that are exactly alike?" One end man gave it up, and the other said: "I can tell you two things that are exactly alike—the Cleveland panic and the McKinley boom." [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The difference will be found in an answer to my question. In the Cleveland panic the people were idle, and to-day they are at work.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can not yield to the gentleman for a speech. He will find the answer at the election next November.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Oh, now you are speaking of the future. Confine yourself to the present.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will ask leave to print the remainder of this article. I say that there has been a general decline equal to 1 per cent in the 100 commodities named in this article and that it is clearly demonstrated by Mr. Wharton Barker.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to print the remainder of the article in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. LACEY. I object. I want the gentleman to finish reading, for I want it said that there was one article by Wharton Barker that was once read clear through.

Mr. DALZELL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee whether he takes Wharton Barker seriously or if he knows any person who ever did?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Well, the members on that side seem to have taken him pretty seriously this morning.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I hope there will be no objection to putting the remainder of the article in the RECORD.

Mr. LACEY. I withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any other objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. TODD. I am a regular subscriber to the American; and I think it is one of the ablest and most conscientious political journals published in this country.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think the writer of this article is a little wiser than the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE], although I concede the wisdom of the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I would a great deal rather hear the views of the gentleman from Tennessee than those of the writer of that article.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I congratulate the gentleman from Tennessee on the two authorities which he has quoted on this floor. One was an interminable article from Mr. Wharton

Barker, the distinguished and most successful financier of Philadelphia; the other was a negro-minstrel performance in Kernan's show down here on the Avenue. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. I did not get it at Kernan's; but I suppose the gentleman from Ohio has gone there, as he attributes it to Kernan's. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to pursue any further the subject of yesterday's debate. There has, however, come to me by accident a little volume, not so long as the editorials in the Philadelphia American, but containing a few facts, if they are facts. I will leave it to some gentleman representing the State of Georgia to deny the truthfulness of this statement; and if it is a true statement, it speaks louder than all the "index numbers" on God Almighty's earth.

The gentleman has seen fit to take a period beginning October, 1897, and to institute a comparison for the three months, October, November, and December; and he does this for the purpose of showing that the best interests of the great industrial classes of the country have not grown and advanced during that period of time. I read from that very able paper, the Atlanta Constitution, an editorial statement. I do not subscribe to all the doctrines of that paper; but its truthfulness and its great research I think nobody will dispute. Strangely enough, this writer in the Constitution covers the exact period upon which my friend from Tennessee has undertaken to predicate his position. He gives a history of the industrial institutions which have sprung into life in the Southern States between October, 1897, and January, 1898. I quote the language of the Atlanta Constitution:

> All together the number of industries which have sprung into existence—

That means new industries—

> All together, the number of industries which have sprung into existence in the South since October 1, 1897, aggregate 469, divided among the various States of this section in the following manner: Alabama, 35; Arkansas, 30; Florida, 30; Georgia, 54; Kentucky, 39; Louisiana, 16; Mississippi, 17; North Carolina, 39; South Carolina, 24; Tennessee, 49 [applause]; Texas, 60; West Virginia, 41, and Virginia, 35. Total, 469.

More industrial institutions have sprung into existence in those three months than in all the history of those States prior to the war of 1861, and more have sprung into existence, 10 to 1, than all that came into existence during the period of four years from 1893 to 1897.

Mr. GAINES. Now, will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. GAINES. I want to state to you——

Mr. GROSVENOR. Ask your question.

Mr. GAINES. I will. Why is it that the cotton factories of Rhode Island are moving to Nashville, Tenn., as they are doing?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Are you opposed to that?

Mr. GAINES. I am glad of it; because down there we have a free country and some of the best people in the world.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What are you complaining about, then? [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES. I am trying to tell you something you do not know and do not want to know.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. He is howling because prosperity has returned, and that does not help the Democratic party politically.

Mr. GAINES rose.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will not the gentleman dispute on this floor in a proper manner and at a proper time?

Mr. GAINES. Certainly; but you permitted an interruption.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Why, sir, if this wave of prosperity has gone South, who is complaining of it? Is it the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], who has given an "initial number" and "index numbers" by which he undertakes to show a 1 per cent fall on a great number of commodities? Is he mad about that?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No, I am not at all angry. I am glad to see evidences of prosperity in the South; but while evidences are appearing of prosperity in the Southern States, or some of them, I want to tell the gentleman that I hold in my hand an extract from a Boston paper showing that they have to establish soup houses there to help the poor people who are out of employment. I commend to my friends on the other side that statement of a paper which supports their party.

Mr. DALZELL. I should like to know whether these 469 new industries——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I move that the time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] be extended until he concludes his remarks.

There was no objection.

Mr. DALZELL. I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether these 469 new industries in the Southern States are removals from Rhode Island?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I undertake to say that there are practically no removals from the New England States, nor has any one of the old institutions of the South that was a growing institution prior to the election of McKinley ceased its operations.

But a tidal wave of prosperity has swept over the entire South; and yet we find, here and there, some of her Representatives coming here and advertising to the people of the whole world that they, in common with everybody else, as they say, are suffering because of the "hard times."

The fact is, Mr. Chairman, that the people of the South are enjoying to-day, notwithstanding the low price of cotton, but taking the aggregate products, beginning away out in the Panhandle of Texas, where the wool and sheep and other products have been advancing in price, all along down into Florida, with its fruits, every class of their products, embracing the whole country, going through the entire Gulf States—are enjoying a degree of prosperity which shows that the people of the South are in a better condition to-day than they have ever been before in all the history of that part of the country, and everybody knows it. [Applause.]

Mr. RIDGELY. Do you remember that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] the other day admitted that the extension of the cotton industry in the South was the reason that New England had reduced the price of labor and that the tariff was unable to hold up such prices?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have no doubt of the fact; but what does it amount to? It only shows that some 15,000 people have been affected——

Mr. GROW. Not so many as that.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have been informed that it is not even so large as that. And yet the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] puts into the RECORD a statement that there are 125,000 on strike in the New England States in the cotton industry alone!

Mr. Chairman, there are always fluctuations of trade in all countries and in various sections of any country.

The magnificent growth of the iron industry in the State of Alabama, which owes its prosperity to the protective tariff, is an illustration. They have, by reason of their enormous product and cheaper labor, affected the manufacture of iron in the North. Do you hear any of the Northern men complain of that fact? Do they complain of the prosperity of Alabama in that regard? But you come, representing the friends of the law you passed and which brought you into comparative bankruptcy, and complain that in this great tide of prosperity some sections have not fared as well as others!

The gentleman says that labor is not employed. I ought to know something of that. The labor in my district, a great laboring district, where we have 9,000 men digging coal—in that district the wages of the coal miner, from October to January 1, were more than 40 per cent greater than for a like term in the preceding year, and there are no idle men there. [Applause on the Republican side.] And likewise in all of the great industries in the industrial centers of the country. But because in a portion of New England, with reference to a few operatives, in the readjustment of conditions of labor, prices have been more or less affected, the gentleman finds fault with the whole system which has produced and is producing such magnificent results.

Those conditions in New England can be better explained by the men who live among those people than by me; but gentlemen will turn aside here on this floor, from the fact that in their own State this enormous development of industries has taken place, and point to an isolated instance, seemingly glorying in the fact that there is here and there throughout the country a readjustment of labor conditions.

Mr. RIDGELY. In my district there are 25,000 coal miners dependent on the scale of wages, and there has been no advance of their pay.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Does not the gentleman know that the cause of the difficulties in New England is because of the numerous immigrants admitted under our present laws? The people there attribute the trouble largely to that cause.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, I will discuss that some other time. What did the gentleman from Kansas say?

Mr. RIDGELY. I made a counter statement to yours as to the question of advance of wages paid to labor.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, well, you can take your own time to make such a statement.

Mr. RIDGELY. I simply said that there were 25,000 coal miners in my district, and no advance in their wages.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. In the State of Kansas?

Mr. GROSVENOR. How many are mining coal in Kansas?

Mr. RIDGELY. I say 25,000 are engaged in mining coal in the Third district of Kansas, and there has not been a cent of advance in their wages.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Why, there are not 10,500 men digging coal in the whole State of Kansas. [Applause on the Republican side.] In the State of Ohio there are not 25,000 men mining coal.

Mr. RIDGELY. I wish to correct the statement in this—— [Derisive laughter on the Republican side.] Hold on, do not laugh too soon, my friends. There are 25,000 people depending upon the mining of coal for support. [Cries of "Oh!" on the Republican side.] And those people have got no advance.

Mr. GROSVENOR. In my own district there are 45,000 people dependent upon the mining of coal, and in October, 1896, they were mining coal at 45 cents a ton. They are mining coal to-day at 56 and 60 cents a ton, and they are working six days in the week instead of three days, as they were then. [Applause on the Republican side.] They won a great battle and they are winning another. They secured an advance at the beginning of September, and they are winning another advance which they will have within a very few days.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Did they get it after they went on that strike, or before?

Mr. GROSVENOR. On what strike? There are no strikes in Ohio.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But there was.

Mr. GROSVENOR. There has not been a strike in Ohio since the advance was made last September. [Manifestations of derision on the Democratic side.] The gentleman can not teach me anything about coal strikes. Let me tell the gentleman what happened. The coal strike began on the 1st day of May. What was the condition on the 1st day of May? We had the Wilson-Gorman free-tariff law, that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] boasts he assisted in making.

What happened on the 24th day of July? We passed the Dingley bill. On the 1st day of September the price demanded by the miners was, in large part at least, accepted by the operators. How did it happen? Simply and solely because of the passage of the bill that the gentleman fought. That is the reason. And but for that law the miners of Ohio would be starving to-day. With that law the miners of Ohio are earning good wages, with the prospect of better wages in the immediate future. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. RIDGELY. Will the gentleman tell us how much coal has advanced in price? How much has the advance per ton on coal in your district been?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Possibly 15 or 20 cents.

A MEMBER. Twenty-five.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Possibly a little more. This advance in wages has been quite in keeping with the advance on coal. It has been more than double the percentage. Why, take a ton of coal. The gentleman talks about mining coal. I am surprised at him.

Take a ton of coal for which the miner was getting 45 cents, and for which he is now getting 56 cents. What per cent is that on a ton of coal—a ton of coal that costs, free on board, a little over a dollar? The gentleman can not answer that question. He could do it with a pencil. Wages have gone up side by side with the advance in coal. But it has not been so much the advance in coal that has made it possible. It has been the advance of the business interests, such as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH] described yesterday, which turned the wheels of industry in the great manufacturing cities of the middle West and the Northwest and made a market for our coal, which brought our commodities into market.

Then, again, we shut off the incursion of foreign coal upon the Atlantic Seaboard, so that the trains in West Virginia and Maryland ran eastward with their loads instead of westward, as they did under free trade. So the gentleman will find that in every other branch of industry, in all the great markets for these commodities, prices have advanced. The gentleman talked about wheat yesterday, as though wheat was the significant and only advance. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] talks about a fictitious, artificial advance in wool. Why, my friend, never utter that word again. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

How can you make an artificial advance in wool when the market for wool in this country was supplied by an overimportation of from one to two years of actual supply for the necessities of our machinery, and yet when the Dingley tariff came, wool doubled in value and the sheep advanced four times above the price under Democratic Administration? [Applause on the Republican side.] How was it with cattle? Cattle upon the farm in Ohio that sold in a dull market at 3 cents advanced rapidly to 4½ cents. What was it that brought life into every commodity which we had? Why, it was the reviving of industry under the Dingley bill.

Mr. GREENE. May I ask the gentleman a question for information?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes.

Mr. GREENE. Did you mean to say that sheep had gone up five or six times in value?

Mr. GROSVENOR. No; I did not say so.

Mr. GREENE. Yes; you did.

Mr. GROSVENOR. No; I said four times.

Mr. GREENE. Do you mean that a sheep that sold for $2——

Mr. GROSVENOR. There was no common sheep on the earth that would sell for $2 at that time. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GREENE. Do you mean to say that a sheep was worth only a dollar under the Wilson bill?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I can not hear the gentleman.

Mr. GREENE. Do you mean to say to this House and to the country that sheep were worth only a dollar a head before passing the Dingley bill?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, my friend, where have you been living? [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. GREENE. Do you mean to say that?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will bring you the reports of sales made in the best sheep and the best wool counties of Ohio, showing that they were sold at 50 cents a head. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GREENE. Do you mean to say that sheep were only worth a dollar a head in the market before the passage of that law?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I say it; certainly I say it, and everybody who knows anything about it knows I am telling the truth.

Mr. GREENE. You say that they were worth one and two dollars, and now they are worth four and eight dollars. I want the country to get his statement.

Mr. DALZELL. The country will get it.

Mr. GREENE. The gentleman knows that that statement is not true.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I can not hear the gentleman. I object, Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman from Nebraska getting up here and making a speech in my time.

Out in the State of Ohio, which is one of the great woolgrowing States of the United States, Senator FORAKER gave an illustration in the campaign of 1896 of the condition that existed in the county of Highland, where the owner of a flock of sheep amounting to about 120, in a dry season, short of feed for his sheep, determined to sell them at auction. He drove the sheep up to the neighboring village, and the sheep buyers of the country came there. He showed them the sheep.

Some of them were very good, some not so good, and some rather poor. The auctioneer tried to get a bid on them; he could not get a bid; and finally, after a good many efforts, the owner of them said: "I have nothing to feed these sheep on; there is no prospect of them doing better, and I will give these sheep to anybody who will take them." Finally a very skillful sheep man looked at them and said: "If you will allow me to throw out about fifteen, I will take the balance of them." [Laughter.] I will tell the gentleman where he can verify some of my statements. In the county of Harrison, the best sheep-growing county, the greatest sheep-growing county in the State of Ohio, at an administrator's or a sheriff's sale a large flock of fair sheep in the fall of 1895 sold for 50 cents each; and these very sheep, or their progeny, of equal value, can not be bought for less than $4.50 or $5 a head. [Applause on the Republican side.] Why, Mr. Chairman, let me give the gentlemen who are talking about prosperity some illustrations.

In Paterson, N. J., prior to the passage of the Dingley bill, there were 250 idle silk mills. The manufacture of silk was a great suggestion to the people of our country, for we had under Democratic Administration been importing our silk practically from abroad; and the owners of those mills were on the verge of bankruptcy. At present there is not a single idle mill, the old-time wages of the silk workers have been restored, and there are no idle hands. [Applause on the Republican side.] The same is true of the great pottery industry. Immediately upon the passage of the Dingley law the owners of the great works in Ohio, in the district represented by my colleague [Mr. TAYLER], assembled their workmen together and said to them that they had aided in procuring the passage of the Dingley law, and that they would reinstate the McKinley rate—they were working at a reduction; I can not give you the exact amount, but certainly as much as 33 per cent.

Now, said these owners, "Will you be satisfied if on the 1st day of December—or perhaps it was Christmas day—we contract with you to restore the McKinley rate?" And they said further, "In doing this we simply put our faith to the test. We believe in the Dingley law, and we venture to make a written contract to stand by you at the old rates." And the operatives said "Yes." On that date they restored the old rates under the McKinley law, and there is not an idle or unemployed man in the industry to-day.

Mr. RIDGELY. Will the gentleman yield to me.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman will speak so that I can hear him, I will.

Mr. RIDGELY. Do you take the position that Congress can legislate value into property? [Derisive laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. I ought to have said that on this matter of potteries the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. STEWART] will certify that the same effect, possibly not the same details, occurred there.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him, in the city of Evansville, in the large potteries there, they have increased the number of men and increased their wages and are running twelve hours a day right now.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman would only learn what is going on, he would see this himself.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the gentleman will allow me further, I will state as to the city of Evansville, I read in a Democratic paper the other day of that city, which is stated to be the largest hard-wood lumber market in the world, the sawmills were all idle prior to the passage of the Dingley bill, and now every sawmill in that city is running eleven hours. A Democratic paper testifies to the truth of my statement.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I want to answer the gentleman from Kansas. He asks me if I think we can legislate values into property. Well, I can tell the gentleman that I have had some observation. I know the prices of the commodities that the people of this country produced in 1892, and I saw what happened to them in 1893, 1894, 1895, and 1896; and while I do not care to answer the gentleman's question affirmatively, because it is somewhat technical, I will make my affidavit that Congress can legislate one-half out of the value of the property of the United States, and I have known them to do it. [Applause on the Republican side.] Now we are restoring values.

Why, does not the gentleman know that on the 1st of November, 1896, all the property of the United States was not worth, by any measure or calculation that did not have a prophetic view ahead of it, 50 cents on the dollar of what it was when Mr. Harrison went out of office? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. RIDGELY. And yet you say you have legislated four times the value into sheep.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have made a statement about sheep that I defy any man acquainted with the facts to dispute. [Laughter.] I was present in the little town of Cadiz on a memorable day in October and I saw a long train of wagons moving along, which I supposed were a part of the political demonstration of the day, but when I came to inspect them more fully they bore this legend: "We have sold this wool to (such a man) at 30 cents a pound. One year ago it was worth but 15 cents a pound."

Does not the gentleman know that a sheep that was worth 50 cents when wool is but 15 cents will readily be worth five times that sum when wool is worth 30 cents, for the simple reason that a sheep that produces 15-cent wool is not worth anything, while a sheep that produces 30-cent wool is worth a good deal of money? So the gentleman must not think that doubling the price of wool limits the increase in the value of the sheep, because one is worth practically nothing and the other is worth a great deal.

Mr. RIDGELY. The gentleman has given two replies, in answer to my question, exactly the reverse. He has stated that Congress has legislated value into property and he has also said that they could not legislate value. Now, will he not answer the question, Can Congress legislate value into property?

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman is somewhat of a beginner here. He gets the floor and then seeks to make me answer his question as he pleases. I am making a speech, my friend. [Laughter.]

Mr. RIDGELY. I insist that the question be answered; but it may be answered in any way to please the gentleman. I want an answer to my question—if he believes that Congress can legislate value into property?

Mr. GROSVENOR. The value of property is affected by conditions.

Mr. RIDGELY. Well, is this value affected by legislation?

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman will just hold on, he will get an answer, although it may not prove entirely satisfactory to him, and yet I think he will agree to it. Property is affected by conditions, and the conditions are briefly these: The amount of production, the market of the country, and the wages of men who work for a living, which is the greatest condition that surrounds the price of production. Congress may not legislate that a bushel of wheat shall advance from 45 or 50 cents to 90 cents, but Congress may produce a condition, by the exclusion of foreign production, by setting in motion the wheels of industry, by giving the laboring people of this country something to do, by producing a restoration of values that your conditions took from the values. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. RIDGELY. You claim that Congress did so legislate to advance the prices of production?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Congress by legislation produced a change of conditions. Is it not mighty plain that something has happened to you? [Laughter.]

Mr. RIDGELY. I wish the gentlemen on the other side to understand that later on you will be found arguing that Congress can not legislate so as to advance the value of property produced by labor.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, I know what my friend wants. He was originally a Greenbacker, and he wants to know whether Congress can not take a piece of paper that is not worth a cuss and make it worth a dollar. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. RIDGELY. I deny the gentleman's right to put questions into my mouth.

Mr. SHANNON. Perhaps it would be largely to the gentleman's advantage if he had the right.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But gentlemen proceed to say to the people of the United States that prosperity has not come. Let them take up the conditions that surround the people of this country to-day and tell us how these things happen. Is there a man on this floor who will say that—measured by every standard of prosperity, by the price of labor, by the demand for labor, by the price of agricultural products, by the demand for agricultural products, by everything that goes to make up prosperity—we are not better off than we were in 1893? There is no such man. What did this? You say that somebody's cattle died somewhere or somebody's wheat crop fell off. We say that it is a broad, sweeping condition that entered the country through the ports of the United States, which has swept clear over the country. And we defy contradiction.

Why, sir, there was a time when our friends on the other side were talking about the ruinous depression that must ultimately come to a country that bought more than it sold abroad. Since I have had the honor to be a member of this House "the markets of the world" have been a fruitful theme of many very able discussions here. And one gentleman, most learned and most distinguished, declared in his battle on this floor for free trade that the proposition to pass the McKinley bill was a proposition to put "a Chinese wall" around the United States; and he said, "You can not trade with people abroad unless you will invite them to trade with you here at home." So said our Democratic friends in the campaign of 1896. So you said on this floor one year ago.

What has happened? Why, each recurring month piles up upon you the fact that never in all the history of this country was the balance of trade as advantageous to the people of this country as to-day. In the month of December we sent abroad $76,000,000 more than we brought from abroad. We are sending our commodities into the markets of the Old World at a ratio never dreamed of by Henry Clay or any of the men who have followed him as advocates of this great institution of protective tariff.

And while we have done that we have enhanced the value of labor; we have enhanced the scope of the market for labor. And prosperity is here. I defy any man to take up the condition of the country and deny this. Do not select one place or one section where, as I have said twice over, the shifting tide of labor and production has had an unfavorable effect. Do not do that; but take up the condition of this whole country and you will find that prosperity has come with rapidity and with a steady, ever-increasing progress that has astonished you, and has even astonished the most ardent friends of the policy which has brought this condition about.

So the Republican party stands here to say, without any hesitation, that that which is beneficial to this country to-day, that which was absent a year ago—the conditions, which are those of prosperity to-day in place of those of adversity a year ago—every one of these conditions is due to the passage of the Dingley bill, which was due to the patriotism and statesmanship of the Republican party of my country. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, before taking my seat I ask leave to publish in my remarks a very brief statement from Bradstreet's report, which I omitted to put in at the proper place.

There was no objection.

WILL HELP PROSPERITY.

[From the Philadelphia Bulletin.]

The advance sheets of the Bureau of Statistics show that the foreign commerce of the United States for 1897 breaks all records by its magnitude. During the last year we sold more American products to foreigners than we have ever sold before in a twelvemonth. Our exports of all sorts reached the enormous total of $1,099,129,000. Our imports were $742,630,000.

This gives a balance of trade in our favor of $356,498,000. Making full allowance for the surrender of American securities abroad, and for the interest and freight charges which this country has to pay to Europe, it is still evident that a great sum is due us for the food and manufactured goods we have exported. Payment in some fashion will have to be made in the coming year, and it will prove a potent help to prosperity.

GREAT VOLUME OF BUSINESS—38 PER CENT LARGER THAN IN 1897 AND 10 PER CENT OVER 1892.

NEW YORK, January 21, 1898.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says:

"With a volume of business remarkable for the time of year, 38 per cent larger than a year ago and 10.4 per cent larger than in 1892 in payments through clearing-houses, it is not discouraging that one or two industries are lagging.

The demand for most goods is more heavy for the season, manufacturing works are better employed, and orders booked and prospects for the future are more encouraging than at this season in any other year of which equally definite records exist.

Exports of products continue surprisingly heavy, in spite of some rise in prices. Treasury receipts from customs were larger in twenty days of January than in the entire month of October or of November, and apprehension regarding the monetary future is no longer felt outside of speculative circles. Failures are considerably smaller than were ever known at this season, both manufacturing and trading being less than half last year's. Railroad earnings in January, thus far reported, have been 17.6 per cent larger than last year, and 10.3 per cent larger than in 1892.

RISE IN PRICE OF WHEAT.

The rise of wheat above a dollar in regular sales was not accompanied by signs of speculative excitement. In fact, the continuance of extraordinary exports, 2,945,705 bushels, flour included, for the week, from Atlantic ports, against 1,573,215 last year, and for three weeks, 9,002,493 bushels against 5,559,532 last year, besides 4,036,940 from Pacific ports for three weeks, would give excuse for high prices, even if the corn exports were not enough to suggest great foreign need, amounting to 9,270,189 bushels against 10,774,293 for three weeks.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I am utterly at a loss to understand the logic of the position of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], who insists at one moment that the McKinley law has operated to increase the price of wool and yet denies that the existing strike in New England is in anywise the result of the operation of the same law.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I should like to have read at the Clerk's desk an announcement which I think is not out of place under the circumstances.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There was objection when I asked to have a statement read at the desk, but I do not object to this request of the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio that an announcement be read from the Clerk's desk? The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

McComas, 62; GORMAN, 47; Shaw, 5.

[Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. I suppose the gentleman from Ohio can congratulate himself that Judge McComas is coming out a little better in Maryland than Mr. HANNA did in Ohio.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, the strike existing to-day in the cotton industries of New England occurs under a schedule dictated by the cotton manufacturers themselves.

Mr. DINGLEY. Virtually the same schedule that was in the Wilson law.

Mr. DOCKERY. Undoubtedly. That schedule of the Wilson Act was written by the cotton manufacturers, and appears in the existing law which bears the honored name of my friend from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY]. Under that schedule a widespread strike in New England is now in full blast. Under the Dingley law wool has advanced in price. The gentleman from Ohio insists that the increase in the price of wool is due to the Dingley Act, but denies that the detrimental effects which are now manifest in New England are due to the same law. Now, then, the query suggests itself to us as practical men, Why is it that wool has advanced in price in the one instance and the wages of labor have declined in the other?

It is an open secret, Mr. Chairman, why the wages of labor have declined, and resulted in this strike which is now on in New England. I apprehend it can be demonstrated that the strike was forced by the cotton manufacturers themselves to enable them to sell their surplus goods before their mills resume operations. That result is due to the operation of the laws of trade, hampered as it is by existing conditions. The capacity of the home market being limited under protection, the cotton manufacturers have overproduced. The supply of their wares exceeds the demand. Wool is enhanced in price because the demand exceeds the supply.

I desire in this connection to advert briefly to a grave issue which this country must sooner or later consider. It will clamor for settlement as soon as we dispose of the money question in 1900. We are overproducing in the United States in every line of industry, whether it be in agriculture, in commerce, or in manufactures. This overproduction is the result of labor-saving machinery and a restricted market, which is inevitable under the protective policy. Under the Republican policy of commercial exclusion, as exemplified by the Dingley Act, our markets are becoming narrower and narrower every year. The result is that, with increased production by labor-saving machinery and diminished markets by reason of the protective system, we are confronted with "trusts" as the logical and inevitable result of that system.

The condition of affairs in New England was so fully stated by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], the author of the Dingley bill, that I wish to read——

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. Does the gentleman contend that the cotton market is narrowed by reason of the protective-tariff law which was passed by Congress?

Mr. DOCKERY. I was about to state the peculiar condition of affairs affecting the cotton industry in New England, and will answer your question in a moment.

Mr. HOPKINS. But does the gentleman claim that the whole loss to the cotton trade has been induced by reason of that tariff bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. If the gentleman will hear me a moment, I will answer that question as I proceed.

Mr. HOPKINS. But what are the gentleman's views on that question?

Mr. DOCKERY. I will give them in due time, if the gentleman will allow me to proceed.

Mr. HOPKINS. But, if the gentleman will permit me, I understood him to say that the fall of wages in the New England factories had been caused by competition induced by the erection of cotton factories in the South, and was not affected by foreign competition. The gentleman stated that we were "narrowing the markets" because of the protective laws. Now, are we narrowing the markets on that basis?

Mr. DOCKERY. I will come to the suggestion of the gentleman in a moment.

Mr. HOPKINS. I would like the gentleman to explain that point, so that we may understand exactly the position he has assumed. I would like him to state——

Mr. DOCKERY (interrupting). If the gentleman will allow me, I will explain the situation so that he will fully understand.

The New England operatives of cotton mills are now striking for higher wages. Why? Because New England, as has been stated by the gentleman from Maine in recent debate, is unable to meet competition in that line of industry growing up in the Southern States. I will quote from the gentleman's own language to sustain this statement.

Mr. DINGLEY said:

When there is one portion of our country that is producing cotton goods, running its machinery eleven or twelve hours per day, and especially when it is doing this for less wages than another part of the country, which can run its machinery only ten hours a day, the effect of such competition is either to destroy the industry in the communities having the ten-hour day or to compel a reduction of wages; and we do not want anything of that kind. We want to avoid it.

Again, Mr. Chairman, in the same discussion the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] addressed the following inquiry to the gentleman from Maine, which answers the interrogatory of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS]:

Mr. KITCHIN. I understood the gentleman to say that the fall of wages in New England factories had been caused by competition from the South; that it was not affected by foreign competition.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DOCKERY. I should like to have a few moments additional.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask that the gentleman be allowed to conclude his remarks.

There was no objection.

Mr. DOCKERY. It appears, then, that New England is unable, as the gentleman from Maine has said, to meet the growing competition of the South. The statistics submitted by the gentleman from Ohio show an increase in this particular industry in the Southern States. Why? Because capital is enterprising; and capital, under existing conditions, is compelled to be economical. Capitalists who have money to invest in the cotton industry now go to the South and locate their factories by the side of the raw material, and thus save the cost of double transportation.

The reason New England is suffering grows out of the fact that she has no raw material. I look forward, Mr. Chairman, to the coming time when the protective sentiment will be more strongly entrenched in the South and New England will be following the banner of free trade. [Applause.]

Now, what is the condition that should challenge our attention in this discussion? The inventive genius of this age, by the aid of labor-saving machinery, has increased the products of labor in every line of effort.

One of the most recent illustrations of inventive genius that I recall is the Linotype machine. It is estimated that this machine, with its perfected mechanism, displaces nine compositors. This is only one illustration of the effect of inventive genius upon the opportunities for labor. I will not stop to enumerate others, but it is estimated that on the average ten to twenty men are deprived of employment by each labor-saving machine in every branch of our industries. These machines are the result of inventive genius, stimulated not by a protective tariff but by the patent laws of the United States.

Now, then, with this situation confronting us, what should be the policy of the United States? There is an enormous increase of productive capacity in every branch of industry. Labor-saving machines operated to their full capacity can produce enough in six months to answer the demands of the Republic for twelve to eighteen months. And yet with this productive increase the United States, under protective policy, is narrowing its markets, when it is obvious that they should be enlarged. We need not fear the competition of England. Half of the output of their manufactories is hand made. Nearly half of the output of France is hand made. The same statement is true of Germany, while almost our entire output is the product of unrivaled machinery, operated by the most intelligent labor of the world.

Sir, the time is coming when this policy will be reversed. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] can not stay the rising tide of adverse public sentiment by a constitutional amendment limiting the number of hours that each employee shall work in manufactories. That will be at best but a makeshift. Why? Because the effect of the law he so well stated forbids. The Republican party can not abrogate that law. He said, on page 861 of the RECORD:

> Where there are two jobs seeking one man, wages rise. Where there are two men seeking one job, wages fall.

This, Mr. Chairman, is the whole "law and gospel" in so far as it relates to tariff economic conditions. This country is overproducing, in view of our limited market, and yet there are people in the world who are starving, and the Republican party would remedy this condition by a further limitation upon production. That party asks for a limitation of production, although there are millions in Europe who are denied meat save once a week, and sometimes the interval is longer still. The Republican party ask for a restriction of the manufacture of cotton and other goods when half the people of the world are not properly clad. Such a restriction upon production as is suggested by the gentleman from Maine will not accomplish the result he seeks.

There is but one sure way of escape in so far as the tariff is involved. The Republican party is trying a makeshift now. They are slowing down the machines and running upon half time or else closing down the mills when the home market is glutted. Trusts are also organized to stifle competition. The time is rapidly approaching, however, when machines running at their full capacity will not only supply the home market but the markets of the world as well. That is the policy we should encourage. Sir, it is true that our commerce is growing, but the growth is utterly inadequate in view of our splendid possibilities and opportunities.

Why do we hesitate and further pursue a restrictive policy? The Republican party insists that we can not compete with Europe because our labor is better paid than it is abroad. Measured by the output of labor, we have the cheapest labor in the world—cheaper than England, cheaper than France, cheaper than Germany, or any other European country. So I say, Mr. Chairman, that, face to face as we are with an industrial condition which should be looked at from a little loftier standpoint than mere partisanship, the time is speedily coming when the United States will tear down high tariff walls and go out to the seas with the products of our farms and our mines and our manufactories. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

That is the only sure way to escape the evils incident to protection. Sir, if we can not regain our lost markets under this policy, if we can not send the products of our farms and our manufactories to every market of the world and compete, then, in so far as the tariff is concerned, we are driven to the humiliating confession that we are fast settling down to European conditions. I appeal to the other side, as we shall appeal to the country, to reverse this policy. With narrow markets, our machines are overproducing, labor is out of employment, while the industrial vampires known as "trusts" rob and plunder the people. Sir, the United States should move out along the lines of a more liberal policy, out on a broader arena of effort, and keep not only the home market as we have it to-day, but also possess the markets of the world. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman a question, to see if I understand him right.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. I understood the gentleman to say that labor in the United States produced manufactured articles for a less cost than labor elsewhere.

Mr. DOCKERY. Measured by the output of labor, I said our labor was cheaper.

Mr. CANNON. I understand. That is, when the article is completed, it is produced for less cost than elsewhere.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. No; but the labor factor in it is less.

Mr. DOCKERY. I said that, measured by the products of labor, we had the cheapest labor in the world.

Mr. CANNON. Very well. That means that a man getting the wages which we pay in this country will produce articles at a less cost than they can be produced somewhere else—at a less cost than similar articles will be produced by the labor of other countries.

Mr. DOCKERY. At a less labor cost, when you take into account the output of labor. In other words—let me illustrate to my friend from Illinois, because I know he wants light.

A MEMBER (on the Democratic side). He needs it.

Mr. DOCKERY. Perhaps he "needs it," as suggested by my friend.

Mr. CANNON. I understand; and I have no doubt that I will get it now.

Mr. DOCKERY. You will "get it." Now, then, the average annual value of the output of each laborer engaged in manufactories in England, according to Mulhall, is $513, if I remember correctly. The average annual output of each laborer in like employment in Germany is about $687.50, and the average annual output of each laborer engaged in similar American industries is about $2,204.

Mr. CANNON. Now, which produced the most manufactured product of labor, the labor here or the labor there?

Mr. DOCKERY. The labor here.

Mr. CANNON. The labor here. Well, then, why do not we take the markets of the world? Why not repeal revenue legislation?

Mr. DOCKERY. Because my friend, backed by his party, will not permit it.

Mr. CANNON. Why?

Mr. DOCKERY. Because you stand in the way of reciprocal trade.

Mr. DINGLEY. How?

Mr. CANNON. How?

Mr. DOCKERY. By refusing to permit other nations to sell as well as to buy. [Derisive laughter on the Republican side.] "Trade for trade" is the rule of action as applied to individual transactions, and it must also apply to the commerce of nations.

Mr. CANNON. England, so far as manufactured products are concerned, substantially gives us free trade. Now, our labor from day to day produces articles for less cost than English labor. Now, what is to prevent us from taking the English market?

Mr. DOCKERY. Let me call your attention to another matter.

Mr. CANNON. Let us have this one answered first.

Mr. DOCKERY. We are now underselling England in certain lines of goods. We are sending our wares to foreign countries and underselling them. Why? Because the larger percentage of the American output is sold to our own people at an enhanced price by reason of the tariff, and the surplus is sold abroad at a smaller profit than when sold to our own people.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. That is disproved by every manufacturer in this country. It has been proven that it is not true.

Mr. DOCKERY. It has been proven time over and over again. I remember a noticeable instance—the Oliver chilled plow. It was demonstrated in a former debate that it was so sold in Canada.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. An old out-of-date plow.

Mr. DOCKERY. The manufacturers sell here about 96 per cent of all they produce. They sell the 4 per cent abroad which can not be sold in this market.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. It was refuse that would not sell here.

Mr. DOCKERY. I did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. It was refuse that would not sell here, as it was out of date.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I am not willing that the product of the manufactories of Massachusetts should be characterized as "refuse." They have the best machinery in the world, the most intelligent labor, cheap capital, and are skilled in production, but they often sell abroad at a less price than they sell the same article at home.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. What the gentleman says there is no ground for.

Mr. DOCKERY. They sell some of their wares abroad, as I have stated. But, sir, I must conclude. Let me repeat that with an enormous increase of production we must either find a larger market or else organize trusts, close down our manufactories, and thus deprive labor of employment.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say, in the first place, that the transportation as between the North and the South on cotton or anything else cuts no figure, it is so cheap. In the establishment of a tannery they tell us it is a question of hides and barks only——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the gentleman say that that applies to iron as well as cotton?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I would like to be able at least to make a start before being interrupted.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understood the gentleman to say that it applies to everything besides cotton.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I built a tannery in Chicago because I could make leather cheaper in Chicago and transport my bark there than I could make the leather in the country. I will not go into the figures. Leather manufacturers in this country told me I was a big fool for doing that, as they claimed I could make it cheaper in the country. The figures show that I was right.

Now let me speak about exports abroad. Having a market equal to 700,000,000 of the average people of the world here, we can manufacture goods in such an immense number of units with our large factories that we can send them abroad; but the condition precedent is that we must have our own markets safe as a basis to act upon, and having that sure we can compete still and have competed with them under a protective tariff. Citing the conditions under the protective tariff that has enabled us to produce them and sell our goods as we do is simply because of these conditions. The fixed charges destroy profit on a small number of units and almost disappear in an immense number of units. If what you say of the labor cost is true, that it is lowest here, it is only with reference to certain cases and on certain things, and it is lowest here because of the potentially 700,000,000 of protected market. That is the way, and the only way, we can compete with lower European wages.

Now in reference to New England and the South. It has been my fortune to speak to my fellow wage-earning citizens in Massachusetts, and I have never failed to say to the workingmen before me, "You can not get your wages any higher until your brothers at the South have gotten their hours of labor down to the humane point—from the point of destruction of human life and practical murder of young persons and children and also the women by the long hours of labor. Until their hours of labor are reduced to yours your wages can not be raised." Now you say to us we ought to take, in addition to the cheaper labor of the South, all the cheap European labor.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY. Is it not true that in the manufacture of textile fabrics payment is nearly always made by the piece and not by the day?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. No, it is not true as a rule. Certain amounts are expected per day whether it is piece or day work.

Mr. KELLEY. Well, there seems to be considerable contradiction about it.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. The wage earners of the South are going through to-day the same experience that they did in England, that New England went through, and that all manufacturing countries have gone through, viz, to put their infants—children 10 or 12 years old—into their factories, and to grind the life out of them and have them find an early grave. So with their young people and women. Shorten your hours of labor at the South to the humane point and your wages will gradually advance to the New England level. The factories at the South—cotton and woolen—are mostly owned by New England men. The manufacturers of New England have now made a mistake, a serious mistake.

They ought to have suffered a few years without profits and united with the working people of New England to educate the working people of the South into shorter hours, and let the wage question alone; that will take care of itself. If you will educate the people of the South into the adoption of work days that will give them a fair chance for their health—their life—we will ask no odds in New England. We may not get wages any higher; we may have to have them a little lower. You people of the South are our kin; you are blood of our blood, flesh of our flesh; you are brothers, sisters, relatives, and friends, and we will submit to any privation that you may have all the advantages that we have.

But we ask that you do not beggar our people and your own by bringing into competition with our labor and your labor the normally cheap labor of Europe. The only thing we claim for our tariff is that it has given us this market, and that it will protect wages here until the wages in Europe come up to the New England standard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Let me say that wages in Germany have increased proportionately more rapidly than in any other place on the face of the earth in the last ten years. They have increased in England, but not so rapidly. We want to hold our wages where they are until the wages of Germany, France, and England reach our wages, and even then we will ask still for protection for our own markets, because, having our own market, we can sell to better advantage at lower prices all over the world.

Why, the same story that has been told about selling our goods cheaper in foreign countries than at home has been exploded on this floor time and time again. Every investigation that has been made has proved that the thing sold was a cheaper grade or some out-of-date things. Invention is so rapid here, machinery goes out of date so rapidly in factories, that the manufacturers of New England to-day have to charge off to insurance and repairs one-fifth of the cost of the machinery, as they have to put in new machinery.

That is to say, the life of the investment in cotton or woolen fabrics to-day anywhere in this country is but five years, and we sell our old machinery or out-of-date machinery for what we can get for it, or for old junk. Where they work on coarser goods, with cheap labor, they can use our old machinery to a profit, not so large a profit, but to some profit; but their people can work upon it and so work up to the use of higher skill and better machinery.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, while all this talk about "prosperity" has been going on in the goldbug and Republican press and on the floor of this House the plain people of this country throughout the land, and even those that gather in the galleries to listen to these debates, are wondering where their share of it comes in. [Laughter.] The idea seems to be that if you people will keep on talking "prosperity" it will make "prosperity." [Laughter.] The McKinley-Dingley prosperity we hear so much about on the floor of this House and in the metropolitan press reminds me very much of that Mulberry Sellers kind that rests mainly in the imagination of those who claim to enjoy it. [Laughter.]

That distinguished political economist contended, in substance, that if you would take a lighted candle and shut it up in a stove with isinglass doors and have all the company gather around and talk about what a delightful warmth was given out, everybody would keep warm and you would save the expense of coal. [Laughter.] He also contended that if you would take a peck of raw turnips and put them on the table and each of the company would take a turnip and begin to peel and eat, and everybody talk about what a delightful bill of fare it was, everybody would be well and sufficiently fed and you would save the cost of any other food. [Laughter.]

Now, the goldbug press has said continually that if you would just cease your "calamity howling" and everybody become a "prosperity shouter" and say, "Prosperity is here; it is there; lo, it is everywhere," then prosperity would be here. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Chairman, you gentlemen may deceive yourselves with that kind of candle-warmth "prosperity," you may feed your stomachs on that kind of raw-turnip banquet, but it is not going to satisfy the plain people of this country. [Laughter.] And when you hear the result of the next election you will find out whether by this Mulberry Sellers "prosperity" you have succeeded in deceiving the American people. You will hear from them, and don't you forget it. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that all further debate on this paragraph be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk, resuming the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SIOUX OF DIFFERENT TRIBES, INCLUDING SANTEE SIOUX OF NEBRASKA.

For twenty-ninth of thirty installments, to purchase clothing for males over 14 years of age; for flannel, hose, and calico, and domestics required for females over 12 years of age, and for such flannel and cotton goods as may be needed to make suits for boys and girls, per tenth article of treaty of April 29, 1868, $135,000.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I have heard a good deal here with reference to prosperity, what brings it, and what prevents it. The last gentleman who occupied the floor talked about hours of labor and said that he wanted them shortened in the South. I rise to say that I, too, want them shortened in the South. The people who are working on farms commence now as soon as they can see to work, and they continue as long as they can see to work. I hear no eloquent appeals on that side of the House in favor of doing something to shorten the hours of agricultural laborers. These people do not belong to labor organizations; their hours of labor can not be controlled in that way.

The distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] says that he and his party are in favor of conditions that improve the whole country. So am I. We do not want, and do not expect, a character of prosperity that will reach only particular sections or particular classes. Now, a little new evidence on this subject from my part of the country will be, I suppose, exceedingly acceptable. I want to read you a letter that came to me while my colleague from Tennessee was occupying the floor—a letter from a Republican in my county who, if not now, has been for years a member of the Republican executive committee—who never voted a Democratic ticket in his life; but I am afraid if this "prosperity" which the Republicans have inaugurated continues he is in danger of doing so. His language comes from the heart; I ask you to listen to it:

POPE, TENN., January 21, 1898.

DEAR SIR: How is everything moving, and when will we have free coinage? In 1900, I guess. Times are very dull here and I have nothing to do.

You ought to send him to the wheat fields in those sections of the country where "prosperity" is booming—the prosperity that is due to starvation in some other countries. What else does he say?

If you know of or can find a clerkship for me—

[Laughter on the Republican side.]

Wait till I get through. He is a Republican—

If you know of or can find a clerkship for me at any price, I would accept it. It seems that there ought to be a vacancy in some of the Departments there. Do not spend any time looking that you need otherwise; but any favors you can show me will be appreciated. Do your very best for yourself and constituency.

Very truly, your friend,

J. W. WHITSON.

Hon. T. W. SIMS, Washington, D. C.

A MEMBER. He is a Republican?

Mr. SIMS. Yes, a Republican. He never voted a Democratic ticket in his life. But he can not live on Dingley-bill "prosperity" without a clerkship to go with it. Now, I appeal to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], who has charge of Tennessee patronage, to please help me find a place for this starving Republican, who can not live on this "wave of prosperity" which you say is striking the whole country. I can not help him for political reasons; but when I see a Republican with nothing to do, and in want amidst this ocean of "prosperity," I will pull off my coat and go to work for him, if General GROSVENOR will only help me. He has under his control the President's mind "in effect," so far as Tennessee patronage is concerned. No Republican can get an office there unless the General says so. Here is a Republican who is in need, an honorable and competent gentleman, in every way qualified—a man who can not live on the "prosperity" that makes "dollar wheat" in one section and 4½ or 5 cent cotton in another section.

Gentlemen, we want a prosperity that will be general, that will reach the entire country and every part of it—a prosperity that will reach the great agriculturists of the South who raise cotton for New England. Let us do something that will benefit them. The gentleman from Ohio says that conditions can be changed by legislation.

Then I ask you to propose, and we will favor, some measure of legislation to enable the cotton grower of the South to get enough for his cotton to afford him the means of living. We have our own opinion as to what it is or what it should be. But we will take it from you if it be effective to shorten the hours of labor of hundreds of thousands of farmers, who, in order to make a living, must work from early dawn until late at night, and who must, in many instances, drive home after dark after hauling their cotton to the gin. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I have listened with unflagging interest to this eloquent and undoubtedly sincere discussion of labor's interests and labor questions as related to the industries of this country. When so many able, distinguished, and thoughtful economists are lying awake at night and talking all day in the interest of labor, certainly the lot of the workingman ought to be a happy one.

If it be true that the great industrial trusts of the country were formed under the shadow and shield of a protective tariff, for the sole purpose of guaranteeing to American labor higher remuneration and shorter working days than prevail in other countries, then no matter what burdens are imposed, no matter how serious the injury be inflicted upon other and more opulent classes, certainly nobody should complain.

But let us examine the subject for a moment and see whether the great trusts exist solely for the purpose of benefiting labor. Let us analyze the condition of what is called protected labor in this country.

Is it true that our coal mines are in the hands of four or five syndicates; that the coal trusts are connected with and controlled by four or five of the great railway trusts?

Is it true that once or twice in the year the coal trusts meet and agree just how many tons of coal shall be produced in a particular year and how long the mines shall be kept in operation?

Is it true, when the amount of coal agreed upon by the trusts has been taken out of the mines, they are closed, throwing out of employment thousands of men who have families dependent upon them for support?

How often has it occurred that during such suspensions of mining thousands have flocked to the mine owners, begging permission to work for bread for their families, only to be told by the trust managers, "We do not know when we will reopen the mines."

If these things are true, then precarious indeed is the fortune of the family dependent upon the coal trust for that Utopia pictured as labor's share in the blessings of protection by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], eloquently described repeatedly and repeatedly by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], and also by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER].

Is it true that the barbed-wire trust, the pig-iron trust, and half a dozen other trusts that produce the great staple commodities and employ large numbers of laborers follow the same course?

Is it true that in every department of manufactures in which large numbers of laborers are employed it is considered just and humane, because it is lawful, that the directory of corporations shall meet and say, "For the purpose of forcing up prices, we will turn out these thousands to starve?"

Do you not read in the newspapers the pitiful accounts of these lockouts, not once a year, not twice a year, but almost every day? Are they not going on almost perpetually, now in one part of the country, now in another, and frequently throughout its entire length and breadth?

But that is not all. Is it true that in Chicago, St. Louis, Pittsburg, Cincinnati, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Boston, and all the great cities, and in some of the small ones, a very large part of the commodities the manufacturers of which are protected by the tariff are produced in sweat shops by sick women and starving children, at wages so low the story of the penury of the wretched toilers makes us wonder whether we live in the midst of an industrial jungle or amid the splendors of the nineteenth century, the most glorious in human history? You talk about what you are doing for the laborer——

Mr. DALZELL. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. DALZELL. I presume your question was rhetorical, but I will state that there is no such state of affairs in Pittsburg. I will answer your question to that extent.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Near Pittsburg stands a great iron and steel plant, presided over by Mr. Carnegie, an institution which has piled up fortunes, as I understand it, aggregating a hundred and odd millions of dollars. The Pittsburg papers told me not very many years ago that the Carnegie mills had been converted into a fortress and that its owners had imported an army of thugs and bruisers to defend it against laborers who were in revolt. They told me that when the great strike was inaugurated——

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Will the gentleman allow me?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. If you Pennsylvanians will come one at a time, I will attend to you in detail.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri may conclude his remarks.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I will not detain you long.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Missouri be permitted to conclude his remarks.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. If I may be permitted to ask a question.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Oh, certainly.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to say that I shall object to all requests that gentlemen have unlimited time.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Regular order!

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask that my colleague may have five minutes, then.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] be extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I mention the Carnegie mills for the purpose of saying that Pittsburg happens to be the iron center. If it were a center for the manufacture of clothing or anything in which the labor of women and children could be employed, you would have the sweat shop, for the sweat shop is the most luxuriant growth known to the protective system in this country, and the most profitable one.

Mr. DALZELL. I think the gentleman from Missouri wants to be fair. He made a statement, I think perhaps in the heat of debate and without deliberation, that these sweat shops prevail in Pittsburg. Now, I simply make a denial of that.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I am glad to know that there is one city upon which protection has conferred its blessings without entailment of its most conspicuous curse.

Mr. DALZELL. There is one city, at least, that I can testify to.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Permit me to say that the sweat shop curses almost every industrial center in America, and particularly those industrial centers whose products consist chiefly of things that may be produced by woman and child labor.

Now, it is said that labor suffers on account of the introduction of machinery, and that therefore a great many men are thrown out of employment. My colleague [Mr. DOCKERY] mentioned the improvement in type-setting machinery as one of the occasions of a disturbance in labor circles. This reminds me that the printing offices of this country are not protected by the tariff. They are among its victims. Protection makes the types used in every printing office in the country cost twice their value, by barring out foreign type. No Republican publisher on the floor of this House—and there are some here—will deny that this trust has practiced a spoliation and robbery on publishers worse than that inflicted on any other industry in this country.

Mr. LANDIS. Then why did you not when in charge of this Government—I am a newspaper man myself—break up this trust. We looked to the Democratic party to break up that trust; and why did you not do it?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. When did Democrats have charge of this Government?

Mr. LANDIS. Who was it that passed the Wilson bill?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I will answer that presently. The gentleman asked me a question, and I want to answer it. He said that Democrats had charge of this Government. Examine the history of Grover Cleveland and you will know all about it.

Mr. LANDIS. Missouri went for him, did it not?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Do you want me to answer ten questions at once, or one at one time? I will answer your questions one at a time, if you will allow me.

Mr. Cleveland came to this city in 1885 and was inaugurated President. It required two years for him to discover that there was such a thing as a tariff issue.

Why, there is not a night editor at work on a Democratic paper who, had he been elected President in 1884, would not have written a message demanding tariff reform and sent it to Congress on the 4th day of March, 1885, instead of waiting until in December, 1887. Until Henry Watterson and some other distinguished gentlemen had informed him of its existence, Mr. Cleveland seems not to have known that one of the issues between political parties was the tariff. And yet from the day he made the discovery until his renomination he was heralded as the original apostle of tariff reform.

When he was reelected in 1892, Mr. Cleveland fell into the arms of the Republicans of this body, received their united support, and it was Republicans, aided by a few cuckoos and pie eaters, who furnished a majority in favor of Cleveland's Republican policies in both Houses of Congress. There has never been a day or an instant since 1860 when a Democratic President had anything to do with the affairs of this nation. Grover Cleveland is not, never was, and in the very nature of things could not be a Democrat. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] His every act and utterance while President savored of Federalism. Even his diregard of the rights of those who necessarily came in contact with him, and total disregard of the amenities of social as well as of political life, branded him as one incapable of being a Democrat. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MAHANY. Did you not know it before his last election?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. MAHANY. And did not Missouri support him?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. MAHANY. Was not he the Democratic candidate, and did not you give him your vote?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. And we have been sorry for it ever since. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. MAHANY. You are not the only ones that have been sorry.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The most pusillanimous thing a Republican can do is to appeal to the record of Grover Cleveland as an argument against Democracy. Why, every one of you knows and your followers know that the victory you won in 1896 was won by treachery of Cleveland. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.] Cleveland's treason and the treason of those who followed him gave you control of the country when you could not have otherwise gotten it. And now he is spurned alike by Republicans and Democrats—lashed and lashed and lashed by Republican tongues, and cursed and cursed and cursed by every Democrat in the country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MAHANY. Did you not have a trial of him for four years? Did you not then deliberately renominate him——

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. We spewed Cleveland out and you took him up.

Mr. MAHANY (continuing). And after a lapse of four intervening years did you not take him up for the third time and with your eyes open invest him with the power of a second Presidential term? Who, then, but the Democracy is responsible for the disasters wrought by Grover Cleveland?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. We spewed him out, and you were glad to take him.

Mr. MAHANY. No; we repudiate him now, as we fought him in every campaign. We tried to prevent him from ruining the country. You repudiate him only after he has wrecked your party.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. He is considered only for the purpose of being despised by Democrats.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read the next paragraph.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MAHANY. Now will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. I understood that the gentleman had obtained unanimous consent to conclude his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. No; the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. MAHANY. Will the gentleman permit me one question?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes, sir.

Mr. MAHANY. Now, you will admit that we are really trying to bring back prosperity, are we not?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Why, I suppose you are.

Mr. MAHANY. Well, then, let me say——

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I suppose you are. I notice that in Massachusetts, where the dividends of manufactories had ranged from 3 to 16 per cent, when a fall in the price of commodities in some lines of trade threatened these dividends, in order to promote the prosperity of owners of watered stock an effort was straightway made to take bread out of the mouth of labor in order to protect the stockholders. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MAHANY. Is it not, candidly, a better record to be endeavoring to bring back prosperity than to have imposed upon this country four years of Democratic adversity?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I will answer the gentleman by asking him if what he calls prosperity is to meet lower prices for commodities by lowering the price of labor?

Mr. MAHANY. Then you prefer the adversity of the last four years to the present conditions?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Now, I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAHANY] to tell me if every economic change which has recently taken place in this country, every rise as well as every fall in commodities, has not been followed by a reduction in the price of labor?

We have been told wool has gone up under the Dingley bill. Why has it gone up 40 per cent in every other country, including free-trade England? [Applause on the Democratic side.] I do not care to be disturbed any further at this time.

Mr. MAHANY. Oh, then, you are disturbed?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I alleged that there never has been and never will be a time in the history of industrial life when the wages of labor will not depend upon supply and demand——

Mr. KNOX. Will the gentleman allow me one question?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. KNOX. You asserted, as I understood you, that certain corporations in Massachusetts had reduced wages for the purpose of paying dividends on watered stock. What corporations did you have in mind?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. All the corporations——

Mr. KNOX. I ask you what corporations you had in mind?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I will answer the gentleman in my own way, and if he does not want that kind of an answer, he will get it anyhow. I said there was not a single corporation in the United States that in the first instance was not capitalized for a sum exceeding the value of its property. That is watering stock, I take it. I assert, furthermore, that if the gentleman knows of any one corporation, if he can cite a case where it is different. I would like to have him do it.

Mr. MAHANY. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I decline to be interrupted.

Mr. MAHANY. You mean you decline to answer?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I decline to yield any further. [Cries of "The Clerk will read!"]

Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas. Oh, wait, and take your medicine, gentlemen.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That brings me to the consideration of the real question in controversy, which, after all, is between the laborer and inflated capital. It is a contest between labor and watered stock over the division of the net proceeds of production. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You can not pay dividends on seven or eight times the value of a plant, and then pay labor its fair proportion. If you take so large a part for dividends, you can not pay labor what it has honestly, justly, and fairly earned.

Mr. MAHANY. The gentleman assumes everything and proves nothing.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Well, there are very few things that can be proved to the satisfaction of a Republican Congressman.

Another feature of the labor problem should not be ignored. The largest and most sudden influx into labor circles that ever occurred in this country was in 1865 and 1866, when a million men who had been in the armies laid down their arms and returned to engage in peaceful pursuits, in the workshops, foundries, and factories, thus entering into competition with those who had remained at home.

During those years a vast tide of foreign immigration poured into the country, increasing the pressure of competition in the labor market. Wages suffered slight depression, but all found employment. Why was there no outcry then against foreign immigration? It was because the plain people of this country, as was said by Mr. Sherman a few years later, were doing business on a cash basis. A large volume of money was in circulation. The causes of the sufferings of labor to-day are the gold standard and the uneven contest between labor and watered stocks over the division of the net profits of production.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, I should not think of saying a word in this somewhat irregular debate except from the statement that the gentleman has made, as I understood it, that the manufacturers in Massachusetts had reduced and were seeking to reduce wages of laborers employed in order to pay dividends on watered stock. Now, I think it is fair to say that no gentleman ought to state upon this floor that any corporation is seeking to pay dividends upon watered stock unless he knows some corporation whose stock is watered and who is seeking to receive unfair profits.

I say to the gentleman from Missouri that the manufacturing corporations of Massachusetts are organized under the law of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and that no corporation organized under those laws can issue watered stock; that when you want a miserable, cheating corporation, when you want something fraudulent, calculated to deceive and defraud the people, you have got to go to some State out West, down South, or somewhere else and get your certificate of incorporation.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. KNOX. Yes. You would not let me ask you one, but you may proceed.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Is there a single railroad in Massachusetts not capitalized for twice its value?

Mr. KNOX. There is no such railroad organized under the laws of Massachusetts.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. What is the average capitalization of the railroads?

Mr. KNOX. Which one?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Oh, any one.

Mr. KNOX. I have not the figures here.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. And probably never saw them.

Mr. KNOX. But I want to tell you that every corporation organized under the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts must pay in cash the value of the property, or an equivalent to cash, and the property must be examined by the deputy tax commissioner of the Commonwealth. When the gentleman states that corporations in Massachusetts manufacturing cloths have watered their stock, he misstates the facts for the purpose of his argument.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. When was that law passed that you speak of?

Mr. KNOX. I do not know. I have been at the bar myself for thirty years and it was the law when I came to the bar.

Mr. Chairman, one word in regard to the reduction of wages in New England. Very much has been said about that subject to-day. It would seem from this talk that there was a general strike in New England, that operatives are out of work and engaged in a warfare with manufacturers. That is not so. There are more laborers employed in New England to-day in the textile industry than there was a year ago. The great textile cotton cities in New England are New Bedford, Lawrence, Lowell, and Fall River and others. Lowell and Lawrence are in my district. In my district not a mill is idle. All of the operatives are employed and are better off to-day than they were under the Wilson bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LOW. I move that the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KNOX] be extended five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. KNOX. Not a mill is idle in the city of Lawrence; not a mill is idle in the city of Fall River save one. Out of those four great cities where are carried on chiefly the textile manufactures of New England there is a strike in but one, and that is in New Bedford. The reason for that more particularly is that the mills of New Bedford have had an advantage over those of the other cities. They were built more recently; they were built upon cheap land—land bought by the acre; they stand near the seashore; they receive their freight by water; they send out their product by water.

It was thought by the operatives in New Bedford that the mills there had made more than those in other cities; that they were better able to meet Southern competition, and hence the strike of the cotton laborers was concentrated in New Bedford.

Somebody has said here—I think it was the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee—that 125,000 persons are on a strike in New England. Ah, sir, there are not 25,000 taking part in the strike—perhaps ten, twelve, or fifteen thousand in the city of New Bedford. There may be a strike perhaps in a mill in Biddeford and in a mill somewhere else, but 20,000 would cover every person—man, woman, or child—now taking part in the strike in New England. But what have we to offset that?

Mr. COX. I should like to ask the gentleman one question—not that I desire to interrupt him.

Mr. KNOX. Very well.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman state to the House what are the wages paid to one of those employees for, say, twelve hours of labor a day?

Mr. KNOX. They do not work twelve hours a day.

Mr. COX. What do you pay them per day?

Mr. KNOX. The wages run ordinarily at $9, $10, and $12 a week. An ordinary woman weaving in the mills there will make a dollar a day at the lowest, and $9 and $10 a week are frequently paid.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman has stated, as I understand, that a woman operative there makes on the average a dollar a day. Now, on what computation as to hours of labor does the gentleman base those figures?

Mr. KNOX. Ten hours of labor a day, or fifty-eight hours a week.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman said that on an average they make a dollar a day.

Mr. KNOX. Oh, no; I said that an ordinary woman weaving in the factories would make that. I can not undertake to give the gentleman a schedule as to the prices of labor.

Mr. KELLEY. Is not the schedule by the piece, and not by daily hours of labor?

Mr. KNOX. No; generally by the day, if you include all kinds of labor in mills.

Mr. KELLEY. Does the gentleman understand that it is uniformly by the day?

Mr. KNOX. Generally by the day, if you include all.

Now, whatever the wages may be, they are 25 to 30 per cent in excess of the wages paid in the South for eleven and twelve hours a day.

But that is not the point I was making. Since the passage of the Dingley bill, which has been spoken of to-day as the cause of the strike in New England, more men, I venture to say, have gone back into the woolen industry in the State of Rhode Island alone than the entire number of men on strike in the whole New England States. [Applause on the Republican side.]

What was the result of the Dingley bill upon the textile industry of New England? What part of that industry was affected? The part that the Dingley tariff affected was the great woolen industry of New England. In 1892 that industry was prosperous; every mill was running; laborers were well employed; wages were high. But when it was announced that the elections of this country had been carried by the Democratic party and that the manufacture of our woolens and our worsteds was to be surrendered to England and France and Germany, then almost in a moment those industries closed; and in the month of January men who had been at work in the Washington mills in Lawrence, a corporation consuming more raw wool than any other corporation in the United States, were marching the streets past my office carrying banners asking for bread or for work.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. NORTON of Ohio obtained the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. I make the point of order that debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. I move to amend by striking out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I can not remain entirely silent when my honored colleague from Ohio takes the position that he has taken here to-day with so much eloquence and with such apparent sincerity. I say "apparent sincerity," for I have known him for many years, and I have never in all my life known an occasion when he appeared to be more sincere and was less sincere than he has been to-day.

In listening to the prophecies of my honorable colleague I remembered that it has been his business to figure and to prophesy. In the past year he has made 500 prophecies or calculations, 499 of which were wrong and only 1 right, and that was by accident when he got his figures mixed.

You say that prosperity reigns in my State, and you bring "the sage of Athens" to stand before this House and say that this prosperity is due to the Dingley law and to the doctrine of high protective tariff. My colleague tells you on this floor that peace and contentment reign; yet he can not sleep at night in the city of Athens, his home, because of the wail of the miners for food for their starving families that comes to his own doors and to his own ears even now at this hour, in spite of all the prosperity which he claims.

I ask my colleague by what means and manipulations under the Dingley law did the miners of Ohio receive their just deserts? They never received them except by and through the determination of their own organization, having even to bare their breasts to the danger of being shot on Ohio soil in the peaceful valley of Athens.

The gentlemen over there talk of the "prosperity" of the country. I ask them to look at the condition of the coal miners everywhere. I remember that the first gun in the Republican campaign was fired at Hazleton, Pa., and it was the coal miners at whose breasts the rifles were aimed while they were standing upon the streets begging for their just dues, pleading for the right of free speech and denied it by "government by injunction," and the so-called Dingley prosperity was baptized in their blood.

Wool! We are told that there is prosperity in that branch of business in Ohio. I will say that it can never be found out when my distinguished colleague, Mr. GROSVENOR, is really sincere. [Laughter.] He tells us how the woolen schedule has brought prosperity and high prices for wool to the farmers of Ohio. But, Mr. Chairman, I put against his statement the statement of the chairman of the Wool Growers' Association (Judge Lawrence), who has denounced the woolen schedule of the Dingley bill as adverse to the interests of the woolgrowers and an outrage upon the sheep growers in the State of Ohio.

So I say that I never know exactly when my colleague is sincere. To-day he is standing upon this floor and denouncing the gentleman from Kansas as a "backwoods statesman" and an antiquated Greenbacker. But I think I remember when I heard the hills of Athens ring when a certain distinguished gentleman from the State of Ohio, in a form as majestic then, but not so white as now, holding aloft a greenback in his hand, saying that this was the money that saved the country and carried on the war, that saved the flag and brought "Old Glory" to victory on the fields of the rebellion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the gentleman will be permitted to proceed for five minutes longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. I remember, Mr. Chairman, on another occasion when he sat side by side and stood shoulder to shoulder with me in the Ohio house of representatives, and later when he held the gavel with almost as much dignity as the present Speaker of this House, and with almost equal tyranny, too [laughter and applause on the Democratic side]—I remember when he sat as the presiding officer of the house, not only voting but sending word to me on the floor "to muster the forces." To muster the forces to do what?

To carry the Ransom resolutions through the House of Representatives. What were they? They were resolutions declaring that common honesty, common decency, and fair play, that the letter and spirit of the contract under which the great body of our national obligations had been assumed demanded the immediate restoration of silver to its place as the lawful money of the United States [applause on the Democratic side], and his vote as Speaker of that House was "aye."

Now, when did you come out of the asylum? [Laughter.] Since when have you become free? How long since you walked and spoke as a promoter of "honest" money?

But we are told there is "prosperity in the land." If we cite facts, you deny them; and on that side of the House you have been singing "All coons look alike to me" [laughter] from Dingley bill to Indian appropriation bill.

You talk of the "prosperous times" in Ohio; you talk of the prosperity among the miners of that State; you tell of the prosperity among the potteries in Ohio. Go and ask the people in that State what the condition is. Ask them how they are progressing under your tariff laws.

In my own town the great Brewer pottery has been closed since the passage of the Dingley bill and lies silent in the hands of a receiver, and more than 600 men from that institution alone are out of employment, with their families on the streets of Tiffin, begging for work and accepting relief from these "terrible" Democrats. Go into almost any city in my State and you will find reduction of wages, closed factories, and manufacturing establishments in the hands of receivers.

Take the glass works throughout the State of Ohio. They are silent as the grave. And why? Because of the glorious fruits of that "glorious machine" of which we have heard so much—the tariff bill.

Mr. Chairman, there ought to be some sincerity in these matters. Why, you have another evidence this morning of great prosperity. I saw the head lines in the newspaper: "Mr. HANNA has gone to live with Mr. McKinley." [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] Impoverished under your tariff laws and under your doctrines of protection, he has no place to go to except he becomes a mendicant, and sleeps in the garret of the White House. [Laughter.] And they say he has gone there for a purpose. What is it? To get rid of the importunities he has from men who are begging for positions under the Government that they may not starve—begging through MARK HANNA and CHARLES GROSVENOR, honored names in Ohio! Honored for what? For the greatest hypocrisy and sham ideas of patriotism that ever crossed over the border of any State on earth. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Let him go. Let him hide his head there. The people will know and the world will know why. I am not given to prophecies, but if common decency and common sense will be permitted, and you will take off the throttle of government by injunction, cease coercion and intimidation, and let the honest voters of this country have a fair chance, you will see a changed condition to that extent that it will not be necessary for you to come upon this floor longer to play the demagogue and act the hypocrite, and pretend to sing pæans of praise in honor of the prosperity that has come out of what? Out of your own distorted imaginations. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I think it should be stated in fairness to the situation in all the industrial regions of my State, and, I believe, in all the States of the Union, where there are difficulties over labor, where men can not get employment, that the real cause of that difficulty is the fact that while we have stopped certain imports coming into this country, and thereby prevented the competition between foreign products and home products, we still have not prevented the unnatural competition between the cheap pauper labor of the old country and labor in this country. And until we shall have passed laws that properly restrict immigration and cut it down to a normal number, when our immigration shall be no greater than it should be, we will have this difficulty, this abnormal competition in the labor market of this country. The man whose only capital is his muscle, his ability to do a day's work, is entitled to the same protection that capital is entitled to.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. You admit, then, do you, that the scale of wages depends upon the degree of competition in the labor market, and that the only way to stop low wages is to reduce competition?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I admit no such thing.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Then what do you mean when you say we must cut down the number and stop this unlimited competition?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. If the gentleman will allow me to answer his question, I will try to do so. I mean simply this, that there is work enough in this country for all the men and women in it who want to work, but there is not work enough in this country for all the men and women in the whole world who want to work.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Let me answer the question in my own way and in my own time.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Well, answer it then.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I will do it. The labor market in this country is greater than that of any other country in the world, and the laborers in the world have discovered that, and they are crowding over here to enjoy it. We have industrial troubles and we have strikes. Unrestricted, unreasonable immigration is the father of strikes. Reduce our immigration to a normal number, to a number that this country can assimilate, and you will have no more strikes. There is labor enough in this country for the people in this country, but not for all the people in the world.

Mr. MAHANY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes.

Mr. MAHANY. Have we not had, as the gentleman understands it, unrestricted immigration for one hundred and twenty years, and have we not shown unexampled prosperity and progress as a nation under those conditions? Why, then, does the gentleman attach to immigration the sole blame for all our financial and industrial ills?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I am not attaching to it the sole blame. It is true we have had unrestricted immigration, and that fact, in my judgment, has largely produced many of the difficulties of our laboring men.

Mr. MAHANY. The gentleman is saddling on immigration the faults of Democratic mismanagement in our national affairs.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I should like to ask the gentleman a further question.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I should like to answer the question which the other gentleman has asked me first. I entirely agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAHANY] that the evils of Democratic mismanagement are great. The Lord knows that. I am not here either to defend them or to specify them. We have had that all the morning.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MAHANY. I ask that his time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I would like to propound another question to the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Well.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not know that the highest wage rates in employment are not protected, and, further, that as the distance increases away from industrial centers that the wage is increased?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I do not know that that is the condition, and do not believe that it is true.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Then you ought to learn.

Mr. MAHANY. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I will.

Mr. MAHANY. Are you not aware that in 1888, when Mr. Harrison was a Presidential candidate, he made this declaration in the city of Indianapolis, "That it is the glory of the United States that the doors of Castle Garden swing inward?" Did we ever hear of the ills of immigration until we had experienced the disasters of Democratic supremacy in the nation?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. If the ills of immigration are to be placed at the doors of the Democratic party and the Democratic Administration, I am satisfied. If the Republican party is not blamable for neglecting to close the doors of Castle Garden, I would be glad of it. If all the fault is to lay on the Democratic Administration, I will be contented to leave it there. I will prophesy that the Republican party in this House will pass a measure to correct the evil and close up the gates of Castle Garden, at least part way.

Mr. MAHANY. Why not counteract Democratic adversity instead of closing the gates to immigration.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Why, that is the very first step that we are taking.

Mr. MAHANY. We have already taken that in the enactment of the Dingley bill.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. One of the first steps to be taken to get rid of Democratic adversity and Democratic mismanagement is to give to the laboring men and women of this country the same protection that we give home producers against imported goods in this country. Under the protective theory our laboring men and women are as much entitled to the home labor market of this country as capital is entitled to the home market.

Mr. MAHANY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him another question?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I decline to answer further.

Mr. MAHANY. You can not answer me.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Oh, well.

Mr. MAHANY. I asked you a question.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I do not wish my limited time consumed in answering questions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania declines to yield.

Mr. MAHANY. I again ask the gentleman if he will permit one further question—a brief one?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Well, what is it?

Mr. MAHANY. Do you believe that the Republican party has come to that condition where it regards raw humanity as no higher than raw material?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I judge not.

Mr. MAHANY. That, in effect, is your statement.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Oh, no; that is not my statement. I have not made any such statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I have simply said, Mr. Chairman, that there is such a thing in this country as a market for products—products of wool, products of the mines, and products of the factory—and there is such a thing as a labor market in this country—the right to work; the right to earn a livelihood by manual labor.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE (continuing). That is the market that the laboring people are entitled to participate in. Will the gentleman please wait until I finish this sentence? The right to participate in the labor of this country—the right to get it shall first be to the laborers of this country before we distribute it among the laborers of any other country—is that great right. He has as good a right to that as the right of the manufacturer to a home market.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I would like, Mr. Chairman, to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I will not have time to answer a question and finish my statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania refuses to yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I do not blame him.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I find that during the last fiscal year the statistics show that from one country alone 10,000 men came into this country and worked during the season, piled up their wages and carried them out of this country to their own country—men who have been in this country before and men who had crowded the laborers of this country out, men who competed unduly with the laboring men and women of this country. Now, I believe in protection, and for that reason I believe in protecting our own people in their product, which is labor. Our laborers have a right to the home labor market just as much as our producers of iron, steel, and other products have the right to the home market. It is the greatest market in the world, and we can not give it to one class of our citizens and deny it to the other without doing them a great wrong.

We put a tariff upon certain foreign products to restrict their importation and give the home market to like products produced here. For the same just reason we should put a restriction upon cheap pauper laborers and restrict their importation and give the labor of the country to the working men and women here. If protection of capital is right, protection of labor is right. One can not be right and the other be wrong. Our laborers need it much more than our capitalists. Capital can not starve for want of employment, but laborers starve for want of work. Everyone knows that there are more workmen in the country than there is work. That is what keeps wages down. Reduce the number of laborers to the quantity of work in the country and there will be plenty of work for all at good wages. The law of supply and demand regulates the price of labor as it regulates the price of everything. There are too many laborers here, and their number is daily increasing by immigration. I know of only one way to relieve the situation, and that is to restrict immigration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Several members addressed the Chair.

Mr. SHERMAN. I rise to a point of order. Debate upon this amendment is exhausted, and amendments to this paragraph are exhausted under Rule XIX.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. SHERMAN. I raise the point of order that it is not in order under Rule XIX. You must read another paragraph before that can be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The point raised by the gentleman from New York is sustained by the Chair, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLAND. I say that the Clerk can not proceed to read before we have a vote upon the two amendments.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. LACEY. I renew the amendment.

Mr. HANDY. I renew the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It requires unanimous consent for the withdrawal of an amendment.

Mr. BLAND. I raise the point of order that the amendment has not been voted on.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then we have to vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move to amend the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman can have plenty time on subsequent paragraphs.

The question was taken on the amendment, and it was rejected.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. HANDY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. How can the gentleman further discuss this section? How can he discuss anything until we have read another paragraph? We have exhausted the amendments, and unless the amendments are withdrawn by unanimous consent another paragraph of the bill must be read.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There has been no action taken to close debate.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; but the amendments are exhausted. The gentleman knows that there is a limit to the number of amendments.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not know any such thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that there is no limit to consecutive amendments, and the gentleman from Delaware has the floor.

Mr. HANDY. I regret that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] wishes to hurry to a close the interesting debate that has been going on this afternoon. We have been debating the greatest question of practical politics now before the people. We have not been discussing the Indian bill, but we have been discussing the question whether or not prosperity has returned to the American people. That is the greatest question of practical politics that we could discuss at this time, because upon it depends the issue of the approaching elections.

The American people have settled down to the determination that if under the present Administration true and genuine prosperity comes to this country, then unhesitatingly they will continue the Republican party in power. But if under its administration there is a failure of that prosperity so fully promised and so ardently longed for, then the American people are determined to turn the Republican party out of power. I have heard a score of Republicans say in my State something like this: "I voted for McKinley at the last election, and if we have prosperity, I shall continue to vote the Republican ticket; but if we do not have prosperity, I am ready to vote for Bryan and free trade and free silver in the future."

That is the prevailing attitude of thousands of men in the country. The prosperity which they demand in this country must not be fake prosperity; it can not be mere newspaper prosperity. It must be found somewhere outside of articles by journalists and speeches by Congressmen.

Mr. MAHANY. Did you not try free trade from 1892?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Have you got gall enough to say that the Wilson bill was a free-trade bill? On the contrary, it represented a protection of 40 per cent.

Mr. MAHANY. Comparatively speaking, it was free trade.

The CHAIRMAN. The House will be in order. There is too much confusion.

Mr. HANDY. Genuine prosperity when it comes will be instantly recognized. There will not have to be any discussion about it. Every man will see it for himself and know it at first hand. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], with an imagination truly poetic, described the prosperity as it came into our ports rolling like a great wave over our country. I admire the genius of such an imagination.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman from Delaware yield for a question?

Mr. HANDY. Certainly. I did not answer at first because my eyes failed to find the gentleman.

Mr. ADAMS. Well, he is here. Has the gentleman read the official report of the factory inspector of Pennsylvania.

Mr. HANDY. I have not had the pleasure.

Mr. ADAMS. Well, I will give you a chance, then. He states that there are 150,000 more men employed to-day in the State of Pennsylvania than there was this time twelve months ago. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HANDY. I believe there has been, Mr. Chairman, a measure of improvement in business. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MAHANY. Well, is not that progress toward prosperity?

Mr. HANDY. I wish to be entirely frank in what I have to say. It would be strange if there had not been a slight improvement in the business of this country. The Republican party entered into power with such opportunities as no other party ever had. The country had gone through a long and deep depression, liquidation had been accomplished, and the time for reaction had come. Immediately after the Republican party entered into power we had favorable crops in this country and they had short crops abroad. Here you have a period of liquidation, you have favorable crops and a shortage abroad. In addition to those advantages, the Republican party came into power with a great many things in their favor and on their side. Every capitalist in the country felt that he had triumphed in the election and was determined to make good times. The Republicans came into power with the whole press of this country on their side saying that the good times had at last dawned. We read the thing in the newspapers all over the country. One of the widest circulated papers in my country is the Philadelphia Record, formerly a Democratic paper. That paper broke into pæans of praise immediately after the election, saying there was now no cloud to darken the prospect of American prosperity. Day by day, week by week, and month by month every issue contained articles that read very much like sections of the speech delivered this afternoon by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I move that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object to any further extension of time on either side. I want to make progress on this bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not think the gentleman will make anything by that.

Mr. HANDY. I am sorry that the gentleman from New York has picked me out to be silenced; he should not have taken a small-sized man like me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired and objection is made.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I should not have felt like saying anything except for some statements made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTON]. He asks where is the wave of prosperity that was prophesied, and where is there any evidence of prosperity in the State of Ohio. It is a great question to ask, and a great question to answer; but such a question as, in my opinion, does not indicate any great amount of intelligence. "Where is the great wave of prosperity in the State of Ohio?"

If the gentleman can find any one place in the State of Ohio where business is transacted in which there has not been a gradual and substantial revival of industry, then he has found a place that no one else has found in that great State. Go where you please—wherever there is any business carried on—and you will find more men employed to-day than were ever employed before. In my district are many large iron mills, and more men are employed there to-day than ever before in the history of the mills.

I had the honor to preside at a great Republican meeting in my district—a meeting which was the opening of the campaign in Ohio last fall, when the three great political leaders were the speakers. We had sent a telegram to Girard and Niles and one or two other places where the great iron industry was being carried on, asking the laborers to come out to our meeting. I had the honor to read to the great audience a dispatch received from those men, which read something like this:

> A year ago, when you asked us to attend your meeting, we had no money to pay our fare; to-day, when you ask us to attend your meeting, we answer we are too busy laboring to attend any but a night meeting.

That was the response of the laborers in that region.

The gentleman from Ohio has questioned General GROSVENOR'S statement about the increase in the price of wool and about the tariff affecting the price of wool; a great many have questioned it. Now, I do not address myself to all the Democrats on this question, but to every Democrat from the State of Ohio I have a right to address myself. I want to tell you—and Dr. NORTON was a party to it—that in 1884 a high tariff on wool was Democratic doctrine in the State of Ohio; and Senator Sherman was condemned by that party for having voted to cut down the tariff of 1883 to the extent of 2 cents a pound. All the Democracy in the State of Ohio rallied to the support of that doctrine.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. The gentleman says that a tariff on wool was Democratic doctrine in Ohio in 1884? Is it not true that the Democracy denounced John Sherman for having joined in cutting down the tariff on wool?

Mr. NORTHWAY. And they demanded that the previous high tariff on wool should be restored. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Nobody on the Democratic side ever denied that, but we are showing up your inconsistency.

Mr. NORTHWAY. You are denying to-day that the tariff on wool has had anything to do in affecting the price of wool. I am contending that every Democrat in Ohio voted in favor of a high tariff on wool; the gentleman himself, I doubt not, voted and made speeches advocating such a tariff. You sent circulars all over the State advocating a high tariff on wool; you defeated the Republicans at the polls because we had cut down the tariff 2 cents a pound, and you elected Governor Hoadley to the position of governor upon that direct issue. And as soon as your legislature was organized, the very first resolution read from the clerk's desk was a resolution demanding a return to the high tariff on wool; when it was put to a vote, every Democrat in the house of representatives voted for it; when it went to the senate, every Democrat in the senate voted for it, and you gave instructions to the members of Congress from Ohio to vote for a high tariff on wool.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to ask the gentleman this question: If it be true, as he states (and I have no doubt of it), that Democrats in Ohio were at that time clamoring for a higher tariff on wool, is it not also true that shortly before that time General GROSVENOR was arguing in the legislature for free silver?

Mr. NORTHWAY. I will answer your question by saying I do not know. I can say this, however, that General GROSVENOR is able to take care of himself in replying to your question or that of anybody else on this floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTHWAY] has expired.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I should like to have five minutes more. I want to tell a story.

Several MEMBERS. All right.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, those who contend that——

Mr. SHERMAN. I make the point of order that debate is exhausted.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I make the point of order that my colleague [Mr. JONES] has the floor under the recognition of the Chair, and can not be taken off his feet in this way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Washington has the right to proceed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, those who insist that there shall be no change in the policy of this country with respect to the only question that is material to the prosperity of the people or the nation are most prolific and most ingenious in the invention of constantly new excuses for the deplorable condition that exists in this country to-day and has existed for many years past with very rare and very short exceptions. To-day, if the telegraphic dispatches are correct, the President of the United States informs the American people that the only thing necessary to restore prosperity here is an immigration law, and that, too, in view of the fact, as pointed out by the gentleman from New York, that for many years past it has been the deliberate policy of the Republican party to encourage immigration to our shores.

A little while ago, Mr. Chairman, the Republican party in this House and the Republican party in this country told us that the only thing necessary to restore prosperity was a new tariff law; that the Dingley bill would do it all. We got the Dingley bill, and we found that that did not bring prosperity. I know it was claimed that the rise in wheat was caused by the enactment of this very sapient legislation, but I believe nobody pretends to-day that the rise in the price of wheat was caused by anything but almost world-wide famine.

A little while before that we were told that the only thing necessary to restore prosperity was to restore confidence by the election of Mr. McKinley; that immediately upon his election prosperity would come. But for months after the election of Mr. McKinley prices continued to decline, and adversity continued throughout the length and breadth of this land.

A little while before that, Mr. Chairman, we were told that the only thing necessary to bring prosperity was the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman law. That law was repealed; and for every soup house that there was in the United States in October, 1893, when that law was repealed, there were one hundred six months later.

To-day, gentlemen, I have heard it averred on this floor that the trouble with prices is overproduction. Whether that statement comes from the Republican side or from the Democratic side or from any other side of this House, I denounce it as an economic error.

I point to you and quote from the Republican national campaign text-book of 1896. I use that authority because I know my friends on the other side of the House will not dispute the accuracy of that authority. By that campaign text-book it appears that in 1885 the people in the United States consumed, per capita, the enormous amount of 6.77 bushels of wheat.

Mr. COX. What year?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Eighteen hundred and eighty-five.

Following that same authority, I find that in 1894 the people of the United States consumed only 3.41 bushels, just one-half as much. Was that overproduction or underconsumption of wheat? I would like some gentleman to tell me which.

Now, I will say I saw wheat in 1894 selling at the railroad track—No. 1 wheat—at 17 cents a bushel. When it was so cheap as that there ought to have been a great deal of it consumed under ordinary conditions. Yet, with wheat at 17 cents a bushel, we find that the people of the United States consumed only one-half as much as they did in 1885, when it was bringing a fairly good price.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I ask unanimous consent of the committee that my colleague be allowed to proceed for five minutes longer.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I must object.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised at the lack of discipline exhibited on the other side of this Chamber to-day. The members there have failed to follow the leadership of my friend from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON], who started out with a statement that the times were good and prosperous in the State of Kansas.

The gentleman who has just sat down [Mr. JONES of Washington] said, or seemed to admit, that times were good also in Washington. Now, he was elected on the proposition that if he and Mr. Bryan were successful on the free-silver platform, and that that principle should prevail in American politics, the price of wheat would double. Well, the price of wheat has doubled, and therefore the gentleman must admit that it was on his own election, and that the failure of the election of Mr. Bryan did not enter into the matter at all. [Laughter.]

On the other hand, we have the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], who invited the House to Nashville a short time ago to witness a great exposition to be held there, showing to us in an animated manner the material growth and progress of that splendid State. But who is here to-day to say a word for Tennessee which will be calculated to invite an immigrant within its borders, except my friend from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR]? He is the only one who has given credit to that State for its material progress, while on the other hand my friend the gentleman from Tennessee would seem to imply that most any other part of the country would be better as a location.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Not at all; the gentleman is entirely mistaken. We are glad to welcome all immigrants, and can offer them most desirable homes and locations. We are a little better off than most other sections of the country.

Mr. LACEY (continuing). The gentleman is in the throes of despair over the condition of things there, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] says there is no prosperity in his State. And when my friend from Delaware [Mr. HANDY] rises and says that there is a sort of prosperity that has come to his State, the silence on the other side of the House is so dense that you could even feel it in the dark, and the only cheer which went up was from the Republican side of this Chamber. [Applause.]

Why, Mr. Chairman? Because this side believed that prosperity would follow the election of Mr. McKinley, as well as the enactment of the Dingley bill, and that thereby and for that reason Republicans would be successful in the campaign of 1900. [Applause on the Republican side.]

A Democratic paper in my district the other day, following the example of the gentleman from Delaware, said it is true that prosperity has come, but it came because the people knew that Bryan was going to be elected in 1900, although defeated in the last election, and prosperity could not wait. [Laughter.]

You immediately recognize that prosperity now—North, South, East, and West—and we are all delighted to see it. We are especially delighted to see it farther South, and you ought to admit it, as the gentleman from Kansas did, because it is here. It was not because Bryan was turned down that prosperity has come, but, gentlemen, possibly because you were elected. That would be the modest way to put it, and it is the only way you can justify yourselves before the people.

In fact, we have had a sudden change. There were conditions that could not have been foreseen. We had, for instance, a famine in India in 1896. Did that affect prices here? No; not at all. The Dingley bill was passed, and immediately followed a change in our conditions, and not until that bill became a law in 1897 did the famine of 1896 get in its work—the most convenient famine on record for your theories. It waited a year for the Dingley bill before it put up prices. We have had our attention called to the situation as to wool. We have been thrashing over this question of free wool, and we are told that wool was not low; that sheep were not much lower under the Wilson bill than they are now.

Why, I remember in the campaign of 1894 I was making a speech to an open-air audience of three or four thousand people, and one of my friends got up in the back part of the audience and said, "I want you to announce that we are going to have a barbecue over at Monterey next week." Some one said, "Oh, they can not feed the crowd at Monterey." "Yes," said he, "tell them we will kill a dollar and a half's worth of sheep and feed all of them." [Laughter.]

That was the situation in 1894, and yet gentlemen forget all that, and now they talk to us as though there had been no advance in the price of sheep or in the price of wool. We have had an advance all along the line. Alabama has been sharing in it, and I am glad to see my genial friend from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] silent on this question. He is not depreciating the condition of his State. I hope he will rise and tell us that Alabama is prosperous and invite us all to come down there. That would be a cheerful change from what we have been getting from the other side of the House.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask the gentleman from Iowa to permit a question.

Mr. LACEY. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. KELLEY. Is it not a fact that the McKinley law was in full force and effect until the 28th day of August, 1894, the very time when you say sheep were so low in price?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly it was in force at that time, but the whole country stopped almost the instant that Mr. Cleveland was elected. You will remember the industrial panic that promptly came on. You gave notice to the world that we were going to have free wool, and the country did not wait for the change in the law. The incident I relate occurred in the fall campaign that year, but wool and sheep declined while the Wilson bill was pending.

The country anticipates the effect of tariffs when their enactment becomes certain. The gentlemen of the Democratic and Populist parties had better join with us in praising the improvement of our condition. Whether you deserve it or not, you share it with us. Do not run down the interest of your own States, but admit the improved conditions, and if you can not admit that legislation has removed bad conditions by repealing the Wilson Act, you should at least rejoice that your conditions have been greatly changed for the better. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that debate upon this paragraph and the amendments thereto be closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair supposes that the pro forma amendments will be considered as withdrawn.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For subsistence of the Sioux and for purposes of their civilization, as per agreement ratified by act of Congress approved February 28, 1877, $900,000: Provided, That this sum shall include transportation of supplies from the termination of railroad or steamboat transportation; and in this service Indians shall be employed when practicable: And provided further, That the number of rations issued shall not exceed the number of Indians on each reservation, and any excess in the number of rations issued shall be disallowed in the settlement of the agent's account.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that there is no question about one thing, and that is that conditions change by reason of legislation. Now, it seems to me unwise to say that all our Republican friends claim is true, and that it is as unwise to say that all that is claimed upon this side is true. It strikes me that at this time we undoubtedly have prosperity in certain vocations, and in certain other vocations we undoubtedly have depression.

Calling our friend's attention again to the old State of Maine, I want to say that the people in that State at this time are in favor of an immigration-restriction law. A few days ago I received from some friend or some citizen a clipping from a newspaper published in Maine, the Old Town Enterprise. It states that the wages of lumbermen are at least $2 a thousand less this year than they were last year. They say by reason of the tariff on lumber that the lumber industry has shut down in Canada and the lumbermen from that country have come over into Maine, and that the labor market for lumberers is oversupplied.

Now, that is reasonable. I do not doubt but there is some truth in that, and that is used as an argument in favor of a bill restricting immigration. But it seems to me that no reasonable man can deny that if Grover Cleveland, in whose defense I have not a word to say, had been President up to this moment we should have had some of this prosperity. In other words, Democrats, Republicans, and Populists have always contended that when we make the farmer prosperous we make the manufacturer prosperous, the laborer prosperous, and every other man in the country prosperous. It was by reason largely of the famine abroad and the hundreds of millions of bushels of additional wheat that they required that raised the price of wheat.

On the other hand, if you had not had a tariff on wool, the price of wool would have certainly risen to some extent. Mr. Bradstreet, on the 16th of last July, gave as the reason for the rise in the price of wool the fact that sheep in Australia and other countries had died by the hundreds of thousands, and said that this and the McKinley bill were bringing a better price for wool. On the other hand, if you had not cut off the import of cattle, there would have been a rise in the price of cattle, because the report of the Secretary of Agriculture showed a year ago that the supply of cattle was reduced to 8,000,000 less than were required for this country. Not only that, but cattle, sheep, and stock of every kind died by the hundreds of thousands in Australia, in India, and in all the famine-stricken countries.

Then our friends ought to recognize the economic truth that there would have been a rise of some kind in wheat, in cattle, in sheep, and in wool if you had never heard of the Dingley bill, by reason of the inflexible law of supply and demand.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, until a moment ago I had no intention of speaking on the issues now before the House; but a number of gentlemen on the Republican side have referred to the prosperous condition of the manufacturing interests in Alabama as an argument to support their contention that the Dingley tariff bill has brought universal prosperity to the country. I want to say to you candidly and fairly that, although we are not receiving the prices for our products and labor that we should and would receive under more favorable conditions, yet in comparison to other sections of the country it is true we are enjoying a degree of prosperity [applause on the Republican side]; but you did not bring it. It is there, but it was there before you enacted your tariff bill last summer as much as it is to-day.

Mr. MAHANY. It may have originated it.

Mr. LACEY. Was it there in 1894, or was it in abeyance?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes, sir; it started in 1894, after the financial panic of 1893——

Mr. MAHANY. A Democratic panic?

A MEMBER. A banker's panic.

Mr. UNDERWOOD (continuing). That panic shut down a great many of our manufacturing plants, because the money of the country was congested in the great commercial centers, business was stagnated, and there was no demand for the products we manufactured. But as soon as there was any revival in business we were the first to recover, and our furnaces, factories, and foundries resumed operations, and were soon producing more than had formerly been manufactured under the McKinley tariff law, and this condition has continued.

There were just as many furnaces, factories, mines, and quarries in operation before the November election, 1896, and before you passed the Dingley bill, as there are to-day, and they will continue in operation as long as a furnace fire burns or the smoke rises above a colliery in the country, not because of the laws you have enacted or failed to enact, but because our natural resources and advantages are superior to those possessed in any other section of this country, which enables us to compete with all the great nations for the trade and commerce of the world.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] has referred to the fact that a number of new industries have started up in Alabama in the last six months. Yes; that is true. But the gentleman must know that these companies were organized, the capital subscribed, and the foundations laid long before the Dingley tariff bill was enacted, and most of them before the last Presidential election. How can you in fairness and candor claim that your tariff bill brought about conditions that had their inception before you were elected or your party returned to power?

You know this is true. You know it is a fact, and yet the cool audacity that is displayed by the gentlemen on that side of the House, who lay claim to everything that in any way shows business enterprise or industry in this country as belonging to you, as created by you, regardless of the real facts and conditions, is something that surpasseth all understanding.

Mr. LACEY. Will you explain why it is that Tennessee is in such desperate straits, while Alabama is so prosperous?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not know that our sister State is in any such straits. I am not discussing the agricultural conditions in either Tennessee or in Alabama, but am merely comparing the condition of our manufactures in Alabama with those in other States, and in doing so I am forced to admit that our industrial conditions are much better than those of a great many of our less fortunate sister States.

I ask you in all fairness to admit the conditions that exist in Alabama. You know that these new enterprises could not have been organized, built, and started since you passed this tariff bill. Why, then, should you claim that you have produced that result?

Mr. MAHANY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. MAHANY. Is it not true that these industries have been established by means of Northern capital accumulated under a protective tariff?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. A protective tariff has been in existence ever since the war, and any capital accumulated during that time, of course, was accumulated under a protective tariff and in spite of it. You know that a protective tariff did not and could not build up industries that were started before it came into existence.

Now I will explain the real reason why the Alabama manufacturing enterprises can live and prosper when others die and perish.

"The basis of our mineral wealth lies in the cheapness of our minerals and their extent and proximity to the furnace plants. It is conceded that in Jefferson County, Ala., there exists, in this respect, the most remarkable geological condition, perhaps, in the world, and certainly in the United States. Here we have an inexhaustible supply of red fossiliferous ore of good quality, within 6 to 8 miles from the outcrop of the Pratt seam, in the Warrior coal field, by far the best and most extensive deposit of coking and steam coal in the South. The valley between this outcrop and Red Mountain, which contains the ore, is known as Jones Valley, and in it the cities of Birmingham and Bessemer are located. The underlying formation is limestone and dolomite (magnesian limestone) of remarkable purity."

The coal deposits of Alabama, all of which may be said to be in the Birmingham district, are divided into three fields, viz, the Warrior, the Cahaba, and the Coosa. The Warrior coal field covers an area of 7,810 square miles. The estimated workable area of this coal would make a block of coal 75 miles long by 50 miles wide and 10 feet thick—enough to last ten thousand years by working at the rate of 10,000 tons a day. The Cahaba field covers an area of 400 square miles, and is estimated to contain 4,000,000,000 tons, which would last eleven hundred years at the rate of 10,000 tons per day. The Coosa field covers an area of 345 square miles and is estimated to contain 600,000,000 tons, which would last sixty-five years at the rate of 10,000 tons per day. All three of these fields are tributary to Birmingham. The Warrior field is within a few miles of the city, and furnishes the coal for the coke ovens all over the district. For steam and domestic purposes and for the manufacture of coke our coals are equal to the best on the market, as shown by the following analysis:

Average analyses of coals.

Composition.	Warrior field.	Cahaba field.	Coosa field.
	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.

Fixed carbon	63.82	60.16	60.85
Ash	3.31	4.03	4.41

Thus it may be said that our coal is inexhaustible and of a very superior quality. The number of mines in operation in the district in the year 1896, as shown by the State mine inspector's report, is given in the following table:

Where located.	No. of mines.	Production.
		Short tons.
Jefferson County	32	3,729,719
Walker County	24	952,642
Bibb County	5	710,842
Tuscaloosa County	6	25,223
Shelby County	5	52,923
Other portions of the State	6	97,348
Total for the State		5,748,697

The production of coal in the Birmingham district increased from 380,000 tons in 1880 to 5,747,698 tons in 1896.

Tests made by the United States Navy show that our coals are of a very superior quality and equal to any bituminous coal in the United States.

The best qualities of steam and coking coals are sold at the mines and in the city of Birmingham for from 65 to 90 cents a ton.

The total number of coke ovens in the district in 1896 was 5,658, and these ovens produced 1,689,307 tons. The average cost of coke at the furnaces will not exceed $1.75 a ton. The following table gives the chemical composition of the various cokes made at the different ovens in the district:

The ore supply of the Birmingham district is principally derived from the red fossiliferous ores of Red Mountain. The vein carrying this ore is about 22 feet thick at the outcrop and extends down the side of the mountain to an unknown depth. It is only necessary in mining this ore to strip the loose dirt from the top and blast it out as you would a lime-rock quarry. Nature has supplied us here with a practically inexhaustible supply of ore for ages to come. It has been estimated that this one vein of ore in Red Mountain would supply all the furnaces in Alabama, if mined to a depth of 4,000 feet, for three hundred and fifty years. There are also a large number of extensive deposits of brown hematite ore.

The fact that we have the ore in Red Mountain within 2 or 3 miles at the most of the coal in the Warrior field and the lime rock in the valley between the coal and ore is a geological formation that is found no where else in the world.

The ores of the Birmingham district are classified as red and brown, the chemical composition of which may be seen in the following analyses:

There were mined in the district 1,588,280 tons, and ores of the grade and quality shown in the above table are delivered in the stock houses at the furnaces at the following prices per long ton: Hard red, 75 cents; soft red, 65 cents; brown, $1.

The deposits of limestone and dolomite are found in inexhaustible quantities, and the foundations of most of our furnaces rest on the limestone or dolomite that can be used in the furnaces. It costs delivered at the furnaces from 40 to 65 cents per long ton, depending upon the location of the plant.

The following are average analyses of the dolomite and limestone of the district:

The total production of pig iron for 1896 in this district was 922,170 tons. Alabama is producing from 35 to 40 per cent of all the iron used in the foundries, pipe works, and rolling mills in the country, and 90 per cent of the iron manufactured in the State is manufactured in the Birmingham district. An average analysis of the foundry pig iron made in Birmingham shows the following:

The Birmingham furnaces also manufacture a basic iron for open-hearth steel works. The specifications for such iron as required by the steel manufacturers are as follows: Silicon, not to exceed 1 per cent; phosphorus, not to exceed 1 per cent; sulphur, not to exceed 5 per cent.

The average analyses of 475 casts of the basic iron made by the Alice Furnace of the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company are the following:

It is next to impossible to secure a better iron than this for the manufacture of steel. The following is a list of the customers who have used the basic iron made at the Alice furnace in Birmingham: Kellogg Weldless Tube Company, Findlay, Ohio; Receivers Otis Steel Company (Limited), Cleveland, Ohio; Apollo Iron and Steel Company, Pittsburg, Pa.; Spang Steel and Iron Company, Pittsburg, Pa.; Carnegie Steel Company (Limited), Pittsburg, Pa.; Jones & Laughlins (Limited), Pittsburg, Pa.; Kirkpatrick & Co., Pittsburg, Pa.; Illinois Steel Company, Chicago, Ill.; Granite City Steel Company, St. Louis, Mo.; Cleveland Rolling Mill, Cleveland, Ohio; Shickle, Harrison & Howard Company, St. Louis, Mo.; Midland Steel Company, Muncie, Ind.; Aliquippa Steel Company, Pittsburg, Pa.; Park Bros., Pittsburg, Pa.; Birmingham (Ala.) Rolling Mill; De Kalb Company, Fort Payne, Ala.; Passaic Rolling Mill, Paterson, N. J.; Elmira (N. Y.) Iron and Steel Rolling Mill Company; American Steel Foundry Company, St. Louis, Mo.; Nashua (N. F. de Ferne, Italy; St. Charles Car Company, St. Charles, Mo.; Pacific Rolling Mill Company, San Francisco, Cal.; A. & P. Roberts Company, Pencoyd, Pa.; Builders' Iron Foundry, Boston, Mass.; Naylor & Co., Pittsburg, Pa.; Burgess Steel and Iron Works, Portsmouth, Ohio; Jas. Watson & Co., agents.

The well-known reputation of these firms is a sufficient guaranty of the merchantable quality of this iron for the manufacture of steel, but in addition to this I may say that the Carnegie Steel Company, Limited, of Pittsburg, has purchased large quantities of this iron to be used in the manufacture of armor plate.

The cost of materials, the coke, ore, and limestone for the production of pig iron in the Birmingham district is about $4.25 per ton, and the labor cost does not exceed a dollar a ton.

The Birmingham Rolling Mill Company has now in operation two open-hearth furnaces with a capacity of 100 tons per day. The average analyses of 100 heats of basic open-hearth steel made by the Birmingham Rolling Mill in 1897 are shown by the following table:

It is estimated that the maximum cost of converting pig iron into steel billets is $5 per ton, and steel billets can be made from eleven to twelve dollars a ton.

The following is a list of railroads that now enter the city of Birmingham: The Louisville and Nashville, the Southern Railway, the Birmingham Belt System, the Birmingham Mineral Railroad, the Central of Georgia Railway, the Alabama Great Southern Railroad, and the Kansas City, Memphis and Birmingham Railroad. From which it is seen that this district has ample railroad facilities for the shipment of its products.

The average haul of the various raw materials from the mines to the furnaces is from 2 to 15 miles for iron ore and from nothing to 12 miles for coke, and from 6 to 20 miles for limestone.

The climatic conditions are another great advantage to the manufacturer in this district. There are no cold winters to be provided against, and therefore we are not required to build as costly buildings as those erected in more northern climates, and less fuel for the operation of the plants and protection of the employees is required. Food supplies are much cheaper than in the manufacturing districts of the North, and the employees are not required to purchase as heavy and expensive clothes as are those who are working in more northern climates.

This district is to-day manufacturing boilers of standard quality, heavy sugar-mill machinery and castings, locomotives, blowing engines, and has in operation a large number of foundries, rolling mills, pipe works, and machine shops.

The Howard Harrison Pipe Works, located at Bessemer, is one of the largest cast-iron pipe works in the world, and the manufactured products of the district are being shipped in large quantities to Europe, Asia, and South America. Over 200,000 tons of pig iron were exported to England and Europe in the six months ending with July 1, 1897, and the export trade is continually increasing.

With these facts before us, it is absurd for the gentlemen on the Republican side of the House to think that the industrial development in Alabama is due to any legislation passed by them. They did not tell the country in their speeches that they have practically left the iron schedule unchanged and that the tariff rates on a large majority of iron and steel manufactured products are identically the same as they were under the Wilson-Gorman bill. This is absolutely true of that class of iron and steel that is being manufactured in the Birmingham district.

Under the Wilson-Gorman bill the tariff on pig iron was $4 a ton. Under the Dingley bill the tariff on pig iron still remains at $4 a ton.

For the fiscal year ending with June, 1897, there were 22,000 tons of pig iron imported into the country from abroad, and this pig iron was almost entirely a special grade of Scottish iron that is not produced in this country and does not come in competition with any grade of iron we make. On the other hand, the production of pig iron for that year in the United States amounted to more than 9,500,000 tons, and the exports into England and Europe amounted to more than ten times the amount of pig iron that was imported, our iron going in direct competition with the iron manufactured in the furnaces of those countries.

My only excuse, if an excuse is needed, for what I have said in reference to my own district is that the gentlemen on the other side of the House have persisted in their claims that their party has produced the industrial conditions now existing in Alabama, when as a matter of fact those conditions existed before they came into power. Those conditions arise from natural resources of the country and the bountiful generosity of nature. Although the gentlemen themselves may believe that they have accomplished this for the iron and steel producers of this country, the pretension they make that a four-dollar protective tariff on pig iron is more advantageous to the manufacturers under the Dingley bill than a four-dollar protective tariff under the Wilson-Gorman bill is a proposition, I must confess, my mind is not able to grasp.

And yet, if their claims were true that they have produced these conditions in Alabama, why have they not in some way legislated to help the Alabama farmers? They say that they have legislated the price of wheat to a dollar a bushel. Since they have regained power the price of cotton has fallen a cent a pound, and the farmers throughout the South are in a worse financial condition than they have ever been heretofore.

On the iron and many other schedules the Dingley bill carries protection to the point of prohibition, which is the destruction of all commercial intercourse between nations. The true policy for us to pursue is that which will most usefully employ American labor and American capital, on the farms as well as in the factories. It is a fundamental principle that the great interests of the country are interwoven and inseparable; that agriculture, commerce, and manufactures will prosper together or languish together, and all legislation is dangerous which proposes to benefit one of these without looking to consequences which may befall others.

The enlightened opinion of the closing days of the nineteenth century sets with a strong current in favor of commercial freedom and unrestrained individual action. Those who have enjoyed the benefits in the past will yield up their prejudices in favor of monopoly with great reluctance, but they will not be able to withstand the great tide of public opinion that is crying for a free commerce and a free man as well as a free nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired, and debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and maintenance of day and industrial schools, including purchase, erection, and repairs of school buildings, in accordance with article 7 of the treaty of April 29, 1868, which article is continued in force for twenty years by section 17 of the act of March 2, 1889, $225,000; in all, $1,487,000: Provided, That the Secretary shall cause patents to issue to the Santee Sioux Indians who were assigned lands in the State of Nebraska under the act approved March 3, 1863, entitled "An act for the removal of the Sisseton, Wahpeton, Medawakanton, and Wahpakoota bands of Sioux or Dakota Indians, and for the disposition of their lands in Minnesota and Dakota," which assignments were approved by the President May 11, 1885. Said patents shall be of the form and legal effect prescribed by the fifth section of the act approved February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes."

Mr. GROSVENOR. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to reserve a point of order here.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Let me make a few remarks, and then I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to refer for a moment to the suggestion of my distinguished colleague from Ohio touching a very ancient matter, and one which has been very fully ventilated in this House a great many times. It relates to the attitude of both political parties west of the Allegheny Mountains in the winter of 1877.

It will be remembered that the Republican party in Congress, with the aid of some Democratic votes, passed what was then and is now known as the resumption act, whereby it was provided that the paper promises of the Government should be redeemed in coin on the 1st day of June, 1879.

In 1887, especially in the winter of that year, there was a great fear throughout the country that there would not be coin enough available, and that the promises of the Government presented at the Treasury would go to protest and a panic would ensue.

The act of 1873, known as the crime of that famous year, had made it, it was supposed, impossible to redeem the paper promises of the Government with silver, and the alarm or fear which was voiced by General Ewing in the campaign in Ohio—that immediately upon the opening of the subtreasury on the morning of the 1st of January, 1879, there would be a rush that would carry away the specie—was sympathized with by a vast number of people. I was a member of the Ohio legislature at that time and the speaker of the house of representatives. A Republican senator by the name of Ransom introduced a resolution into the senate in the following language:

Resolved by the general assembly of the state of Ohio, That common honesty to the taxpayers, the letter and spirit of the contract under which the great body of its indebtedness was assumed by the United States, and true financial wisdom each and all demand the restoration of the silver dollar to its former rank as lawful money.

Let us see about this. There were two conditions surrounding us at that time: First, a fear of scarcity of coin for redemption of our paper money; second, the fact that silver and gold were practically at a parity. I think that had not been thought of by my distinguished colleague from Ohio [Mr. NORTON]. I have not the exact and absolute data; but the silver in a silver dollar was worth at that time within 3 cents or 4 of the gold in a gold dollar. It stood at 17.22 to 1.

Mr. BLAND. Of what date is the gentleman speaking?

Mr. GROSVENOR. The 10th of December, 1877.

Mr. BLAND. You will find that there was about 10 cents difference.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman give me the exact figures, if he has them?

Mr. BLAND. I can not give you them exactly, but my recollection is it was somewhere about 10 cents.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, that was in 1878.

Mr. BLAND. No; it was in 1877.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It was not further apart than 3 cents, I think, at the most.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman is mistaken altogether.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, I will stand upon the record.

Mr. BLAND. You have not any record to stand upon. There is not any record of that kind.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, we will have the record.

Mr. BLAND. You can not get any record that will show it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will say, then, that they were at a parity.

Mr. BLAND. Oh, yes; you might say anything.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, that was the first condition. There was a fear of a scarcity of coin, and in the next place the two metals were practically at a parity. Thereupon this Republican senator introduced in the senate this measure which I have read.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman yield for a moment? I have here the price of silver in 1877. It was at the ratio of 17.22 to 1.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What date is that?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have not the exact date, but it is in 1877.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I withdraw the amendment I offered, and I now move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That will not do, but I hope there will be no objection to the gentleman continuing. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Ohio be allowed to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GROSVENOR. This resolution was referred to a Republican committee in a Republican senate, reported unanimously, and passed, as my record shows, with hardly a single dissenting vote, and whether that was a Republican or a Democrat I can not say. It came to the house of representatives and went to the committee, which reported it unanimously, and, if my record has it, was passed by a vote of 103, or about that, to possibly 3 on the other side.

How I voted as speaker I do not know, for I very seldom voted at all; but if I did not vote on that resolution at that time, I certainly would do it under like circumstances even now. No, Mr. Chairman, there is no inconsistency in my record. So long as it was possible to make the parity of a silver dollar with a gold dollar, I should have been one of those who in this House, as did McKinley, as did CANNON, as did STEELE, as did the leading Republicans, voted for a similar resolution. The vote in the Republican House of Representatives stood 189 to 79 on the other side; so before inconsistency can be alleged against the record of any gentleman it must be shown that similar conditions exist. Whenever the time comes that the silver dollar can be coined in this country approximately, within a reasonable construction of that word, with the value of a gold dollar, I shall be found in favor of free coinage of the one as I will be in favor of the free coinage of the other.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Will the gentleman permit me? When gold and silver were nearly at a parity and the act of demonetization was passed, did you indorse the demonetization?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am not called upon to forgive the crime, as you call it, of 1873.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. You were one of the gentlemen.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I was not. I was a humble and private citizen of the State of Ohio.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. You were not a humble and private citizen. You have always been a public and noisy one. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] assures us that he will vote for unlimited coinage of silver when the conditions are similar to those which existed in 1877. Now, the only conditions which have been urged as a reason for adopting the gold standard has been the condition produced by the relative excess of the product of silver as compared with gold.

That is the condition which was drummed in our ears during the debates on the Sherman bill in 1890 and when we discussed the repeal act in 1893. Let me inform the gentleman that the time has come now. The relative production of gold has been fully restored, and all other existing conditions are such as to make the demand for silver coinage much more imperative than it was in 1877.

The business of the country is much more extensive now than then, and the necessity for redemption money is double or possibly treble the necessity in 1877; and all we need now to create the parity to which the gentleman refers is to enact laws so as to give silver the same rights in the mints that are accorded to gold.

I rose, however, Mr. Chairman, to thank the gentleman from Iowa for his kindly words regarding Alabama. It is quite true that that fortunate State is blessed with marvelous wealth, but the greater part of that wealth is now undeveloped, and we sorely need honest, industrious labor to prepare our hidden resources so that they may add to the comfort and happiness of mankind. And what is true of Alabama is also true of many other sections of our land.

We have virgin forests and beautiful streams; we have fields untouched; we have mines of gold, of silver, of coal, of iron, of copper, and many other valuable minerals. In my own State, Mr. Chairman, we can employ 10,000,000 honest workmen in cotton factories, upon our farms, and in our mines of iron and coal. In that State we can manufacture all the steel and iron and cotton goods needed to supply the world. And I say now that I hope every honest weaver and spinner in the English factories, in the German factories, in the French factories, will come to our country and develop this limitless hidden wealth that rests in the bowels of our mountains and our plains.

Now, with that necessity pressing upon us, I have been astonished to hear the new and strange doctrine which has been announced by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania and acquiesced in by four prominent Republican leaders, who have spoken since he took his seat, and including such men as Mr. GROSVENOR, Mr. NORTHWAY, and Mr. LACEY. I refer, of course, to the assertion that the Republican policy is to be an absolute prohibition against Europeans or foreigners coming to our shores.

Mr. Chairman, there was no qualification; there was no advocacy of the principle always adhered to by Democrats to insist that immigration in this country be restricted to good, honest, industrious citizens; not a word of qualification. The gentleman demanded that no immigration to this country be allowed. I insist that we want good, honest, industrious people to come to us.

Our objection, Mr. Chairman, to prohibitory or restrictive tariff is that it invites retaliation. Only to-day we see that the French Government, in retaliation for our high tariff on wines, has determined to make absolute prohibition against the cotton-seed oil of the South. Since the passage of the bill of 1883 every principal nation in Europe, except France, Germany, and England, has imposed almost prohibitory duties on raw cotton. This has had a detrimental effect upon the cotton growers of this country.

Mr. STEELE. When the gentleman speaks of his State being able to employ 10,000,000 workmen, does he not think his language is a little strong? Had he not better drop about 9,000,000?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. We can employ 10,000,000 to-day in the mines and factories and farms of Alabama. There is no limit to the field for the employment of good, honest labor in this country. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HANDY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last word. If there has been, as I admitted when I was last on the floor, a slight, though noticeable, improvement in business, it is equally true that there has not been anything like a return of general prosperity to the people of the United States. There is every reason (except the mistaken and evil policies of the party now in power) why this country should go leaping and bounding along the pathway of prosperity. We have a great country. We have the greatest home of any people in the world. Our land is fertile; our forests and our mines are practically inexhaustible; our climate is good; there has been no pestilence; there has been no war; there has been no great disaster or calamity. We have in this country an industrious people, a skillful people. The American people have willing hands to work.

With such a country and with such a people why should there not be abounding prosperity? Why should any political party plume itself and pride itself in this House on the meager signs of returning prosperity? For in all candor, gentlemen on the other side know that the signs of returning prosperity are not yet satisfactory. They are meager, they are uncertain, and, worst of all, they are doubtful and hesitating; for, Mr. Chairman, the return of prosperity—the steady onward march that was promised in the fall—has slackened its pace. It is not so manifest or positive to-day as it was three months ago. It seems that the prosperity which we so gladly hailed in the early fall was but a flash in the pan; it was but "a swallow that does not make a summer." And the whole flock of birds is now threatening to fly away.

Mr. Chairman, the greatest fact in practical politics is that the American people are weary of hard times. They are disposed to lay the blame for hard times on the Government; and to a large extent they are just and right in doing this. I am perfectly aware that the Government can not support the people; I am perfectly aware that the Government can not make prosperity for the people. Mr. Chairman, the people must support themselves; and in addition to supporting themselves they must support the Government. The Government can support neither itself nor the people; and the Government therefore can not make prosperity for the people. But the Government can interfere with the prosperity of the people. The Government can make laws which burden and harass the people. The Government can overtax them. The Government can diminish their needed supplies of money, of circulating medium. It can only help to restore prosperity by repealing the evil laws which block prosperity's pathway.

The difficulty in the United States to-day is not a natural difficulty; it is not a difficulty of air or soil or water. It is not a difficulty in the industry or disposition of the people. It is a Government-made difficulty. And the people of the United States are quite wise politically in assuming the position that if, under the party at present in power, good times come to this country, then they will sustain and maintain that party in power; but if good times do not come to this country, then they will drive that party out of power.

They are wise, Mr. Chairman, in that position, because these questions, involving economic conditions and finances, are abstruse and elusive. They are abstract questions, and the people as a whole, perhaps, can not thoroughly understand them. But they can, at least, and do understand results. They can understand when life is made harder in their homes to them by legislative enactments. There is nothing left for the people to do except to apply to political parties the good old test, "By their fruits ye shall know them." [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I understand that a moment ago, during my momentary absence from the House, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] reserved the point of order on the proviso to the bill relating to the issuance of patents, in line 16 of page 32, for the purpose of hearing some explanation as to the necessity for this provision.

The matter, I will say to him and to the committee, is inserted here on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior to meet this condition of affairs. Under the act by which these Indians were to have their allotments of land in severalty no provision was made for the issuance of patents to them.

They have received their allotments and are in possession of the land; but they have no patents by which their right of possession is insured. This is simply a provision authorizing the issuance of the patents to them, and neither carries nor involves an appropriation.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is this unanimously recommended by the committee?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, yes; it was recommended first by the Secretary of the Interior, and received the unanimous approval of the committee.

Mr. DOCKERY. In this connection I desire to call the attention of the gentleman to two paragraphs which have been passed, one increasing the amount for the transportation of Indian goods and supplies $25,000 and the other an item of $5,000 for the purchase of goods and supplies.

Mr. SHERMAN. To what items does the gentleman refer?

Mr. DOCKERY. On page 10 of the bill. I am informed that there will probably be a deficiency of $50,000 in addition to the $25,000 of increase recommended by the committee and carried in the bill for the transportation of these supplies. In other words, the railroad companies have, for some reason or other, increased the cost of transportation over that of the current fiscal year about 33⅓ per cent.

I did not have all of the information in my possession at the time that these paragraphs were considered and passed upon by the committee, but I have that information now. It seems to me that the committee should in some way protect the Government against the enormous increase of transportation proposed here; that is to say, $25,000 is put into the bill and $50,000 is estimated as a deficiency, or $75,000 in all, being an increase in this item amounting to $75,000. I hope the able gentleman in charge of the bill will suggest some way by which the Government can secure reasonable rates of transportation.

I do not know what laws are in effect governing this matter or under what policy the increase of 33⅓ per cent has been made or authorized; but there ought to be some provision to restrict the railroads and to preserve the rights of the Government with reference to this matter.

Mr. SHERMAN. I fail to see, Mr. Chairman, how, in an Indian appropriation bill, we can legislate in relation to the rates of transportation of freights charged by the railroads throughout this country. Of course if the discussion which we have had during the day is any criterion, we ought to be able to regulate all the affairs of the entire world in an Indian appropriation bill; but I do not see my way clear to do so.

Mr. DOCKERY. I know that it may seem to be out of order to discuss the bill under consideration [laughter]; but I would like to suggest to the gentleman in charge of it that perhaps no point of order would be made against some proposition to effect a reduction in this matter and save the money of the Government.

I understand that this is an increase of about $75,000. There is an increased appropriation, as I have said, of $25,000 carried by the bill. The bill itself carries $300,000, with a contemplated deficiency of some $50,000 more.

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman from Missouri, I think, is entirely correct. It seems possible that the item of $25,000 of increase in the bill will not be sufficient to meet the expenses during the next fiscal year. And in the communications addressed to the committee we have been informed that if these rates were sustained throughout the entire country, and there seems no reason why they should not be, with the increase of commodities to be transported throughout the country, it was quite probable that there would be a deficiency at the end of the fiscal year of $50,000.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is not the Department able to suggest some remedy by which they can obtain old-time rates?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Department has not suggested any remedy, and I myself fail to see any remedy that we can apply in this appropriation bill to regulate transportation rates throughout the country. We do, in another place in this bill, provide that the Secretary is not bound to transport goods over those roads only which offer the lowest bid in competition, because it has been found heretofore, as the Secretary reports to us, that were he not so limited he has frequently discovered he could, by making a private arrangement with some other road than the lowest bidder, save to the Government considerable expense.

At a later point in this bill we have inserted a proviso that where the Secretary sees that it is possible to save expense to the Government by throwing aside these competitive bids and by letting the contract for the carrying of goods to a common carrier who will carry them for less than any of the competing bidders, he can do so. We believe that under that provision it will be possible for the Secretary to save something during the next fiscal year. That is the only suggestion I have to make upon the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon this paragraph is exhausted.

Mr. STEELE. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. COX. I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I desire to make a point of order against the proviso to this section.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. CONNOLLY. That it contains new legislation, the same point that was reserved by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, my only suggestion about that is that it is too late for the gentleman now to raise the point of order. The point of order was once raised by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] and was withdrawn, as I understood the gentleman from Missouri, and we have had some little debate upon the subject and upon other subjects since that time.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I beg pardon. That debate was on a totally different subject.

Mr. SHERMAN (continuing). So it is too late for the gentleman to raise his point of order.

Mr. CONNOLLY. The gentleman from Missouri reserved a point of order. He can not, by withdrawing that, cut off every member from making the point of order. The subject-matter of that proviso was not concerned in the colloquy between the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN]. It was a totally different proposition that they were discussing.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I did reserve the point of order for the purpose of inquiry, and have no desire myself to press it; but I do not recall that I withdrew the point of order.

Mr. CONNOLLY. It was not withdrawn openly before the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not recall that I withdrew the point of order, although I will state frankly that it was not my purpose to press it.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I insist upon my point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no hesitation in saying that if the point of order was taken at the right time it is sustainable.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Chairman, this is the first opportunity I had——

Mr. SHERMAN (continuing). But the gentleman from Illinois is too late in pressing his point. We have passed on to other matters.

Mr. CONNOLLY. You have not passed on to anything beyond this.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] had been recognized for the purpose of an amendment, and had offered an amendment.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I have tried two or three times to get the attention of the Chair, but the Chair has seemed to be looking the other way all the time. This is the first opportunity I had.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair regrets, then, that the point of order was taken too late.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, in this discussion on an appropriation bill, I desire to direct what I have to say to the chairman of the committee. It is admitted upon the floor in this running debate that this appropriation bill will probably carry an increase beyond the amount that was asked for in the last one. Now, I want to understand how this is. In a report from the Secretary of the Treasury there appears to be, in round numbers, $240,000,000 in the Treasury of the United States. The gold reserve amounts to $100,000,000, and there is, therefore, in addition to the gold reserve, locked up in the Treasury of the United States $140,000,000. The record shows that the revenues are not sufficient to meet the expenses of the Government.

I am not going into the question as to how it will be. I want to ask the chairman of the committee if he has any information why it is that $140,000,000 of money that ought to be in circulation in the United States is locked up in the Treasury of the United States and not paid out, instead of borrowing money and paying interest upon it, for that is the effect of it. I repeat it again, so there may be no question about it. The sum of $140,000,000 is locked up in the Treasury. It has been locked up, and continues to be locked up, and the revenues are running behind the expenditures, which results in paying interest on the expenses of the Government. I want some man who can to tell me why it is that that $140,000,000 is locked up there and kept away from meeting the expenses of this Government. That is the sole purpose of my inquiry. I wish to understand why this Government, as a business transaction, permits its expenses to go ahead of its resources and at the same time keeps $140,000,000 locked up in the Treasury.

Mr. KING. The gentleman ought not to ask questions which can not be answered.

Mr. COX. Well, I want to be fair with everybody and I want to be square with everybody. If the chairman of the committee can not answer it, I should be glad if some Republican on that side would tell the House why that money is locked up there and excluded from circulation amongst the people. If you can not answer it, all right.

The Clerk read as follows:

SIOUX, YANKTON TRIBE.

For tenth of twenty installments (last series), to be paid to them or expended for their benefit, per fourth article of treaty of April 19, 1858, $15,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to add a few words to the remarks I was submitting a few moments ago in reference to the excuse for the fall of prices, namely, overproduction. I deny, Mr. Chairman, that there is or can be an overproduction of the products of industry in the necessaries of life so long as there is a man, woman, or child in the world who needs food and can not get it, who needs a home and is homeless, who needs shelter or warmth, who is left shelterless and fireless.

I want to call the attention of my Republican friends to the fact that there are upward of 400,000,000 Caucasians in Europe alone; and I want to call your attention to the further fact that these Caucasians in Europe have appetites like our own. They have appetites like our own to be fed and bodies to be clothed. They have the same wants that we have; and if they were supplied or could be supplied as liberally as human beings ought to be supplied with food they would consume as much food per capita in the course of a year as the people of the United States, who, it is only fair to say, are the best fed people on the face of the earth.

But, Mr. Chairman, if these 400,000,000 Caucasians in Europe would supply themselves to-day with wheat at the rate the people of the United States did in 1885, it would take more wheat to feed Europe alone than the world has ever produced in any year. It would take more wheat than it is possible for the world to produce with the degree of cultivation to which the soil is now subjected to feed Europe alone, and leave not one single bushel of wheat remaining for America, for Asia, for Africa, or for Oceanica; and yet, Mr. Chairman, when we point to the fact that there are millions of people in the United States who have not the wherewithal to make provision for their appetites, that they are going to bed supperless and hungry, and we ask why it is so, they tell us it is because there is "too much bread."

We point to the fact, Mr. Chairman, that there are in the United States to-day millions of people who are in need of clothing; and when we ask the reason why that is so, we are told that there is too much cotton, too much wool. We point to the fact, Mr. Chairman, that there are millions of people in the United States that are practically homeless and shelterless, and we ask why this is so, and they tell us there is too much lumber and too much brick. I tell you, Mr. Chairman, give the laboring men of this country an opportunity to trade off an honest day's work for an honest day's pay and you can not produce too much of woolen or cotton goods, brick or lumber, or coal to supply the demand that they will create. Give them an opportunity to supply their wants by fair and honest labor and there will be no more talk about overproduction.

Why, think of it; between 1885 and 1894—and I rely upon good Republican authority (the Republican campaign text-book) to prove that—there was a shrinkage in the home market of the United States in the home products of the farmer of 50 per cent, and consumption fell from 6.77 bushels per capita to 3.41 bushels. In 1893 we only produced 395,000,000 bushels of wheat. At the rate we consumed it in 1885 it would have taken 450,000,000 bushels of wheat to feed this country, and yet, Mr. Chairman, although our home production was 62,000,000 less than enough for our people at a fair rate of consumption, the people of the United States were too poor to supply themselves with bread, and we were compelled to send a large amount of our wheat to Europe for a market while we were leaving our own people at home hungry.

The Clerk read as follows:

SUPPORT OF SCHOOLS.

For support of Indian day and industrial schools, and for other educational purposes not hereinafter provided for, including pay of an architect and draftsmen, to be employed in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, $1,100,000, of which amount the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, use $5,000 for the education of Indians in Alaska: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may make contracts with contract schools, apportioning as near as may be the amount so contracted for among schools of various denominations, for the education of Indian pupils during the fiscal year 1899, but shall only make such contracts at places where nonsectarian schools can not be provided for such Indian children, and to an amount not exceeding 20 per cent of the amount so used for the fiscal year 1895: Provided further, That the foregoing shall not apply to public schools of any State, Territory, county, or city, or to schools herein or hereafter specifically provided for.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the first portion of this paragraph, relating to the support of the schools. I see that this provides for an architect and a draftsman, which seem to be new officers.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no; they have been in for several years. They were in when the gentleman was a member of the committee.

Mr. HUNTER. If that be true, I also desire to call his attention to the fact that there is no amount fixed in this bill as to what their salaries shall be. It is given in gross in the amount appropriated for the conduct of the schools; and it seems to me there ought to be a statement here as to what each one of these parties shall receive. The report does not show it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think I can turn in a minute to the statistics giving the amount that they have received. I will give it to the gentleman. It is in the testimony of the Secretary of the Interior, and it is not exorbitant in amount.

Mr. HUNTER. It simply includes the pay of an architect, and that is in the general appropriation.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is what the committee does.

Mr. HUNTER. It occurred to me that the salaries of these two new officers should be specified.

Mr. SHERMAN. The draftsman has $1,000 and the architect $1,600.

Mr. HUNTER. Now, it seems that they heretofore were employed in the field, but now it seems that they have been brought into the Office of Indian Affairs, and there conduct their business.

Mr. SHERMAN. The provision, I beg to state to the gentleman, is precisely the same as it has been heretofore. The employment is precisely the same. They are to be employed at the Indian Office. It does not mean that they can not go out of the building. They are to go anywhere the Commissioner sends them.

Mr. HUNTER. I was not aware that their salaries were fixed.

Mr. EVANS. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of inquiring of the gentleman in charge of the bill the effect of this provision in regard to the appropriation for sectarian schools. I do not know whether this is the last one of these appropriations that is to be made under some agreement reached some years ago, in which event it may be too small a matter to direct much attention to, or whether this policy, to which I am always opposed, is to be continued.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the policy which has been declared to be the policy of the Government is followed in the next session of this Congress, there will be no provision for making contracts. Originally the drop was to 80 per cent, and then the theory was to drop to 60, but in fact we dropped to 50, then to 40, and this year to 20, and unless this House at some future day changes its mind as to what shall be the policy of the Government, next year there will be no appropriation in the bill for sectarian schools.

Mr. EVANS. As I understand, that agreement was reached some years ago, and if carried out there will be no appropriation for next year.

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, you could hardly call it an agreement. It was the declared policy of the Government, which is on the statute books to-day. I should say it was decidedly more than an agreement.

Mr. EVANS. If it was a statutory law it was even better than any agreement; and I should like to ask the gentleman if a point of order could be successfully maintained at the next session if there should be an appropriation put in the next appropriation bill? I am, as I said, utterly opposed to all appropriations of public money for any sectarian purpose or for the benefit of any religious sect or church, but if the small sum to be appropriated under this bill, which I believe is only about $80,000, is to wind it up entirely, I shall be extremely gratified—too much so, indeed, to make any complaint about it—if the existing law requires the appropriation in order to end the practice.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should rather the gentleman would not ask me that question. I should not want to be bound by the answer.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support of Indian industrial school at Carlisle, Pa., at not exceeding $167 per annum for each pupil; and for transportation of pupils to and from said school, and for general repairs and improvements, $110,600; for additional to the salary of any military officer of Carlisle Indian School while acting as superintendent of said school, $1,000; in all, $111,600.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman of the committee [Mr. SHERMAN] how many people there are at the Carlisle school to-day?

Mr. SHERMAN. Eight hundred and some odd, in round numbers. I will give it to the gentleman—802.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. How much per capita?

Mr. SHERMAN. That brings the per capita considerably under $167.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. What is the expense of the school?

Mr. SHERMAN. One hundred and eleven thousand dollars covers everything, other than what Colonel Pratt begs from outside and what is contributed or has heretofore been received by the school as legacies from people of means. The school has obtained considerable funds outside of the appropriation from the Government.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I only wish to say in connection with this that I have always, for some ten years or more, objected to the Eastern education of the Western Indians. I do not care to do anything more now than to assure the House, knowing from a practical experience something of what I am talking about, that both the Carlisle school and the Hampton school are mistakes. Indian education and the whole policy of the Indian school system is based on a wrong foundation. You can no more civilize an Indian by teaching him a psalm or a verse from the Scripture than you can a Hottentot or a hog. That is the real truth about the business. As long as you make reading and writing an important part of their education—and I am not complaining of the committee—but as long as you make them the basis of elevating the Indian, you are making a mistake. The Indian has got to work up through the process that all humanity has worked through. He has got to come up through much tribulation and much trial, and whenever you make an Indian school the basis of the Indian's education, you make a mistake. Take, for instance, the many thousands of Indians in Arizona, and it is true, as far as I know, through all the West, and what are you going to do with them when they read and write?

Mr. SHERMAN. Make a citizen of him.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes, make a citizen out of him as soon as he can sing a psalm.

Mr. SHERMAN. Make a Christian citizen of him.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. And all he is able to do is to recite a verse and sing a psalm. There are thieves in the penitentiary that can do both.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know about that. I never associated with them.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Well, you ought to know them; but I say, until you teach the Indian to trade, until you teach him business, until he knows something about his environments, it will be utterly useless to teach him simply to read and write. We all know that the Indian is not going to come out into mechanics; he is not going to be a scientist or a philosopher. The trouble is that Congress has made a mistake, and it has persisted in making it and persisted in continuing it, in this method of education. You are going to work by a wrong process to attain an end that we in the West are more anxious to attain than you are, and that is to ultimately make something out of the Indian. How are you going to do it? You can not do it by spending money on these schools, and can not do it by the charities so liberally contributed to them. You have got to teach the Indian to plant and reap and cultivate the ground and know how to dispose of the product. You must teach him to plant vineyards and to make wine.

A MEMBER. The Indian knows how to drink it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. He knows how to drink it without the least trouble.

Mr. HOPKINS. Why does the gentleman look at Governor DINGLEY when he talks about making wine? [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Because he looks as if he had used the least of it of anyone in the world.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I ask for five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I am on the Indian Committee. I know that its chairman and its members are striving to attain the end we are all working for—the adoption and the maintenance of a correct policy with reference to the Indians. But it is by practical people that this question must be handled ultimately.

Mr. DINGLEY. Your idea is to give to Indian youth an industrial education?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Absolutely. And if you send them away to these Indian schools, you ruin them. The Carlisle school ought to be abolished; the Hampton school ought to be abolished; every school which undertakes to educate Indian children away from their reservations ought to be abolished. I undertake to say—and I would be willing to give a good bond for the performance of what I now speak of—that for one-half the sum carried in this appropriation bill I could in five years do more for the education, the elevation, the sensible management of these crude-minded Indian youth in the lines of industry upon which ultimately they and their descendants must depend than can ever be accomplished under the present policy with unlimited appropriations.

I know how earnestly and sincerely the chairman and the members of the committee have worked to keep down the expenses in the administration of our Indian affairs; I give them due credit for their efforts in this direction. But the trouble is that the Eastern sentimentalists who have undertaken to manage this question know nothing about the character and condition of the Indian. They are thinking all the time about "poor Lo." They are thinking about the Indian as Fenimore Cooper painted him. Gentlemen, do you not know that in the ordinary vernacular of the Indian such a word as fidelity or hope or love has never occurred.

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman's idea is that the good Indians are all dead?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Not that the good Indians are all dead, but that good people, operating under the appropriations of Congress, are raising up Indians to trespass on the rights of everybody else in the world; while Americans are starving to death we are feeding these Indians.

Mr. HOPKINS. You think the control of the Indians should be taken from the New England people?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. No; but I think it was false policy for us ever to make a single treaty with the Indians. With whom do we treat? For what do we treat? Whoever heard of a trustee in a court of equity treating with a ward? One moment you regard the Indian as the ward of the Government and the next you treat with him! And you must regard this treaty as inviolate.
